Notes and Comments.

MRS. CARSE is the first to contribute to Mrs. Baxter's field collection of coins and curios. She sends two coins, one of King George III, date 1775, another bearing the date 1700. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, our vice-president-at-large, sends an Armenian coin. Another contribution, which must have cost the dear woman who sent it a struggle to part with, is a bit of masonry, overlaid with gold, which came from the ruins of the great Temple at Jerusalem. We feel sure that when Mrs. Baxter's appeal gets around to the women of this and other countries, the precious relics which are to carry on white-ribbon missionary work will accumulate rapidly in her hands.

CONCENING the Illinois temperance instruction law, the Chicago superintendent of public schools spoke in commendatory terms at the State Teachers' Association assembled at Springfield. The state superintendent had recently ruled, he said, that the clause requiring local authorities to provide needed facilities and a definite time and place for this branch, included the furnishing of free text-books for this particular study, and further, that the attorney-general had upheld this interpretation. The Central union of Chicago is taking active measures, through its local superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, toward securing thorough enforcement of the law in the city schools.

MISS SLACK sends news of a great woman suffrage victory in England. The general committee of the Men's National Liberal Federation, which met recently in Derby, by a vote of 280 to 220 decided that woman suffrage should be included in the Liberal program. Miss Slack attended this important meeting as one of the delegates from the City of London Liberal Association, about fifteen other ladies being present, including the Countess of Carlisle who, says Miss Slack, has worked hard to bring about this result. Miss Slack herself, we would add, has had no small part in bringing the Women's Liberal Federation up to the point of making this request of the party, and we congratulate her and every woman in England on this notable advance.

THE following information was received by wire late last week from Mr. Crafts, who, with Mrs. Ellis, our superintendent of Christian citizenship and legislation, is vigilantly watching reform interests at the National capital: "The superintendent of the new national library has granted permission for the sale of wine and beer in its restaurants. The national museum is expected to follow. Beer in basement and bacchantes in upper story will create a fine intellectual atmosphere! Evidently the library authorities never look inside the modern books, and so they think wine and beer harmless. The President declines to interfere. A snowstorm of petitions and letters to Congress for pending bill to forbid liquor-selling in all government buildings will block this evil." Let the snowstorm come in such volume, and with such rapidity, that these aggressions of the rum power will be effectually stopped.

AMONG the innovations which characterized the recent civil service examinations in China (held trieninally) was a question the answering of which required some knowledge of the Bible. The question pertained to Noah and the flood, and its introduction is remarkable as an official recognition of Christian history and as admitting the Old Testament at least to a place among the classic literature of China. The missionaries, quick to utilize the opportunities thus presented, hastened to provide the candidates with Christian literature, and thousands of copies of the Bible and of other books and pamphlets in the Chinese language were distributed among the eleven thousand persons who attended the examinations. The event marks an epoch in the history of the empire, which is all the more significant when it is remembered that it is the official and scholastic classes which have been most antagonistic to Christianity in China, and have, it is said, been the chief instigators of missionary massacres and riots.

"UNCLE SAM a hog!" Thus in language polite and in type conspicuous does a liquor journal call attention to the small proportion of profit left to the dealer after paying the required tax on spirits. Of the $1.18 derived from a gallon of whisky, the government collects $1.10. Of the eight cents remaining, the corn, we are told, takes at present prices, five cents, leaving a balance of three cents, out of which must be figured the cost of ingredients used with the corn, including malt and rye, also labor, repairs, cooperage, distribution, etc. In fact, according to the figures given, it would appear that the trade in spirits is decidedly a losing business, and the uninitiated naturally wonder why so many men engage in it and remain in it. If Uncle Sam, as represented by one or the other of the two dominant parties, were not the abject slave of the rum power, he would see that, notwithstanding his large share of the profits, he is really no small loser by the partnership; that even from the standpoint of dollars and cents the legalized liquor traffic does not pay. With liquor papers calling him a hog and prohibition papers pronouncing him a fool, it would seem as if he might make out a good case of lèse-majesté against certain American journalists.

THE interesting discussions in the various state teachers' associations which met last week show that a realization of the immense importance of the public school as a factor in the growth and stability of national life is more and more taking hold of the public mind. Progressive educational methods are among the marked features of present day reform, and it is encouraging to note that their tendency is in the direction of an all-round development of the child, who is, in a very real sense, "father to the man." President Andrews, of Brown University, addressing the Illinois teachers upon "The Public School as an Instrument of Social Advance," emphasized, among other things, the necessity of moral training and the cultivation of the æsthetic faculty, and recommended the furnishing of a high-class hygienic lunch as a wise, economic, social and æsthetic policy. Governor Pingree, in a welcome speech to the teachers of Michigan, pointed out the wisdom of instructing the public school pupils in the duties of citizenship. "Tell your boys all must help govern if they would have good government." "Get your boys ready to bear the burdens of public office," he urged. "Awaken the generation that is growing up to the great questions which will confront them." We think we make no mistake in understanding "generation" to include both male and female, but we would like to suggest to the governor that it makes it a little confusing for the ordinary reader when he uses "boy" as a generic term.

Current Events.

Would Enforce Prohibition.

Republican Anti-Liquor Organization Formed in North Dakota.

ONE hundred prominent republicans of the state met at Fargo, December 29, and organized a campaign club, whose distinctive feature will be that the strict enforcement of the prohibitory law must be declared for by every man who asks the indorsement of the party at the next election.

It is asserted by the projectors of the movement that the open violation of the prohibitory law at the capital, under the very eyes of the state executive officers, has aroused decent republicans of the state to action.

The organization will be extended to every county in the state, and while the chief object will be to select men for state and legislative office who favor enforcement of the law, great attention will be paid to the selection of county attorneys and sheriffs, in order to insure the enforcement of the law in every section of the Commonwealth.

The situation is such, say the leaders, that if there was an election to-morrow, every candidate of pronounced resubmission proclivities would be overwhelmingly defeated.

Temperance.

AT a special election held in Hopewell township, Ohio, to decide the local option question, the drys won by a majority of 80 in a vote of 289.

THE licenses of ten hotels in Lynn, Mass., have been revoked because of Sunday sales. Prosecution was instigated by officers of a local lodge of Good Templars.

FIVE-YEAR-OLD Eric Parnell, of Chicago, is dying of alcoholic poisoning, the result of a dose of whisky administered by Monroe Pointer, a boarder, in the absence of the child's mother.

AT a banquet given on December 20, at Fargo, North Dakota, in honor of the sixty-sixth birthday anniversary of Judge John F. Dillon, LL. D., the guests rose and drank the health of the eminent jurist in clear, cold water

ADVICES from Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, dated December 24, state that two hundred kegs of beer from Portland, Oregon, were recently emptied into the Honolulu harbor by the customs authorities. There being no sale for it, nobody would pay the duty.

IT is stated that there are 235 saloons in Chicago owned by women, the license in each case being taken out by the woman in her own name. These women saloon-keepers pay an aggregate of $137,500 into the treasury in license fees. Most of the women in question have names indicating their foreign extraction.

MAYOR HARRISON, of Chicago, has issued a sweeping order to the effect that every gambling house in the city must close, that all slot machines must go out of business, and that there will be no more boxing bouts or prize fights. The order went into effect December 29, with the promise that it will be rigidly enforced.

ARRANGEMENTS have been quietly made for a general law-enforcement campaign in Chicago, by different organizations, to be inaugurated with the new year. The young people of the church societies have united their forces with the Chicago Young People's Christian Temperance Union and will work through an efficient committee. In Hyde Park the Protective Association continues its work of vigorous prosecution of offenders against the prohibitory law, and in Evanston a similar warfare will be waged.

THE state convention of the Iowa Anti-Saloon League was held at Des Moines, December 28 and 29. About one hundred delegates were in attendance. A pledge was adopted, which all members must sign, making it the rule and practice of the League members to vote for candidates who are opposed to the saloon. Officers were elected as follows: President, L. S. Coffin, Fort Dodge; secretary, Allen Hickey, Des Moines. It was decided to push vigorous state work from now on.

A CORRESPONDENT to The Voice states that within two blocks from either side of the campus of Yale University and the "green" are sixty-six rum shops. All but three or four are ordinary saloons; the others are liquor-selling stores or college clubs which hold regular licenses. They embrace every sort of grog selling, from the sumptuous "café" at Traeger's to the foul dives frequented by women of the baser sort. All these resorts are patronized by students more or less, but many are practically sustained by the college boys' trade.

THE following despatch was sent out from Princeton, N. J., on December 29: "From within the university, instead of from without, the famous Princeton Inn has been dealt, at last, a blow that may prove fatal. The interpretation of a resolution adopted by the board of trustees on Wednesday, of last week, and now made public for the first time, is that Dr. Patton, with his colleagues, are determined to purge Princeton of all taint of intemperance as affecting its undergraduates, even though the renowned grill room be destroyed forever, with all its wealth of association." Later news is to the effect that the now famous grill room has been actually closed, the owners having given orders to that effect on January 1. The resolution passed by the faculty forbade students to frequent any place where liquor was sold or to bring or have it brought to their rooms. As the bar of the inn existed on the patronage of college boys this action practically killed it.

Education.

COL. JOHN LAMBERT, vice-president and manager of the Consolidated Steel and Wire Company, has presented the city of Joliet, Ill., with $30,000 for a library building fund.

THE government, in the state of Neuvo Leon, Mexico, has ordered that the pupils of all official schools shall be taught writing and all manual tasks with the left hand as well as the right.

THE fifty-one members of the freshman class of Beloit College, who were suspended for going out of town to a banquet on Thanksgiving day, have been reinstated. They have all promised sincere loyalty to college law.

MISS ROSE C. SWART, who has been connected with the Normal School at Oshkosh for twenty-six years, has been elected president of the Wisconsin State Teachers' Association, the first time that honor has been accorded a woman.

BY the will of the late Susan S. Clark, of Hartford, Conn., Trinity College is to receive $10,000 for the support of two students, to be nominated by the bishop of the diocese. There were other charitable bequests, aggregating about $25,000.

About Women.

MISS MARGARET LONG, daughter of the Secretary of the Navy, is a medical student at Johns Hopkins University.

MRS. JESSIE C. RODGERS and Dr. Beatrice Pearce, have been appointed members of the board of education of Waukegan, Ill.

GOVERNOR JONES, of Arkansas, has commissioned Miss Emma Whittington an honorary colonel of the reserve militia. This is the first appointment of the kind ever made in that state.

MRS. CORNELIUS V. STEVENSON, an Egyptologist and prominent society woman, of Philadelphia, Penn., started on January 2, for a two months' tour of investigation of the upper Nile. It is understood that she goes as a representative of the University of Pennsylvania.

MRS. MAUD BALLINGTON BOOTH, who has been seriously ill with an affection of the heart, is now pronounced out of immediate danger, but her physician makes the statement that she will never be able to resume active work in the cause to which she had dedicated her life.

GOVERNOR PINGREE, of Michigan, has appointed Mrs. William L. Smith, of Flint, upon the board of guardians of the Industrial Home for Girls at Adrian, to succeed F. W. Wait, of Sturgis, resigned. A majority of the board is now composed of women, and it is the only board in the state controlled by the fair sex.

AN effort is being made by the election commissioners of Cleveland, O., to secure the repeal of the law allowing women to vote on school questions. The ground of this action is the fact that so few take the trouble to register and vote.

At Home.

THOMAS A. EDISON, Jr., son of the noted inventor, claims to have succeeded in photographing thought.

THE will of the late Charles Contoit, of New York, leaves $1,500,000 to charitable and educational institutions.

THE forty-one offices of the Frankfort Lottery, scattered all over Louisville, Ky., were closed on January 1, for the first time in twenty-five years. The lottery is closed for good.

A PRIMARY election bill, prepared for submission to the Maryland legislature, provides for compulsory primaries under the law, with the safeguards of a general election, and has a provision for the choice of primary election officials from lists to be submitted by the party organization.

A NEW organization to be known as the Workingman's Political Club has been launched in Chicago. The object of the club is to study political and economic questions and to educate the workingmen of the city to the importance of attendance on caucuses and primaries, so that they may become a power in politics.

THE report of the monetary commission, containing the plan of currency reform proposed by it, together with a full discussion of the subject and a mass of statistics and other information, has been sent out by the executive committee of the Indianapolis convention. It declares emphatically in favor of the gold standard.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY has signed the bill prohibiting pelagic sealing by Americans. This law also prohibits the importation, under heavy penalties, of all sealskins taken in the open sea, whether green or dressed, and whether they come from Canada or any other country. The refusal, therefore, of Great Britain and Canada to enter into an agreement with the United States to prohibit pelagic sealing, is of less importance, as this country was the principal market for damaged and defective sealskins.

A PHILANTHROPICAL corporation, headed by the secretary of the New York Stock Exchange and indorsed by John Wanamaker, Mrs. Ballington Booth, N. S. Roseman, manager of the Hebrew charity fund, of New York, and Wm. R. Sessions, secretary of the Massachusetts state board of agriculture, has been formed for the purpose of reclaiming the abandoned farms of New England and populating them with material drawn from the crowded cities. Missionary work will be begun in the large cities, principally New York and Brooklyn, and the assistance of all organizations interested in bettering the condition of society will be invoked.

Abroad.

THE Right Honorable William E. Gladstone celebrated his eighty-eighth birthday on December 29.

THE representatives of the powers have refused to permit the Turkish government to replace 4,500 time-expired troops on the island of Crete.

DESPATCHES from Bombay, India, state that there has been a fresh outbreak of plague, especially in the Mandvie district, where the inhabitants are seeking safety in flight. The total plague returns from Bombay up to date are 14,257 cases and 11,882 deaths.

WEYLER, former Captain General of Cuba, drew up a memorial to the Queen Regent of Spain, in which he assailed President McKinley in connection with his message to Congress, failing, however, to secure any signatures thereto. Despatches from Madrid, dated December 30, state that Weyler is under arrest and that the government has seized the entire issues of three newspapers and instituted proceedings against the editors for publishing the memorial. This indicates a determination to forestall any diplomatic action on the part of the United States.

The Falling Snow.

BY CHARLES H. DORRIS.

LIKE the footfall of an angel
Comes the snow;
Like the gleaming of their white wings
Is its glow.
'Tis the Father's benediction
On the bare and frozen ground;
'Tis a gift unto His children
Everywhere the world around.

Like a thought divinely tender
Is the snow,
From the mind of One above, to Us below.
How it thrills our hearts with longing
That our souls be pure and white;
That our lives reflect the brightness
Of God's perfect holy light!

May our lives have more than beauty
Of the snow;
Like the flakes, so may we shelter
Ones below.
May God's love so warm and melt us
That our lives toward the sea,
May bear blessing and fruition—
Flow into eternity!

Michael James.

In Four Chapters.

BY MAX JOHANN, M. D.

CHAPTER I.

HE came upon our field of vision three years ago. I had called Margaret to a window to look at Gretchen and Karl, our ten-year-old daughter and her younger brother. They were panting and perspiring, working in exhaustive child fashion in a little patch of garden ground which I had given them for their very own.

"See," said Margaret, "we are not the only spectators," and pointed to the shabby, undersized figure of a man who was watching the children from the street side of our low garden fence. He seemed to be an acquaintance of Karl's, for that practical young democrat looking up, with his foot on his miniature spade, called out, "Hello, Michael James!"

"Faith, lad, ef ye had a tool bigger nur a tayspoon I'd come over an' give ye a lift."

"O, will you though!" shouted Karl, "I can get you a spade big enough for a man."

The good-natured little Irishman, without noticing Karl's uncomplimentary emphasis, jumped over the fence and carefully settling his high tin dinner-pail under a shrub, listened respectfully to Gretchen's affable but not very lucid instructions.

"We want it made soft way down deep," she said, "but we can't get our spade in—only so far," measuring about two inches on her little rake, "and it won't come straight along the edges, either."

He took off his coat when he saw Karl coming with the "man's spade" dragging behind him, and, having laid it carefully by the side of his dinner-pail, began to "dig way down deep" in a hasty, nervous way, but with so little apparent outlay of strength that the children, Karl especially, were lost in admiration.

"Now, me b'y, bring me a bit 'o twine," said he presently, "an' I'll make yez a sthraight border afoore the two o' yez togither kin say a Pater."

They worked together for half an hour as merrily as three children, Margaret and I an amused and interested audience meanwhile, yet keeping ourselves well out of their sight. We were perhaps a little apprehensive, alert to the fact that our children's circle of acquaintance was daily widening. The attire of this new claimant of recognition indicated a social position not of the uppermost stratum. His coat to be sure was under the bush, but we guessed that it was not of the latest cut from the fact that his blue checked shirt, though clean, was badly patched. The additions laid in upon the original background, however, were ingenious as to contour and arrangement, if not artistic, the two sleeves presenting striking contrasts of color and material. But there was a merry insouciance in his blue eyes and rollicking extravagance of muscular action in his movements which showed that he wasted no nerve force upon problems of social geology.

As he was leaving, the grateful Gretchen, with her own peculiar grace and kindliness of manner, took from the cherished half-dozen verbenas awaiting her transplanting hand the reddest and gayest one and, wrapping the little pot in smooth paper, presented it to him "for your little girl," she said. He refused it awkwardly but looked wistful; whereupon Karl, in familiar boy fashion, took off the cup from the top of the dinner-pail and fitted the tiny pot into the uncovered cavity.

"No, no, I'll not take yer little posies from yez," he was protesting, when the mother, stepping out of her peeping place, thanked him for his services, insisted upon his keeping Gretchen's gift, and, selecting a pot of some fragrant favorite from her own collection, pressed it also into his hand. The gifts, with her indorsement, seemed to delight him.

"Thank ye kindly ma'am," he said, clumsily touching his shabby hat, "Katie sets great sthore by the like o' these."

"Is Katie your little girl?"

"No, ma'am, Katie's me wife an' Mamie's me little gurrul. Good day to ye, ma'am,"—he was on the other side of the fence with his face toward home but he turned back to add, "an' Jamesie's me little b'y. He's but a baby yet, ma'am, but a mighty fine b'y is Jamesie."

"Why, papa, you and mamma never see anything," exclaimed Karl when I asked him for a history of this new acquaintance of his. "Michael James goes past here with that dinner-pail every morning and back again every night. Most always Katie and Mamie come to meet him at night and Mamie carries little Jamesie in her arms; but when she meets Michael James they change off and she takes the dinner-pail and he takes Jamesie. I don't think much of that Mamie, though. She's a very jealous girl. Once when Michael James kissed Jamesie and forgot to kiss her she hollered awful."

"What did Michael James do, then?" asked Gretchen.

"Oh, he babied her; kissed her over and over until she laughed harder than she had cried!"

A few days afterward I overheard Karl telling his sister that he believed his papa had fallen in love with Michael James. I suppose he referred to the fact that I had engaged Michael James to dig my garden after working hours, and that I had developed a fondness for holding conversation with the quaint little Irishman.

"It keeps the pot a bilin' an' it helps us to put by a mite forninst the rainy day," he said to me once, with a glad twinkle of his eye, as he pocketed his pay. He liked to talk but his tongue never wagged at my expense except when recounting the talents or virtues of some member of his little family. Then he always dropped his spade or rake, set his arms akimbo and his head on one side and made a business of discoursing.

"It's my Mamie," he would say, "that has the head for the larnin'. She's on'y a wee chip of a gurrul, as ye kin see, sir, but she's a fine scholar, is Mamie. She kin rade beautiful an' she knows the whole o' the mooltiplication table, an' I—I'm thinkin' sir, it 'ud be a good thing for annybody to know that same."

Then again, "Ye'd be surprised, sir, at the cuteness o' little Jamesie; he knows iverything, does that purty little craythur! Sure whin he was jist after a month old he knowed ivery wan o' the family, sir, includin' the goat an' owld Jack, the dog, an' he'd open thim shinin' little eyes an' jist wink at us—he would that, sir. Barrin' the walkin' an' the talkin', Jamesie's as forrud as manny o' thim big bugs's younguns is at three year old an' moore. I'm thinkin' sir, it's behind the desk Jamesie'll be when he's growed—he's that cunnin'."

He had been working for me off and on for more than a month, stopping generally on his way home from his regular day's work to put in his two hour's overtime for me. Coming into the garden one evening, he set down by the side of his dinner-pail an old basket whose lid was tied down with a stout twine. Karl was not long in discovering that the basket was the source of certain sounds unusual on our little forty-rod farm, and of course insisted upon pursuing his investigations to a sight acquaintance. Michael James was nothing loath to gratify him, and displayed to our gaze two little pigs. I can never forget his look as, with hands in pockets and head on one side, he stepped back to survey those pigs. There was in it the appreciation of a connoisseur in pigs, and gratified pride in their possession, mingled with a little anxiety lest their numerous fine points should not be apparent to our untrained perception.

"They're a burruthday prisent for Katie ma'am," addressing my wife as one presumably in sympathy with his sentiment. "To-day's the 30th and the 30th is her burruthday. She's kind hearted, is Katie, ma'am, and she's fond o' the dumb bastes."

"Why Michael James," cried Karl with wide open eyes, "Katie's birthday was the 30th of last month and you took her a pot of some kind of a flower!"

"Yes, Mr. McGee," said Gretchen, kindly endeavoring to refresh his memory—"don't you remember, you gave her a beautiful scarlet geranium?"

"No matter how manny times it coomes," said Michael James, ignoring the children and still addressing Margaret,—"the 30th, that's Katie's burruthday. A burruthday prisent is to say ye're glad a body was born—is it not ma'am? And sure I'm glad o' Katie the year round; an' if the 30th of the month kem ivery wake—indade ma'am if ivery day o' the year was the 30th—it 'ud not find me wantin' in the kind feelin', ma'am, if it did in the purrus" [purse].

In telling me one afternoon of his narrow escape from a falling piece of timber while at work in the morning he said:

"Sure Katie must ha' been sayin' a prayer for me jist that minyut ur the lane owld gintlemin wid the scythe 'ud 'a' cut me off, sure."

We got to be well acquainted with his little trio. They often came to escort him home and if they arrived a little before Michael James was ready to go, Gretchen or her mother would give them a seat where they could watch him at his work. Katie was a good-looking little Irishwoman with a smiling face, a fresh complexion and the abundant dark brown hair peculiar to her race.

Her suits were not tailor-made, nor were those of her children fashioned in the latest prevailing style, still it was in evidence that good taste was lavishly displayed at the washboard. But contentment clothed the little family like a garment rare in pattern and unexceptionable in style.

We endeavor, the Frau and I, to keep in touch with current literature, but I find that our tongues move most glibly to the old rhymes and maxims of our childhood. Margaret said one evening as we smilingly watched the quartet out of the gate and out of sight:

"'Tis not in titles nor in rank,
'Tis not in wealth like London Bank,
To make us truly blest."

All that summer we watched their coming and going, a family seemingly without a skeleton in charge. One day there was a flutter of glad excitement among them, caused, we ascertained, by their having just made the last payment upon their little—cottage, I must call it, because it was kept so neat and trim, though in less careful hands it would have been a shanty. "It's naythur commodious nur illigant, sir," said Michael James, trying not to look proud and failing completely, "but it's a nate shilter for us now, an' very like we'll have a betther one afoore Mamie an' little Jamesie grows to be 'shamed o' this." A moment after, when he thought there were none but his own to witness, he tossed up his baby in an ecstasy and shouted: "Yer daddy's a freeholder now fur sure! D'ye mind that, Jamesie, d'ye mind that?" then glancing quickly round to reassure himself that they were alone, he planted an awkard kiss that blossomed instantly on Katie's cheek.

"No good thing," is Faith's most decisive reply;

Greeting of the National Reform Bureau to the World's W. C. T. U. Convention at Toronto.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS, PH. D.

[This interesting address has been crowded out week after week, but we feel sure our readers will agree with us that it is better to give it to them late than never.—EDS.]

I BRING you the greeting of another international "do-everything" society, which believes, as you do, that the rectification of society is not to be accomplished by industrial or legislative changes only, not even by the moral change of individual conversions alone, but by all these combined as "departments" of one comprehensive reform, the Christianizing of society, to which the unparalleled perils and opportunities of our day summon us with clarion call. The Reform Bureau is the little brother, or the child, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union; but I do not wish the Bureau to be considered too near of kin to propose marriage to the Union after you have secured the suffrage. Then I hope to see the Woman's Christian Temperance Union broaden into the Christian Reform Union; for the men need such an organization as yours, and the Union needs a masculine element, and the world needs a world-wide movement of men and women. You have already outgrown the one-idea reform policy represented by the word "Temperance" in your name. You have been led in your pursuit of temperance into all other true reforms which are but entwining branches of one tree whose trunk is Christianity. You are already a Woman's Christian Reform Union, and the word "Woman" may well go when that word no longer stands for a distinction in civil rights.

When the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has evolved the Christian Reform Union, another stage will lead to the absorption of the Christian Reform Union itself in the church, which in the twentieth century I have no doubt will adopt moral reforms as a part of church work, as one hundred years, after much agitation, it took up the previously neglected work of foreign missions. The church of the twentieth century will bring up its main line to the point its brave skirmishers occupied in this century, and become a combination of Y. M. C. A. and W. C. T. U., with a central institutional building for both men and women in every town and forty departments of applied Christianity. This is the goal, but what is the first forward step toward it? In answer I suggest to the W. C. T. U. as the world's best organized reform, an extension movement; namely, the devotion of one of the regular weekly meetings in every month to a Christian Reform Federation, to which all other Christian reform organizations in the city or village shall be invited, not as visitors, but as equal participants, the presidents of the coöperating societies presiding in turn, the two objects being "study of reforms," "union of forces," which should become the reform watchwords of the hour. The first need in the reform world is study as the only adequate basis for union and action. There is almost every month a particular week or a special day when some reform topic is particularly appropriate, and the combination of these makes a sociological year of studies by which all the Christian citizenship enthusiasm of the young people's societies and the maturer energies of older reforms should be made more intelligent and more coöperative.

The third Thursday of January is the World's day of prayer for colleges, suggesting the consideration of "The Relation of Education to Morals and Reforms" for a meeting on or near that day, with the study of the problem before and after, during the whole month, in leisure moments, by aid of pocket leaflets. On February 22, Washington's birthday, or some near day, let the most serious problem of patriotism, municipal reform, be the theme, in preparation for spring elections. On March 17, St. Patrick's day, let immigration be studied, and for the whole month, as in every other case. April's first two Sabbaths bound the World's week of prayer for the Sabbath, selected to head off the summer flood of Sabbath breaking. There should be study on our part in its defense as well as prayer for divine aid. May 1, being the World's labor day, when it is the custom to have great labor demonstrations, suggests a Christian conference of capital and labor, such as Ohio Congregationalists have held with good results under lead of Dr. Washington Gladden, of Columbus. June, the wedding month, is the time—let it be the first week—to study marriage and divorce. July 4, calls for the new and old celebration by thoughtful discussions of such national issues as ballot reform, civil service and international peace. August, the devil's harvest month, suggests a study at the very opening, of amusements with special reference to purity. September, when county fairs become schools of gambling, if not prevented, suggests that theme for the opening week. October's last Sabbath having long been "Prison Sunday" makes the study of the prevention and punishment of crime the suitable theme for that day and month. November's fourth Sabbath having been set apart as World's Temperance Sunday by the London Sunday School Union, the International Sunday School Association and numerous conferences and assemblies in many lands, should be devoted (with the whole month as usual) to this great reform. And holiday charities suggest for the middle week of December, by way of preparation, the study of the new and true charity.

Even ten minutes a day, one hour per week, four hours per month, devoted to these twelve leading themes of reform and citizenship would make every participant, whether studying socially or singly, more intelligent, and so more efficient in reform work. Whether "union of forces" be realized or not, let us, in this age, when every reform problem is complicated and difficult, heed the divine call, "Study to show thyself approved of God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

Let not these monthly studies end in talk, but let the study of each topic lead to at least one thing done by way of application. For instance in January, let the teaching of temperance in the schools and the use of the Lord's prayer receive practical attention. In February let preprimaries be held that the forces of righteousness may not be worsted for want of a plan. In March let Sabbath observance literature in foreign tongues be given to resident immigrants. In April let the Union Sabbath Defense Committee be organized. In May let child labor laws be looked after especially. In June let better divorce laws be petitioned for. In July let better celebrations of the "Fourth" be secured. In August let corrupt amusements be displaced be purer ones. In September let committees see that county fairs do not promote either gambling or impurity. In October let local jails be visited and the herding of criminals in idleness be prevented, if possible. In November let a pledge campaign be carried out publicly and personally. In December let Christmas celebrations be so planned that children shall think more of what they will give than what they will get.

In many young people's conventions this program has been heartily received as the basis of Christian citizenship work. It is equally appropriate for the W. C. T. U., the Y. M. C. A. and for reform federations generally. If we can not yet federate to act, let us at least federate to study; or in any case, socially or singly, let us study. No one who is made to see the evils of our time, and that they are as purely preventable as the plague, can long avoid action and united action.

Woman Suffrage in New Zealand.

Interview with the W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Franchise.

BY REPORTER.

NOW that New Zealand women have the right of franchise, the civilized world will take a far livelier interest in the sayings and doings of New Zealanders. How far this victory is due to the patient, unwearied effort of one woman but few realize, and fewer still have any conception of the vast amount of work done by that one year after year. Mrs. Sheppard is the wife of a gentleman well known to Canterbury residents for years past. Seen in her pretty and pleasantly situated house at Riccarton (one of the suburbs of Christchurch), it is somewhat difficult to realize that this graceful, tastefully attired woman, who possesses such rare tact as a hostess, can be the one who has had so much to do with political tactics during the past six years. She is essentially a womanly woman, taking a practical interest in music and art, and is also quite an authority among her friends in matters pertaining to health and sick nursing.

Talking one day over the well appointed luncheon table, I asked Mrs. Sheppard to give me an outline of the history of this great movement, and here in brief is what she said:

"Woman's franchise was first seriously mooted in the New Zealand House of Representatives in 1879. In the qualification of electors an amendment was carried affirming the principle of woman suffrage. This was subsequently thrown out. In 1880 Dr. Wallis, member for Auckland, introduced a bill for extending the franchise to women. This was read a first time only. In 1887 Sir Julius Vogel introduced a woman suffrage bill, which passed its second reading by 41 to 22, and was referred to committee. Unfortunately for the measure, the Stout-Vogel government went out shortly afterward. In 1888 the W. C. T. U. sent up a petition signed by the executive, asking for such an amendment in the interpretation clauses of the electoral bill as would admit women to the franchise. Sir John Hall undertook to present it to Parliament. Owing, however, to press of work during the session, the bill was not brought forward. At the next session Sir John Hall, at the request of the W. C. T. U., promised to endeavor to introduce an amendment in the electoral bill. But so many things of greater importance (?) crowded the order paper, that the session closed without the amendment having a chance to be heard. At the 1890 session Sir John Hall succeeded in carrying by a large majority the following resolution: 'That the right of voting for members of Parliament be extended to women.'

"At this general election members were asked to express their opinion as to the advisability or otherwise, of granting a vote to women, and a large majority of those returned declared themselves as favorable to such a measure. In 1891 a petition circulated by the W. C. T. U., and signed by 10,000 adult women, was presented to the House and to the Legislative Council. Sir John Hall also introduced the Female Suffrage Bill, and in spite of opposition, carried it successfully through its various stages. It was during this session that the episode of the impromptu petition from the ladies' gallery occurred. One evening some of our opponents had been declaring that women did not want the franchise. Mrs. Ballance at once circulated a memorial asking for the vote throughout the ladies gallery. This was signed by those present, some sixty in number, and at once forwarded to the speaker. When, however, the bill reached the Legislative Council it was lost by 17 to 15, the two Maori members voting against us. Another petition was prepared and circulated throughout the colony, and when presented to Parliament contained the names of 20,274 women. You remember that woman suffrage was made a government measure in the 1892 session, and that in the unfortunate disagreement between the lower and upper houses, on the question of electoral rights, was lost sight off."

"What led you to take up the work?"

"Well, I was going to say I took to it naturally. But I really think it was the fact of being hampered and hindered in almost every department of work that led me to so ardently long for a vote. In 1887 I was appointed franchise superintendent of the New Zealand W. C. T. U., and have retained that office through re-election ever since."

"What means have been used to educate women on franchise?"

"The work has been done chiefly through the W. C. T. U. This union is splendidly organized for such work. Each branch has its own local superintendent of franchise, and with these I, as New Zealand superintendent, have corresponded, and the interest has been thereby kept up and spread. I have also corresponded with Australia and America and with the English champions. Our unions have held meetings, have distributed literature bearing on the question, and have also induced various literary and debating societies to discuss the subject. Two years ago Franchise Leagues were started, and these leagues have naturally reached many which the temperance organization could not. The movement has grown with marvelous rapidity. In 1891 the petition presented to Parliament was signed by 10,000 women; in 1892 the number of petitioners was 20,000, and in 1893 over 31,000. These petitions have been the chief factor in educating the mass of the women. Then the strong opposition in some quarters has also greatly helped. The attention of thoughtful men and women has been thereby directed to the question. You know that nearly, if not quite all, the active opposition emanated from the liquor party. At the last general election every candidate was questioned as to his views on the subject, and the reply given by each was recorded."

"What do you imagine will be the general effect of the enfranchisement of women?"

"The elevating of both women and politics."

"Do you think men will be less deferential to women than formerly?"

"My experience within the last few days," said Mrs. Sheppard, with a merry twinkle in her eyes, "is that men are much more deferential to a woman with a vote than to one without it. Commonly, the deference paid to women in the past has been a sort of patronizing condescension. Now men will respect a woman as an equal."

"Do you consider that women are as a whole conservative in their politics?"

"It is quite amusing to hear Conservatives prophesying that all women will be Conservative, and on the other hand Liberals assuring us that all women are Liberals. I firmly believe the balance of power will be much the same as heretofore."

"Do you believe the best class of women will use the vote?"

"The true woman, the most womanly one, will be most anxious to use her power. True mothers especially, will value their vote for their children's sake, as they will thereby be better able to shield them from temptations when beyond immediate parental control."

"Will our victory here in New Zealand aid the struggle in other countries?"

"Most decidedly. Listen to what an American lady writing me from Melbourne says, 'Your long, patient, faithful struggle is finally rewarded, which means so much not for you and the women of New Zealand only, but for women everywhere on the face of the globe. It gives promise of better times for women, not only in so called Christian countries, but in India and the harems of the East. Right glad am I and proud of New Zealand.'"

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

V. D. DAVID, Tamil evangelist, has concluded his fourth week in Willard Hall. From the first day of his coming until the last, the Hall was crowded.

Brother David is not to speak in any public place this week, beginning December 27, but if the Lord leads, will come to us Monday, January 3, and continue preaching the Word in Willard Hall. At the close of the fourth week he said, "I never saw such a place as this room. I have been in other places two weeks, three have been the limit, but here at the end of four weeks I can hardly get away. I seem to be glued here."

Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, D. D., pastor of La Salle Avenue Baptist church, takes the noon meetings this week. A good audience greeted him in his introductory service. He emphasized the "life abundant" with words of wondrous power. On every side we heard, "What a wonderful message we have had to-day. We are so glad our Father sent Dr. Henry to Willard Hall."

. . . . . .

Passing down the aisle one day on my way to the platform a few minutes before the noon hour, I noticed a fine looking man on one of the front seats. I held out my hand saying, "Are you a stranger?" "I am. What do you have here? prayer-meeting, or what?" "We have gospel meetings here at the noon hour. The Hindu evangelist is to speak to-day. Will you remain with us?" "I will." "Are you one of the workers in this good cause?" "Well, not exactly. I am a sort of a free thinker." "The best freedom I know is freedom in Christ," I replied, as I hastened to open the meeting.

He remained until 1:30, giving most earnest attention to every part of the service. My thought seemed to anchor in God for that soul, and as he left before the meeting closed, I feared I should not see him again.

At two o'clock, however, as I was passing out he met me with extended hand. "Did you enjoy the service?" I asked. "I was delighted." "Your name, please?" "Capt. ———, I am a military man. I have given a portion of my body for my country several times; do not know why I am spared." "Your mission is not fulfilled, my brother. God wants your heart and service. Come in with us again." "I will." And he passed on to a business engagement.

For a Pure Home Life.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In a recent sermon, Dr. Talmage says it seems to him "high time that pulpit, platform and printing press speak out against the impurities of modern society," an opinion that is held by many, who wonder why these are so slow to grapple with an evil so deadly in its effects. But, while I would not have less, but more said upon this sin of society, it seems to me high time that pulpit, printing press and reform organizations like our own, should speak out against the impurities of the fountain, which sends forth that foul social stream, and that fountain is the home-life, primarily the marital life. Social life is but an index of individual and family life.

We need our department of purity in literature and art, but there are grave reasons why we should have a department of "purity in the wedded state," or "purity and heredity."

Some may fear the opposition such a departure might arouse, but every advanced step has been taken in the face of ridicule or denunciation. We are banded together to witness to dimly seen, or unpopular, yet divine truth. It is not ours to wait for public sentiment, but to make it. "Whoso speaketh the truth showeth forth righteousness," is the declaration of God's word, given with no restrictions as to how far in the van it must be held up.

Those who are in positions to know, assert that impurity is rapidly increasing in all parts of our land, and so keen an observer as Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, declares that one profound remedy for the evil is to exalt the sacredness of marriage, since even in many Christian homes parents speak of marriage as something between a crime and a joke, which is very true. These parents so speak, no doubt, because their own marital relations are, in varying degrees, criminal; and this explains in part the inability of so many parents to talk to their children on subjects concerning which they most need instruction, without which their lives may be blighted both for time and eternity. To secure greater reverence for marriage, a higher standard of purity must be held aloft and made to govern the wedded life. The very conception of marriage, in the minds of a multitude, is actually that of prostitution sanctioned by law. One of the best physicians and educators in the west,—dean of a well known medical college—affirms that here is the secret source of the terrible tide of impurity that threatens to destroy our nation, as it did ancient Greece and Rome. The situation calls loudly for reform, and the public sufficiently recognizes the gravity of present conditions to be such as to well sustain forward steps.

No lectures have been given a more respectful hearing, or more deeply affected the spiritual life of the communities, than those of a worker who, for five months in Iowa, devoted a large part of her time to presenting God's standard of purity for the heads of the home, and more requests have come for the continuance of such educative efforts than in behalf of any other. Nor is there time to lose, since, as a gentleman mentioned speaker, "It will take about four generations, under such teaching, to reach the standard held before us by Mrs. ——, nevertheless it is the right one." A short time ago the writer was called to give her first purity talk to an audience of men, in a town not more moral than the average, and where no special purity meetings had been held. The oftener discussed phases of the purity problem were used as steps leading up to that keystone of the purity arch, namely, chastity in the wedded life. The manner in which the message was received will linger long in memory; there were no smiles nor side-glances, only the most reverent listening; and at the close some quiet "thank yous" for the words spoken.

The chance reports of next day comments in stores and on the street were in perfect harmony with the spirit manifest in the meeting. Please pardon the personal allusion, made simply to prove the receptive condition of the public mind. An indelicate or abrupt way of presenting such truths will not, and should not, be tolerated; but I believe one who is filled with a sense of the solemnity of the subject, and clothes the thoughts in chaste vocal vestments, may present the entire range of purity topics to almost any audience without fear of unkind criticism. And I venture to hope that at our next National Convention a department resolution may make it clear that our high standard of morals applies to those who have entered into life's most sacred relations, as well as to those without.

"Hast thou whispered truth? Whisper no longer.
Speak it in trumpet tones, louder and stronger!"

Women and Birds.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—The W. C. T. U. has a department of mercy among its many well organized lines of work, and surely the prevailing fashion in hat decoration should stimulate the superintendents to renewed and untiring efforts.

The extravagant use of stuffed birds and aigrettes this winter, calls attention to the fact that neither legal enactments nor the effort to enlighten public sentiment has yet prevailed against the vanity of women.

This wholesale use of birds and plumage has become such a menace, not only to the existence of certain rare and beautiful species, but to the agricultural interests of the country, that it behooves every woman to discountenance the wanton destruction of these most beautiful of wild creatures, and refuse to wear, what is at best, a barbarous adornment. Science and humanity have both repeatedly called attention to the effects which follow a fashion which destroys millions of birds each year. Our song birds have greatly decreased in numbers, while the beautiful Egrets, the Snowy Herons and the graceful Terns, once so abundant, have become almost extinct.

The destruction of our native birds gives rise to a multiplication of insect pests, which has a very direct and disastrous effect upon the farming interests of the country. The statements made by the agricultural department of the United States and the various state boards, are startling in the story they tell of the results that follow on the track of fashion and the bird hunter. The egret of our southern states is now almost exterminated, and the hunters this winter follow it to its last retreat on the South American coast. Why? Because our women consider the aigrette, the nuptial plumage of the egret, a dainty decoration for their hats. Not long since the writer saw a hat worn by a New York belle that bore upon it three terns and enough egret plumes to adorn two birds. The remedy for this slaughter of the innocents lies solely with the intelligence, the humanity of woman. Let her refuse to decorate herself with their feathered plumage and the destruction will cease.

In view of the facts that the use of ostrich plumes and the plumage of domesticated fowls (including pigeons) does not involve this alarming loss of bird life, and that we have innumerable dainty devices suitable for ornaments, it is plainly seen that there is no necessity for a custom that has neither fitness nor beauty to commend it.

The Committee of Fifty Again.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—My eye has just happened to fall upon a letter from Mrs. Mary E. Teats, of San Diego, Cal., printed in the issue of your paper for November 4, in which she makes the statement that "The Committee of Fifty" recommend the mulct law of Iowa as the best solution of the liquor problem. I beg that you will do the committee the justice to correct this statement, for which there is no foundation in fact. My own opinion of the mulct law, so far as I regarded it as proper to express an opinion in a report which was restricted to a statement of facts, was given in the report of the committee, entitled, "The Liquor Problem in its Legislative Aspects," in the following words:

"There seems to be, from a theoretical point of view, a certain inconsistency in pretending that a law is uniform in its operation and at the same time providing for the suspension of penalty upon payment of pecuniary consideration. There is, moreover, an element of governmental weakness in the practical surrender of the legislature, which represents the people of the whole state, to the counties which have been so long in rebellion. The government virtually, by this act, says to the governed: If you do not like our laws and will only persist long enough in resistance to them, we will not indeed repeal them to please you, but we will undertake to defend you against prosecution for their violation. The same principle applied to other social evils, such as gambling, for instance, would be equally justifiable, and the law appears to have established a dangerous precedent."

I am, very truly yours,

WHY should we talk of the futility of life and lose ourselves in vain regrets, as if dreams and mere personal longings were all we had to live for? Life is futile to those only who seek for its fruits in self-gratification. To those who see in it an ever-enduring conflict for others, it is ever fresh and full, a joy and an inspiration, and a hope.—T. P. O'Connor.

Local Union.

A Study in Beginnings.

BACK of the W. C. T. U. stands the Crusade, and back of the Crusade stands four factors which may be said to have acted as immediate human causes in producing that mighty outburst of power.

First. The first factor is a multiform one and may be said to embrace all the temperance efforts which preceded the Crusade. These were, 1. The publication, in 1785, by Dr. Benjamin Rush, of his pamphlet, entitled, "The Effects of Ardent Spirits on the Human Mind and Body." 2. The organization, in various states, of "Societies for the Suppression of Intemperance." 3. "On the thirteenth day of February, 1826, the American Society for the Promotion of Temperance was organized. In the same year the National Philanthropist was started in Boston. Its motto was, 'Temperate drinking is the downhill road to intemperance.'" 4. In 1838 the Commonwealth of Massachusetts adopted the famous fifteen gallon law, which greatly injured the retail traffic. In many other states similar laws were executed. 5. "On the evening of the sixteenth day of April, 1840, six inebriates, said to have been a club organized for 'social tippling,' met in Chase's Tavern, in the city of Baltimore. A distinguished lecturer on temperance was to speak in the city that night, and the club sent a committee to hear the lecture and report to the club. The report of the committee was favorable. . . . They reorganized the tippling club into the Washington Society, and took the pledge of total abstinence. They kept the pledge, became apostles of its principles, and the movement spread over all the land. In a few years 600,000 drunkards had been reformed, of whom, however, all but 150,000 returned to their cups." 6. Various other church temperance societies. 7. The Sons of Temperance, organized in 1842, to continue the work of the Washingtonians. 8. Neal Dow and his famous Maine Law, which was signed by the governor of Maine on June 2, 1851. The prohibition sentiment aroused by the success of that law spread until at one time, all the six New England states were under prohibitory law. 9. The Good Templars, organized in 1854, which differed from the Sons of Temperance in admitting women to its membership.

Second. One woman, in the town of Auburn, N. Y., Mrs. Delecta Lewis, stood as a prophecy of the Crusade about the time of the Washingtonian movement. Her son writes: "Against the sale and use of liquor at this time there was indeed, no public sentiment. In view of the danger at hand, Mrs. Lewis and some of the neighbors held many and anxious consultations. It became clear to them that there was nothing to hope save in the united action of women. They made their grief and duty a subject of meditation and prayer. It was determined to visit the men who sold the liquor, to set before them the evils to which this traffic was leading, and to entreat them to abandon it." This was so faithfully carried out that for long years after, not a drop of liquor was sold in the town.

Third. The son of this woman, Dr. Dio Lewis, a reformer of reformers, was so impressed by the work which had been accomplished in his home town that, after he had begun his career as a public lecturer, he used frequently to tell the story and urge the women to like work. In many places they responded and local crusades broke out. The one first recorded, and the most notable of these was in Dixon, Ill., where in the year 1858, the women of the town went out in as genuine a warfare against the saloon as any of later years.

Fourth. The Civil War acted as a mighty preparative for the Crusade. 1. It had fastened drinking habits more firmly upon the people. 2. It had developed woman's powers as they had never before been developed. What had been impossible, except in isolated instances, before the war, became possible and inevitable for the womanhood of the entire nation after the war was over.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Watchman, what of the night? The watchman said, The morning cometh. Behold, God himself is with us for our captain.—Isa. 21:11, 12; II. Chron. 13:12.

A HAPPY New Year to all our Temple friends. The long, dark night of financial depression which has been resting upon the country for the last five years has without doubt ended with the close of the old year, and as we stand upon the threshold of the new, the rosy dawn of a better day is hastening on its way. The outlook for the "House Beautiful" is better than it has been since its completion in 1892. The largest cash receipts we ever received in one day was December 23, amounting to $600. With the exception of $100 received from Mrs. Anna S. Clarkson, to place the name of our beloved and promoted brother, Mr. Alexander G. Tyng, of Peoria, on the Illinois tablet, the remainder of the $600 was in small amounts, mostly from individuals, a report of which will be given by our financial secretary later. Besides the cash, we received over $1,600 in pledges in Temple Trust Bonds, the receipts for the day being over $2,000.

The day before Christmas over $600 was received, over $300 in cash; the largest amount being $64.50, from the ninth and tenth ward W. C. T. U. of Rochester, N. Y. There was also $300 in Temple Bond pledges. The Monday after Christmas, which brings us up to date, $475 in cash, with the exception of a $100 Temple Trust Bond (which is the same as cash) from Miss Emily Billingsley, Statesville, N. C. She writes: "Sitting under the shadow of a sore bereavement, my thoughts turn to you and your noble effort to free the Temple from debt. I inclose a hundred dollar bond, desiring that my deceased husband's name be inscribed in Willard Hall as near my own as possible. His heart, hand and purse wrought for temperance; he was an active Prohibitionist, upholding me in all W. C. T. U. work. The name of Rev. Amos S. Billingsley, D. D., is worthy of a place in Willard Hall." One hundred dollars of Monday's receipts came from our generous friend, Mrs. Charles Keighley, Vineland, N. J., to place the name of Mrs. Carrie F. Keighley in Willard Hall. This makes $200 Mrs. Keighley has sent this year, beside she pays extra to have the names engraved on the tablet. Mrs. Albion E. Smith, Spring Green, Wis., was another donor to the fund the past week. She writes: "Inclosed please find $60, the remainder due on the $100 we, the children of our mother, pledged to place her name on a tablet. She was a Crusader, and we wish her name to be in Wilard Hall, so that when her grandchildren shall visit Chicago and the Temple and see her name they will remember how firmly she stood for temperance."

We have been greatly disappointed in getting off our fifty cent subscription cards to the unions on account of a new arrangement among the express companies of the city, and we fear we will not be able to get many off before the middle of January. This will greatly delay returns. While Mr. Field has kindly extended his $50,000 pledge to July 1, we hope long before that time we may be able to secure the $120,000 still lacking to complete the $300,000. If we could only secure the interest of all our women to the extent of having them send out four of the cards to friends, the work would soon be accomplished. But alas! there are so many who seem to overlook their privilege as well as their duty in this regard. There is a brave little union of only twenty members at St. Joseph, Mo., the Morris W. C. T. U. Would that every union in the land were like them! They started out to raise $25. They filled twenty cards, six Wheels, had a Temple tea, got subscriptions from friends outside, and this past week sent us a check for $65. At the head of this noble band is a woman full of love and zeal, Mrs. Phœbe J. Lee. She writes: "When I began three months ago I expected to raise $25, but to-day when it is all counted I will have $65, and I will have a happy Christmas. Can't other unions do the same? I hope they will try. We are going to keep right on in the good work."

Is a hal-lu-ci-na-tion.
He dresses in all sorts of clothes;
From furs to calico.
An' that, I know, is true, because
My dad, he says it's so.

His factory, my dad, he says,
Is most tre-mendous size;
But I can't see it, 'cos I've got
Such very little eyes.
There's parts of it in all the world,
Wherever you may go.
And that, I know, is true, because
My dad, he says it's so.

Siegfried.

BY C. L. BOUGHTON.

THE day was sultry and the thermometer rose to 94° as it hung on a swaying branch above his head where he had placed it some minutes before.

Siegfried had passed his final examinations in the Everglade High School, and he now lay beneath a shady elm thinking of the hard lessons he had learned, of his little misbehaviors in the past, and what he meant to do in the future.

He was light-hearted, good-natured, boyish, but by no means thoughtless or careless. His mind wandered from one thing to another until his thoughts were centered on the mythological tale of the strange young man of old whose name he bore.

He slept — and this is the dream he dreamed:

He saw the mighty Siegfried at the ancient forge. He heard the clang of the great hammer as it fell on the anvil.

He watched the skillful hand put the finishing touches on the powerful Belmung.

The scene changed. He found himself in the midst of a large assembly. Again he saw the man of valor with sword poised above the figure of a man, seated on a rock, clad in armor, ancient but well made.

The sword remained but an instant. It fell with the force of a thunderbolt from the hand of Jupiter. The armor burst asunder and blood bathed the mountain side. Ah! where was the boasted armor? where the conceited man who made it?

Siegfried awoke. Drops of cold perspiration stood on his forehead.

What did it all mean? Had he really seen the mighty warrior he had read so much of? Where was he?

He sat upright and looked about him.

He found himself on the bank of the Everglade mill-stream which swept swiftly toward its outlet.

The lofty elm still stretched forth its protecting branches to shade him from the sun's fury.

Siegfried gazed dazedly about him, reiterating his dream time and again with an endeavor to interpret it.

Across the stream and farther down, a dense black smoke rose from the chimney of a large brick building, situated on a rocky elevation not far from the village center. It was the village brewery.

Siegfried was nineteen years old, yet it had never occurred to him that in two more years he, with several others, would have a voice in the village politics. He lay for some time engrossed in deep thought. What did his dream mean? He raised his eyes, and as if divinely directed, they fell on the brewery. What a pitiful sight he saw! Schoolboys stood at the door watching the manufacture of the poison with interest; others carried pails of it to their fathers.

Although the brewery had been there but a short time, its influence was felt sadly. In the back room of the village store stood a large hardwood barrel on end, drained by a faucet at the lower end. The grocer sold more of the contents of this barrel than he did of his staple articles. He had less demand for flour, potatoes, fruit or any garden products. The mill had discharged three men for lack of work. The old gray-haired cobbler was able to carry his now small business alone, and therefore dismissed his assistant. The once thriving town was waning. Factories weakened. Men who were thrown out of employment spent their remaining wages in trying to drown their sorrow in the flowing bowl, and so well did one succeed by walking off the bridge after drinking eight glasses of the cooling beverage, that except for the timely aid of a few high school lads, his sorrows on this earth would have been at an end. Yet—all of these changes were to the interest of the brewery; and how it thrived!

Siegfried noted this and determined that yonder brick building was an armor encasing a conceited boaster. Boaster of the ruin and misery he had brought; of the crimes he had committed and of polluted politics he had made.

"This boaster must be humbled and silenced," vowed Siegfried, "and my hand shall be the first to grasp the Belmung of to-day to accomplish it. But what is this Belmung, where is it to be found and how used?" he soliloquized.

Quickly the answer came, "This sword is the vote of the people, it is to be found at the voting polls and is to be used for Prohibition!"

He rose from beneath the elm with a firm determination. "I am but nineteen and have two years to work for the abolition of this curse. Most of my schoolmates like me, and by explaining the lawlessness, corruptness and baseness of this legalized curse, surely I can persuade them to join me."

He went to work immediately with a persistency that showed his heart was in the cause.

Two years passed as though they had been but two weeks.

Behold now our hero! By the vote of his townsmen he is magistrate of the little city. He holds the edict which is to banish the brewery and the contents of the casks will bathe the rocks, as of old blood bathed the mountain side.

Personal Purity.

THOMAS ALVA EDISON was once asked why he was a total abstainer. He said: "I thought I had a better use for my head." The answer is worth remembering by any young fellow who means to use his brains. A wonderful battery they make. Every morning they take up their work and start us on our daily pleasure or daily duty, if we have not tried this stimulus or that stimulus, not in the plan for which they were made.

The young man who means to do the best possible work his body and mind can do keeps his body and mind pure, as clean from outside filth as Edison keeps his brain. This is what is meant when we are told to keep ourselves as pure as little children are.

The men who are trained for a football match, or a running match, or a boxing match, have to keep their bodies from any stimulus but that which is given by food prepared in the simplest way, so as to suit the most simple appetite.

It is not simply that a man's body must be in good order itself; what is needed is that a man shall be ready and able to govern his body. He shall say, "Go," and his body shall go. He shall say, "Go faster," and his body shall go faster. His will, his power to govern his machinery, depends on his keeping himself pure.—Rev. E. E. Hale in Temperance Ideas.

Recipe for a Good Letter.

BY AMOS R. WELLS.

TO write a good letter, take a handful of grit,
A plenty of time and a little of wit;
Take patience to set it, and stir it all up
With the ladle of energy. Then fill a cup
With kind thoughts and helpful thoughts, merry thoughts too,
With bright words, and wise words and words strong and true.
Mix all these together, and then add for spice
Some good news, some funny news, all news that's nice.
Then seal with a love kiss, and stamp it with care,
Direct to your friend's heart, and, presto, 'tis there.

The Problem of Popularity.

A MORE coquettish word could hardly be found in the English language than this word "popularity." It may mean so many different things according to the point of view—momentary acclaim of the mob, superficial assent or deep and abiding appreciation. Popularity may be the blaze of illumination, showing what is in a person, or it may be a fire kindled around a man devouring him into ashes and oblivion. It may be the King's highway leading straight to the goal of a divine success, or prove a will-o' the-wisp dancing over a treacherous bog. To some natures like Saint Theresa, of Castile, living far from the madding crowd, popularity is as the icy breath of the north to a confirmed invalid, while to others it is as the elixir of life; they would rather be popular than right; and can see no advantage in holding opinions not lustily applauded by the crowd.

Here, as so often, the truth lies between two extremes, the safe middle path showing that popularity, in the sense of appreciation and hearty good-will, is to be earnestly coveted, provided, always, there is no surrender of principle. Business men are quick to recognize the commercial value of popularity, as is seen in the wording of their advertisements; they like to label their goods as "popular," "well-known," "celebrated" or "fashionable," and who of us is not heartily glad whenever sweet words of indorsement are applied to our beloved cause? For the fact is, appreciation puts fresh heart into one, nerves the soul to still nobler efforts, attracts the masses, and is itself a power greatly feared by the foe. By all means, then, let us strive to make our cause as popular as possible everywhere and with all classes of men, always remembering, however, that popularity, like happiness, eludes the grasp of him who seeks it directly, but comes in the train of duty and work well done.

It goes without saying that a cheery, bright manner that springs from a warm heart and a living faith in God, goes far towards winning over a community. A smile is always in order, so is ready tact, and the determination to "keep sweet" under all circumstances. As an artist takes pains to hang his picture in the best possible light, so we do well to emphasize those truths held in common by us and our neighbors, then afterward show them the sweet reasonableness of the new truth we have to offer. While we are all, personally and collectively, convinced of the superlative importance of each one of our many departments, others may not see as we do, hence, the need of the utmost patience, skill and wisdom to bring them up to our level of spiritual vision.

But after all, there is no passport to the sunlit land of popularity, like achievement. Nothing brings success like success. People are impressed, won over, and enlisted for life by what they see can be done and has been done. Poor human nature, according to some occult law, is never quite ready to fall into line, until the battle is half won; it always has been so and always will be; we must therefore continue to look for inspiration to God and the intrinsic merit of our cause, but when the flood-tide of popularity does come, as it surely will, so rapid will be the progress made as to astonish the most sanguine.

Tardy Remembrance.

FROM a recent issue of an Evanston, Ill., paper, we cull the following pertinent paragraph, with the heading, "For His Mother":

Several attempts have been made since the raid on the blind pig to have this paper suppress the name of one of the inmates arrested. The request was made on the ground that the young man asked it for the sake of his mother. This The Press has refused to do, and his name will be found in the list of those arrested. The young man thought of his mother too late. He should have thought of her before. He should have thought of his mother when he was wasting the hours of the days and nights of the best part of the life God has given him, in drinking and carousing in the disreputable blind pigs of Evanston. We don't take much stock in these young men that ride rough shod over their mothers' feelings on their road to the devil, and when they get found out then remember that they have a mother who should be spared the pain of their disgrace.

Not the young man in question alone, but many others, young and old, men and women, seem troubled with this form of defective memory. Indeed, we have sometimes wondered if it be not a special weakness of human nature, a most common form of original sin. We remember our loved ones; oh, yes; we would most indignantly spurn any suggestion that we are unmindful of them; and yet, we think of them too late. The memory does not come in time to keep back the hasty word which rankles long in their hearts; it does not come in time to keep us from doing the thing which most militates against their happiness, nor in time to enable us to do the thing which would most minister to their comfort. It has been after his wife was laid in the grave, that many a man has remembered to give up the tobacco which made her whole life with him a burden. It is after the young girl forever leaves the home that she most commonly remembers how much more she could have done to minister to the happiness of those in that home.

Alas, for these tardy remembrances. Alas, for that tendency in human nature which makes us most unmindful of those for whom we think we are most mindful. If that young man had only remembered his mother at the right time how much misery it might have saved himself as well as her. Before the disgraceful deed is done, before the unkind word is spoken, before the coffin-lid closes over the faces of those we hold dear, then is the time for memory to do its work; afterward, what can it bring but penitence and remorse? The deed can never be undone.

And yet, although we can not by any possibility know how matters are in this particular case, we feel that oftentimes, the mother herself, or the home influence, may be at fault in this tardy remembrance. We have known mothers whose constant injunction to their children, from babyhood, was to the effect that they should let people see what good girls and boys they were. No emphasis was placed upon their being good, but merely upon the impression of goodness they should make upon others. We have known homes in which, for long years, a systematic course of deception was maintained, the son passing for all that was true and upright while, in reality, his life was low and base. As we have searched for causes in these individual cases, we have been forced to feel that the primary cause lay in the fact that the parents themselves failed to remember that doing is infinitely more than seeming; that they failed to establish such a reality of intercourse between their children and themselves as to make it utterly impossible for the child to so deceive the parent. Such a son might easily feel that he had sufficiently shielded his mother if he had kept from the world a knowledge of his guilt. A son brought up to consider being more than seeming would know that the fact of his guilt or innocence would be the only fact his mother would care for in all the universe. If he were guilty it would not matter to her if all the world knew; beside the knowledge of his guilt that would be but a drop in the ocean.

When parents always think of their children at the right time and in the right way, then there will be far greater hope that the children will remember the parents when the fact of memory will do some good in molding their lives into harmony, not alone with their wish, but with the eternal right for which that wish stands.

Falstaff at Princeton.

A SPECIAL dispatch to the Inter Ocean, Chicago, from Princeton, December 23, said:

The board of trustees of the university met here to-day and discussed matters relating to drinking among the under graduates of Princeton. The same firm stand which has always characterized their attitude toward drunkenness among students was again most forcibly shown, and steps were taken which may alleviate the evil.

The words of the reporter bear the common stamp of oblivion to cause. They indicate the popular thought (or lack of it) that drunkenness is disreputable, but that drinking is not, and totally ignore the nature of alcohol. The fine piece of unintentional irony contained in the dispatch suggests the following:

O valiant Falstaff, draw thy sword against drunkenness in Princeton, beastly, sensual, devilish drunkenness and—"alleviate it." Take a "firm stand" and fight manfully, old Falstaff, lay to right and left, striking and stamping in a fine frenzy of indignation against "drunkenness." Expel it from its accustomed haunts, send it in all its imbecility to the mother of the boy, put it in a Washingtonian Home, put it to bed with its boots on—send it to jail even, if necessary, and away from home; anything to get it out of sight, for thou knowest it must be "alleviated." But if thou should'st rush far down the line of oncoming drunkenness, O Falstaff, thou mightest strike down drinking, and thus slay drunkenness before it is born; but good old Falstaff, jolly old Falstaff, thy wit tells thee not to do this; that drinking is a necessary thing, foreordained and predestinated from the foundation of the world, and must not be slain. So have discrimination in thy wrath, and turn thy sword away from the grill room and other like places, where the young do congregate to cultivate personal liberty, patriotism, intellectuality and religion, and expend thy mighty powers in mopping up unsightly filth, and in saying to the drinker, "Thou shalt not spew, and if thou should'st spew we will take a 'firm stand' against thee, and thou wilt have to 'explain thy actions'; and perhaps thou mayest be expelled from these classic halls, unless, perchance, thou art seniors, when the punishment will not be according to thy merits, but according to thy great dignity." Thus endeth the last saying of Falstaff.

ONE of the pleasant incidents of the National Convention was the statement by Mrs. Stevenson that the only surviving relative belonging to Madam Willard's generation, viz., her sister, Miss Sarah B. Hill, now Mrs. Ward Hall, of Churchville, Monroe Co., N. Y., a lady in her eighty-fourth year, had sent a greeting to the Convention. This came in response to Mrs. Stevenson's letter of invitation. "Miss Hill" was well known in Western New York a generation back as one of the most original and capable teachers of her time. She was principal of Clover Street Seminary, Rochester, for a season, also of Gainesville and Riga Academies. She was also preceptress of Columbia Female College in Tennessee, and had the department of mental and moral philosophy in Milwaukee Female College, founded by Miss Katharine Beecher. Mrs. Hall stated in her letter to the Convention that she "signed the pledge in the old schoolhouse when she was but three years of age. Several of the older children were signing, and she resented it that no one invited her, whereupon her father placed her name on the list and she was comforted." From that day to this she has "never touched a drop."

MISS WILLARD says: "No Thanksgiving letter meant so much to me as one from a dear reformed man of years agone in Evanston, who always says that 'God and the women saved him when he was wellnigh hopeless.'" He now writes:

Thanksgiving day is the nineteenth anniversary of my emancipation from the slavery of strong drink and my restoration to manhood, to reason and to the love of all things good and pure. I thank my Heavenly Father for it this day and humbly ask that He will let me enter His kingdom even, if I am but permitted to stand just inside the gate. On that long ago Thanksgiving day my wife and little boys had but a meager lunch; to-day we all sat down to a bountiful dinner in health, in peace, and with our hearts full of love toward God and man.

Miss Willard adds: "How little the great world knows of these hallowed but unwritten histories of our brothers all over this nation, who against a desperate appetite have formed a holy resolution and have kept it in the strength of Divine grace." This is late but too good to be lost.

THE conference number of the Rechabite and Temperance Magazine, the organ of the Independent Order of Rachabites, gives a full report of the "Thirty-seventh High Movable Conference held at Edinburg." Mrs. Blaikie representing the British Women's Temperance Association, delivered an eloquent address of welcome. Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, Mr. J. H. Raper and Dr. F. R. Lees were members of this temperance society. A redwood gavel and a switch of pine needles were sent from Georgia, U. S. A. The gavel handle bore the incription, "C. Backman's tribute to the H. M. C., in fraternal behalf of all Rechabites of North America." The order has more than doubled its membership in the past ten years and now numbers, adults 142,395; juveniles, 81,924.

THE following, issued by the National British Women's Temperance Association, is so suggestive to all temperance organizations, and so applicable to other festive times, and to all times, as well as to Christmas, that we give it here:

FOR A SAFE AND HAPPY CHRISTMAS.

Your earnest attention is invited to the danger in which others may be placed through your mistaken kindness during the approaching season. Postmen, porters, errand-boys, cabmen, and others, will naturally receive Christmas hospitality. The question is, what form shall it take? If you give a glass of beer or spirits to a man at your door, it may be one of many given to him that day, and if he returns home intoxicated or injured by accident through the drink, could you say that you were free from responsibility for the disastrous result, even though you had argued that the one glass from you could do no harm?

But, as a matter of fact, there are among the class referred to, men to whom the offer of a single glass is a cruel temptation; men whose former years were blighted by drink, and who are now fighting bravely to keep that pledge of total abstinence which has been the means of their rescue. The extra fatigue and exposure to cold of the Christmas season make them peculiarly liable to relapse into their old habits.

If you are not giving any active help to the temperance movement, now so widely spreading, you may, at least, refrain from hindering it. By giving some safe refreshment—a cup of warm cocoa, coffee, or tea—you may avoid the risk of "putting a stumbling block or an occasion to fall," in the way of him, "for whom Christ died."

IN answer to a statement on the first page of THE UNION SIGNAL of December 9, to the effect that "so far as we could learn no woman's name was on the program" of the Methodist conference held at Pittsburg, and in answer to our invitation for some of the Advocate editors to explain why this should be so, we are informed by two parties and the printed program that Miss Gertrude Buck, A. M., Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., read a paper on "The Spiritual Rewards of the Higher English Scholarship." We are pleased to note that one sister was heard, and we congratulate her on representing over half of the great M. E. church (to put it mildly). We return thanks for this "explanation," but the question in a modified form still exists in our minds, viz., why in a conference representing a church only one woman should have been heard from in a program lasting six days of three meetings each, crowded full of most interesting and instructive subjects. These were presented and discussed by prominent and learned men, and we do not wish to detract one iota from the value of their presentation, but we submit the question as to whether the value of the conference would not have been greatly increased to the church by a more representative program.

SOME ten years ago Miss Willard sent the documents of the W. C. T. U. to Count Leo Tolstoi and has been in correspondence with him and his daughter ever since. He has always shown a great interest in the organization, and became a total abstainer not long after this literature was sent, though it is not known that it had special influence. These words of his show his advanced position on the question:

The use of wine, or abstinence from it, is no longer a private, but a social matter. All men are now divided—whether they will or not—into two camps. Some fight against the use of this worthless poison, both by word and deed, abstaining from it themselves, and not entertaining their friends with it; others support by precept, and still more forcibly by example, the use of this poison. Whoever thou mayest be, thou canst no longer remain between two camps; thou must inevitably choose one or two courses—either to resist drunkenness or to support it—to serve God or mammon.

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

In answer to questions it may be said again that the Minutes of the World's Convention are not on sale by the W. T. P. A., but must be ordered of Miss Slack, Ripley, Derbyshire, England. They are ready now and thirty-five cents will secure them, postpaid. Will the state white-ribbon papers please make this announcement.

Miss Belle Kearney writes, December 21: "I am looking for Miss Jessie Ackermann to-morrow. She is to be my guest for six weeks on the plantation; then she and I are to take a trip together through the Gulf States lecturing. Miss Ackermann has done magnificent work for the W. C. T. U. this year throughout the West. Lately she has been speaking in North Carolina and Georgia."

A national conference of prohibition workers is called to meet in Cincinnati, O., on Wednesday, January 26, 1898, in the assembly room of the Grand Hotel, the first session to commence at 9 A. M. The object is to discuss plans and develop enthusiasm. Tickets can be had on application and will be free to all. All who expect to attend the conference should notify the chairman, Samuel Dickie.

Miss Lottie Wiggins, chairman of the Convention committee, has been presented with a beautiful watch chain engraved on the keeper, L. E. W. from the W. C. T. U. The Convention committee and other white-ribboners arranged this as a surprise for the little lady, who has by the way, been recently elected president of the Toronto Christian Endeavor Union, the first time a woman has presided over this large organization.

We never print anonymous communications. Even though the names do not appear they are known to the editors. But we may quote a sentence from one such, signed "A Brother," who had just listened to a portrayal of the Toronto Convention by Miss Ensign and who exhorts us to tell out the work the world around by ten thousand voices. He says, "Were your work freely known, the wealth of all lovers of humanity and all who believe in its progress, from its wretched past to a state of being on earth worthy of immortals—their wealth and sympathy and coöperation would be freely given you."

Rev. W. W. West, of Pittsburg, Pa., makes the following public comment on the Princeton Inn affair: "Liquor is a detriment to all people. Those who profess to be Christians and are members of Christian churches should be above signing any petition for a saloon license, whether for a high-toned inn for college students, or a corner doggery for common loafers. The principle is the same in either case. In fact, the highest-toned and most aristocratic saloon may prove to be the greatest curse. I respect the Presbyterian church for the bold and noble stand it has taken in reference to the Princeton Inn."

One evening, about a month previous to the death of General Neal Dow, his daughter, Cornelia, returned to his room after he was settled in bed for the night, to see if he might be in need of any other service. He said to her, "I was saying the prayer that I used to say when a child, but then I said,

"'Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep.
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take.'

but to-night I say,

"'Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray Thee, Lord, my soul to keep.
If I should die before I wake,
I pray Thee, Lord, my soul to take.'"

Here was the grand old soldier repeating at the age of ninety-three the prayer his mother taught him when he was only three years old. This is a good thing for mothers to think about and to remember.

Young Woman's Branch.

A Protest.

BELOW is appended a copy of the letter recently sent by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, our National Y Secretary, to the president of the Princeton Inn Company:

"John W. Aitken, President Princeton Inn Co., 873 Broadway, New York City:

"SIR:—At the recent Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in Buffalo, the Young Woman's Branch in conference assembled, representing nineteen states, instructed me to transmit to you the following communication:

"In view of the fact that liquors are sold in the grill room at Princeton Inn, semi-official sanction is thus given to social drinking among the students; and as many of the students come from Christian and moral homes, where total abstinence is the rule, and the use of intoxicating liquors by students, especially in the formative period of their lives, is calculated to injure them mentally, morally and physically, accordingly, we beg leave to petition your board of trustees, of which you are president, to discontinue the sale of liquors in Princeton Inn, and not to make application for license another year. The money accruing to you in revenue ought not to be considered when it is obtained at the cost of the mental and moral degeneration of college students. Harvard and Oberlin thrive in towns where no liquors are sold, and we are sure that this grill room, with its attractions for social drinking, will prevent many parents from sending their sons to Princeton, and that it will be the ruin of students who do attend.

"We make this petition and request in behalf of the young women of the nation.

"Respectfully, ELLA A. BOOLE,
"Gen. Sec. Y Branch. Nat'l W. C. T. U."

Y's at Work.

OHIO.

DEAR Y EDITOR:—The Somerset Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the Ohio institution for the blind is in a flourishing condition. Much is being done to awaken the interest of the school in this work, so that it will live on long after the present members have graduated. A frequent change of officers has been thought to the best interest of the society; by so doing the younger members may share the responsibilities of office and be fitted to impart their experience to others. The wisdom of this plan will be apparent when we remember that this is a school and the membership is constantly being changed.

At the recent election of officers Miss Nellie Wright was chosen president, and the society is trying to do all it can to advance the cause of Christ. They have taken up the following departments: Flower mission, L. T. L., parliamentary usage, literature, Sunday-schools, and though as yet little has been done, plans are being made for work. The society held its last meeting December 10, and the address of J. G. Woolley, which was delivered at the Newark convention was read. This meeting was greatly enjoyed by all, and the names of thirteen honoraries were added to the roll. One of them was the Rev. Mr. Wallace, the much esteemed superintendent of the school, who does all in his power for the advancement of the society.

Any white-ribbon friends who may call at our school will always be welcome to attend our regular meetings, which are held but once a month.

ON December 8 Miss Amy A. Swankie-Cameron and Miss Esther Alonso, of Spain, two Y delegates to the World's and National Conventions, sailed for England on the steamship St. Paul. Both had become greatly enamored of America and when last seen were waving the stars and stripes. They addressed meetings in New York for the Y's and C. E. societies, and left such an excellent impression that we feign would have had them stay with us always.

Notice.

THE edition of the Y almanac for last year was exhausted before January first, and orders sent at that time could not be filled. We wish to warn all our friends in season this year when the edition is larger, but we only have on hand about five hundred copies, so we urge all readers of THE UNION SIGNAL to send at once, and thus help to speed our round-the-world missionary, Clara Parrish, rejoicing on the way.

New South Wales.

THE fifteenth annual convention of the New South Wales Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held in the Temperance Hall, Sydney, August 31 to September 4. A reception to all the delegates had been held at Trafalgar House on August 30, but on the 31st the business of the convention began in earnest. Mrs. J. K. Barney was present each day, and time was found amid the throng of business for a short Bible reading each afternoon, which was much enjoyed.

At 10 A. M. on Tuesday the Colonial president, Mrs. J. E. Nolan, called the convention to order, and after devotional exercises the roll was called by the recording secretary, Mrs. Greenstreet. After the various committees had been formed and greetings received, Mrs. Lucas, one of the first W. C. T. U. members in Sydney, was welcomed back after a severe illness, and was accorded the Chautauqua salute, after which the president read her annual address, which was a very able and comprehensive one. The corresponding secretary, Mrs. Masterman, read a lengthy report, detailing the work of the unions all over the colony, the number of active members in New South Wales now standing at 1,870, and honorary members, 200. The honorary treasurer, Mrs. Rea, presented the financial statement, which showed the funds to be in a very satisfactory condition. The annual public meeting was held in the evening of the first day, and evangelistic meetings each succeeding evening, at each of which Mrs. J. E. Nolan presided and Mrs. Barney was the principal speaker. Reports of various departments were presented by the Colonial superintendents, in almost each case showing advance in the work. Interval meetings were held for consecration and prayer, and much blessing received. Deputations of ministers and representatives from the chief temperance bodies in Sydney were welcomed, and brief addresses given by the leaders. Much routine work was accomplished. The elections resulted in all the Colonial officers being re-elected; at the close of which Mrs. Barney, on behalf of Miss Pemell, presented Mrs. Nolan with an elegant basket of flowers. It was resolved "That Mrs. Barney convey to Miss Frances Willard the loving greetings of this convention, and also our warmest thanks for sending Mrs. Barney to New South Wales."

South Australia.

MRS. J. K. BARNEY has favored South Australia with a visit, extending over five weeks, during which time she held a week's mission in the city and visited ten country towns and three suburban ones, and visited the stockade and the Gladstone jail, the long sentence prisons for men and women respectively. From her reception meeting, held in our own hall, until the farewell meeting in the Victoria (Y. M. C. A.) hall, Mrs. Barney steadily grew in favor with the people, who heard her gladly and thanked God that He had sent in their midst one so gifted and consecrated to His service and to her fellow creatures.

It is difficult to say which we enjoyed most, her Bible readings, pithy, practical and heart-searching, leading workers to more complete service, and showing how much God's word means to His loved ones; or the accounts of prison work, showing that in every human being there is a touch of the Divine nature, no matter how hidden, and the kindred truth, that this can be found by those, and those only, who are in touch with Jesus; or her calm and forceful presentation of the need of temperance reform and its claims on those who serve the Lord God.

The benefit accruing from the visit cannot be estimated, and we pray that her strong faith, fervent zeal, and ardent love may stimulate all to realize that they may have the same gifts.

At the farewell meeting the president of the South Australian Alliance, presided, and Lady Victoria Buxton, wife of the governor, was one of the audience.

A resolution expressing our appreciation of Mrs. Barney's services and our love for her was moved by Mrs. Lyall, the Colonial President, and seconded by Mrs. Coleman, the superintendent of peace and arbitration, who unexpectedly had the pleasure of being present.

We can not feel too grateful to our Heavenly Father for sending our sister among us, and while we loved her before we saw her for her work's sake, now we love her as well for her own sweet sake. May God bless her abundantly and preserve her in all her travels.

MARY J. GEORGE.

News from the Field.

Arkansas.

WE are still alive and full of love for the Master's service, though the best of papers (that, of course, means THE UNION SIGNAL) has not heard from us lately.

Our state reporter, Francelia L. King is the most active of women, but she has had difficulty in getting news from over the state. Our women are not Micawbers on letter writing, and often a postal card to our state paper, the Arkansas Signal, is all they feel like sending. Hence, the editor of the state paper will act as state reporter for a time, and so relieve Mrs. King of a small part of her W. C. T. U. work.

Our state president, Mrs. Mildred A. Dorsey, had her plans almost completed for going to Buffalo, but was unable to do so. The state workers much regretted this, but we must make up by reading, what we lost by her enforced absence from Convention.

And let me say in parenthesis, that since reading the last two issues of THE UNION SIGNAL it is surprising how much of the real enthusiasm and animus of a convention can be transferred by cold type. We who read with the spirit and with the understanding, really felt as if we had been with you who carried flags and banners and spoke words of wisdom, and in song and prayer bore us upward, also. A National Convention never passed a more essential resolution than was the one that said every local officer should read THE UNION SIGNAL. But this isn't Arkansas news.

Mrs. Dorsey expects to spend considerable time among our locals this winter, and our work will gain thereby. At her home in Newport she was one of the lady directors chosen in the organization of a county fair. But as usual, the tendency of the fair was to admit horse racing and gambling devices. Mrs. Dorsey, with others, protested. When their protests did not avail, they withdrew and discountenanced the fair in every way. The association endeavored to secure attractions to counterbalance the influence of these Christian women, but the fair was killed, and the local papers gave the ladies and the churches credit for bringing about the sale of grounds.

Carroll county has never had a county fair, so the white-ribbon women of Eureka Springs have organized a fair association, and have elected six of their members directors. Plans are made to conduct a fair with all good features in, and all bad features out, next August. The education of the people on the Labor Exchange will be one feature, and money made will be used for W. C. T. U. work.

The fifth district convention, at Fayetteville, was much enjoyed by those in attendance. Mrs. King was re-elected president, Miss Minnie Lyons, Fayetteville, is secretary, and Mary A. Browne, treasurer.

Siloam Springs sent a splendid report. They have had Edwin Brown Graham, chalk-talker, there, and raise more money by medal contests than any other union in our state. Mrs. J. L. Tennehill, their corresponding secretary, is state superintendent of contest work. This union does much work in relieving the poor of the town. They are going to pay dues for the wives of their ministers and have ordered seven copies of THE UNION SIGNAL for the ministers, and pay for and distribute ten copies of the Arkansas Signal. No wonder this little union is a power for good.

Little Rock, with its brave coterie of workers, with Lena Hartzell Wallace as president, is our strong tower in state work. They had Jessie Ackermann visit them in September, and declare her a grand helper.

Eureka Springs had a much appreciated visit from Clara Hoffman. Twenty new members placed their names on the roll at her last meeting.

David Tatum, the Quaker evangelist, passed through the state, en route for Mexico, and spoke at several points.

A most noted incident in the work was when Rev. J. B. Culpepper, near the close of some very successful revival services in Van Buren, where our union had been dormant for years, announced a temperance meeting, declared himself a white-ribboner and asked where the white-ribboners were. He instructed the women to prepare the white ribbon bows, and at the close of the temperance meeting called for members, and so many signed the pledge that the bows gave out. He appointed a meeting for a week later. Again there were not enough bows to go round. He instructed some of the ladies how to organize, and at last report nearly fifty had paid dues. Brother Culpepper is an evangelist in the M. E. Church South, and his address is Fort Worth, Texas.

Prescott union does much work. Mrs. Jennie Pittman is their excellent leader. She manages the L. T. L. and has organized two new unions near her own, both of which have her constant, kindly care.

We have a new union reported at Heber, and a prospect of one soon to be organized at Mountain Home.

Our colored sisters have their own state organization now and are striving bravely to make it a success.

Louisiana.

ALL quarantine restrictions were removed in the state November 25, and traffic is resumed. The long months of enforced idleness and stagnation in educational, social and business life were hard to bear. Like everything else the local unions have suffered from this general disorganization of society. In places not afflicted by the epidemic of yellow fever the unions suspended their regular meetings. Now that confidence is restored, it is hoped that interest will be awakened and the work revived.

Franklin observed Temperance Sunday at the M. E. Church South, and the pastor, Rev. Drake, preached the sermon on temperance.

Mrs. G. S. Boyd, of Arcadia, Bienville parish, gave me some interesting items which should make every one in the state seriously consider and go and do likewise.

Arcadia has had prohibition for the past eight years. It is a town with sixteen thousand inhabitants, with a court house and jail which cost ten thousand dollars. The jail has lodged only one prisoner in two years and not one inmate during the past year. The people have money to pay their honest debts, for they are not burdened with the expense of prosecuting criminals and supporting drunkards. The W. C. T. U. has disbanded for lack of something to do, which is unfortunate as there is plenty of work outside the city limits.

Jennings is another prohibition town where the boys and girls are safe. Here the young men are in the Epworth League and the Christian Endeavor societies, instead of the saloons which curse nearly every other town in the state. The W. C. T. U. was an important aid in the work of suppressing the saloons of Jennings.

Sickness and absence of officers and members is the universal report from all the unions thus far heard from throughout the state.

The ladies of Ruston are planning to revive the work. With a fund already secured they will distribute literature at their public meetings, and thereby endeavor to increase the general interest in the community.

A local press superintendent has been appointed. The president, Dr. Amanda L. Taylor, is determined, if possible, that the temperance cause shall again come to the front.

Everywhere, as well as at Ruston, the ladies who are the active workers in the church and the missionary society are those who belong to the W. C. T. U. and carry on the temperance work also.

The president of the first district, Mrs. A. M. Zable, had planned to hold her annual convention in September, when the yellow fever broke out in New Orleans. This effectually knocked the whole matter out. Many of the members fled from the city only to return after the frosts in December.

The board of health ordered the people not to hold meetings of any kind. All of the charitable and philanthropic organizations, as well as some of the churches, did not assemble for weeks. Theaters, prize fights and horse races were allowed to go on as usual, however.

In December the Central union resumed the meetings, under many difficulties, with all the different lines of work and the members demoralized by the months of enforced inertia.

The New Orleans ladies have been saving their nickels and dimes for the past three years, and now they have accumulated a fund of $150 towards the W. C. T. U. headquarters.

Mrs. E. M. Haughton, National organizer, has made two unsuccessful attempts to work in Louisiana. First the floods, and then the fever, frustrated all the plans for her coming. It is hoped that she can now come in January, and remain three or four months in the state and revive the work all along the line.

The state president, Mrs. Goodale, has just returned from her summer sojourn in Tennessee to her home at Baton Rouge.

The Patterson union is rallying her forces, and the Baldwin union has just held the first meeting for over five months. Dues had been paid, and the treasurer's report was encouraging. The news that the secretary, Miss Shannon, had regained her health and would soon return, was heard with thankfulness for the Providence which had saved her precious life.

SOMETHING for THE UNION SIGNAL letter at last, thanks to those who have furnished the wherewithal. Winter is the waking up time in our southern clime; not that our unions have slept through the long summer—for I have reason to believe they have, in many instances, been not only awake but active—only they fail to send their reporter word.

Gleaning from Jacksonville daily papers, I find frequent mention of active and efficient work done by the W. and Y. branches, in that city, and now and then an editorial warmly commends the good work being accomplished by the devoted white-ribboners.

Tampa union has made it a point to observe red-letter days, the past year. One day of the week of prayer, prior to our great Convention, was publicly observed, following the program as published in THE UNION SIGNAL. Short, stirring addresses were made by Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational ministers. Mothers' meetings among the Cuban mothers, who bring swarms of their dusky little ones to the meetings, are a monthly feature of the work in Tampa. The women seem eager to learn. The Rev. E. P. Herrick, and his excellent wife, white-ribboners, are our most efficient helpers in this branch, as the gentleman speaks the Spanish language.

From Oxford, Fla., I have news to this effect: Their union was organized as the aftermath of a visit and lecture by Miss C. S. Burnett in March, 1897. They report twenty-eight members, and same number of honoraries. Holding public meetings seems to be the "one thing" chosen by this young union to do. Twice Miss Dr. Wooster has spoken for them, and once Dr. Hammond, upon the effects of alcohol on the human system. Original papers are read, also impromptu speeches by young men. At one of their meetings, where Mrs. Steele, vice-president of the union, presided, the excellent program was enjoyed by a full house, one feature being a budget of extracts relating to the work.

The Oxford union holds business meetings in the band hall. Thanksgiving evening the compliment was returned by the W. C. T. U. giving the members of the band an oyster supper.

Miss Minnie Neal, state corresponding secretary, has sent recently to our unions an excellent program for use in regular meetings, with promise of "more to follow."

The program is prepared by Mrs. Alice C. Brown, state superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, and includes a catechism upon the subject just mentioned.

Mrs. S. E. Newton, corresponding secretary of Volusia county W. C. T. U., sends a brief account of their late annual convention, which was held in De Land, the home of our state president, Mrs. M. E. L. Webb; county president, Mrs. E. A. Hill, presided. An excellent progran was well rendered. Papers and addresses were exceptionally fine. The Episcopal minister, Rev. H. W. Little, ably addressed the audience first evening

Be Fair.

People dislike to look unpleasant facts in the face, and yet we must do this in order to avoid the habits which the body shows are killing.

A man or woman may have warning from stomach, nerves or liver trouble, that coffee drinking is steadily underming their constitution, the illness day after day showing absolutely that there is some serious disturbance and their common sense tells them that it gets worse instead of better.

They know coffee is the cause but try and deceive themselves with assurance that it is some temporary disorder of the stomach and will go away of itself.

So the drug (coffee) is swallowed each day and the dismal war goes on. It would seem the part of common sense to look matters squarely in the face and make a cut for health and liberty from bodily distress. Anyone esteems health to be of more value than money or property, so why not make a little intelligent effort to gain and keep it. Drop the coffee and adopt Postum, the Food Coffee, made of the pure grains of the field intended by nature for man's subsistence and nourishment. It looks like the finest Mocha.

When boiled full 15 minutes after boiling commences, it tastes like the better grades of Java, and agrees perfectly with the weakest stomach. It is made at Battle Creek, Mich., by the Postum Cereal Co. (Lim.) "It makes red blood" is the trademark, and can be found with grocers.

Substitutors drug their concoctions to give them a coffee flavor. Genuine packages of Postum have red seals and the words, "It makes red blood," thereon.

of convention. He said, "Shame upon the clergyman who does not believe in prohibition!"

Dr. English remarked that it was his belief that the Christian people of the county could close the saloons in forty-eight hours, if they would. It is to be hoped that the good brother proceeded to evolve some practical plan for so doing. Further my correspondent hath not written.

Michigan.

MICHIGAN has mingled her tears with those of Maine, and other sister states, over our mutual loss, in the going away of that great man, the "father of Prohibition," Neal Dow. While we mourn so often for these great ones fallen, we gather up our energies for more determined efforts on our part, for the "work must go on though the workers cease."

Miss Anna Downey has been giving a week of lectures in Detroit, under the auspices of Detroit union. She also gave two lectures at the first district convention, which have received words of the highest commendation, as did also the address of Rev. Dr. Blodgett, upon "Woman: Her Century, Achievements, Religious and Political Rights." Miss Downey also spoke in Muskegon, at the convention of the ninth. This district recently held an L. T. L. convention, which was so well reported at the W. C. T. U. district gathering, as to make new ardor for this work among the delegates.

Mrs. Rounds gave two stirring addresses at the meeting of the third district, recently held in Albion, upon "Christian Citizenship" and "Society's Silver Shield."

November 27 Mrs. Benjamin was at Belding for drills and lecture. She also attended seventh and eleventh district and Genesee county conventions. While in the eleventh she spoke at Benzonia and Interlachen, at the latter place securing several active, and fifteen honorary members, twelve of whom paid their dues at once.

An interesting feature of one afternoon at the convention of the fourth district was the symposium on "The Liquor Laws of Michigan." One of the city lawyers, a strong temperance man, was present to answer all the questions relative to their enforcement, which the ladies chose to ask.

Earnest work is being pushed in the eleventh. Our state president, Mrs. Benjamin, has filled several dates there. Mrs. Gertrude Minore also made a short lecture tour in this district. Very encouraging and satisfactory reports came to us of Mrs. Minore's work in Branch and Calhoun counties. Good reports are also received of other workers in other counties. Following five-minute speeches by the pastors of the different churches in Chelsea, where Washtenaw's convention was held, and an address by Mrs. Norine Law, twenty-three new members were gained for the local union. Mrs. E. L. Calkins spoke at Branch county's convention. Mrs. Lucy F. Morehouse, at Kent's, Mrs. Benjamin, Mrs. Dawson and Mrs. C. H. Johnson, state secretary, added inspiration throughout the entire meeting of Genesee county.

VERY few reports from the unions have reached your state reporter since the annual meeting. Did the impetus gained at the convention set you so busily at work, sisters, that you have not had time to report? Please remember THE UNION SIGNAL wants to hear from you.

Litchfield village council has passed a curfew ordinance. The petition asking for such action was signed by members of the W. C. T. U. and by nearly every business man in the town. Children under sixteen must now be within doors after nine o'clock unless accompanied by some person of lawful age.

Edgerton union has a new president, Mrs. W. J. Henry, an experienced temperance worker, and the union already feels the gain. A meeting was lately held in the M. E. church of the village, of which the local paper speaks very highly. The young people and children had large place in the program, and added much to the interest, after which Rev. Mr. Shanks addressed the audience. The pastor of the Congregational church of the same place has begun a series of sermons on such topics as Sabbath Observance, Social Amusements, Temperance and others closely related.

Mrs. L. F. Wilson, an octogenarian, and an earnest W. C. T. U. woman, attended the World's Convention. Shortly before starting she delivered two lectures for the W. C. T. U., one at Edgerton, the other for the union at Chandler.

The Minneapolis Evening Journal, a paper of wide circulation, has begun the publication of a series of articles from National workers. The series opened with one from Mrs. Carse, relating to the Temple and the W. T. P. A. When the large city dailies are so favorable to our work, the hour is not far distant when all papers will be open to well-written, newsy, W. C. T. U. matter.

Rev. Alice Ruth Palmer, state superintendent of systematic and proportionate giving, reported at the state convention that nearly twenty unions had taken up the work, which was a very fair showing for a new department. When all the unions shall have taken it up and adopted the plan, finances will not be the problem they now are.

Now, dear workers' please send me word of what you are doing. The time is at hand to begin work for the woodsmen. When you have sent your box or barrel, don't wait until spring or summer, but tell me now about it. You will soon be holding socials, Temple entertainments or lectures. Then let prompt reports come in, and other unions in other states will gain inspiration, catch new ideas, and at least mentally thank you for telling them about it. Don't think nobody but Minnesota women read about Minnesota's work. I know others do, for letters often come to me about something that has been noted in our column of News from the Field. So please "let your light shine."

Coin and Curio Collection For the Field.

DEAR WHITE-RIBBONERS THE WORLD AND NATION OVER:—So many letters of inquiry are coming to me in regard to the proposed coin and curio collection which I am trying to secure for the benefit of our National treasury, that I thought best to explain the plan more fully.

It is a matter of history that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union not only originated in this country, but that through the missionary zeal of our own workers, the white ribbon is now "around the world." This fact, so it seems to the writer, should make a very warm place in the heart of our great constituency for any appeal that means a wider and more persistent spreading of the truths which this organization came into being to preach and to live.

Time was when the enthusiasm of new converts rolled the work along, but now the toilers must be sent. There is no base of supply outside the National treasury, and it is in the interest of a missionary fund that I ask you for old coins and trinkets of bygone days. I will enumerate some of the things wanted.

A gold, silver and copper coin of every issue of the United States and of the first thirteen states; postage stamps of every issue of this government since 1847; confederate stamps, that say, "ten cents"; confederate bills of every issue, from $1,000 to $2 bills; shin plasters, territorial coins and coins of gold, silver, copper of every denomination on the face of the earth; postage stamps of every nation, and especially the very old ones. These stamps are on dear letters tucked away covered over with dust and tears of the past. Will you lay them on this altar?

I want, also, very old books or manuscripts of any clime and nation; pieces of old gold rings and chains; gems; silver, a ton of it, and bits of antique lace, anything that will add to the history of a collection of curios.

It will necessitate months of hard work, much thought and planning, but when the collection is finished some one will buy it, and with it will go the names of those who have given and a brief history of the National and World's W. C. T. U. Many collectors will come to look it over, but it must be held for the right time, and when sold, the money will go into the National treasury, to be used for missionary work as the National officers elect.

Shall I get such a collection as is here outlined? That depends upon you. Miss Willard writes that she is going to send all of her old-time treasures, and that if all the women will do the same, the Temple itself will not contain the gift.

If it is in your heart to help, do not wait until to-morrow, or until next week. Please send your gifts at your own charge, and will you not also send a stamp for reply, because if you do not your National financial agent may be reduced to the necessity of "passing the hat" for postage money.

Christian Citizenship.

At the National Convention it was deemed wise to unite the department of Christian citizenship with that of legislation, and the department now includes Christian citizenship, legislation, enforcement of law and anti-gambling. Miss Anna Downey, Evanston, Ill., is my associate in Christian citizenship, which position she held last year with the former superintendent. In Responsive Readings, for March last, and in National Leaflet, 87, she has very clearly shown plans of work by which W. C. T. U's, churches, young people's societies, etc., may carry forward most effectively that pressing duty of the hour, viz.: educating the Christian citizen as to his individual duty in the government, be it local, municipal, state or national.

The Evangelical Alliance of the United States, under the wise leadership of Dr. Josiah Strong, has begun a "forward movement" in this direction; it aims to flood the country with leaflets under the general heading, "Truths for the Times." There will be a series on good citizenship for foreign as well as native Americans, and a series in the interest of Sabbath reform, temperance, social purity, etc., etc., using young people's societies largely as the medium for distribution, visiting every house in city or country. These admirable leaflets may be procured at most reasonable rates by applying to Rev. Josiah Strong, D. D., United Charities Building, New York city. Also the Reform Bureau, at Washington, D. C., with Rev. W. F. Crafts as its able leader, is carrying forward the same ideas of educating the people as to the duties of citizenship through "Topic-a-Month Course of Reform Studies," the Twentieth Century Quarterly, petitions, etc., etc. Send to 210 Delaware avenue, N. E. Washington, D. C., for information and helps along this line.

When it is estimated that nine voters out of ten never attend the primaries, or caucus, but accept the ticket as made out and vote it solid, irrespective of the character of many of those whose names are found upon it; when it is estimated also, that four out of twelve voters simply ignore their duties as citizens on election day, and these represent the best element of society, surely it is time something was done to arouse them to their responsibility to God and man.

Anti-gambling has, also, a very close connection with this department. Those most insidious games, progressive euchre and progressive whist which, to our shame be it said, has been so widely taken up by professing Christians during the past few years, too often through the excitement and exhilaration attending the games, have provoked a further love for gaming, which have wrecked the life and destroyed the happiness of many. Can we do aught but heed the injunction to "Cry aloud and spare not"? Local superintendents should be appointed at once who will work in harmony with National and state superintendents.

Yours for the "righteousness which exalteth a nation,"
(MRS.) MARGARET DYE ELLIS.
101 S. 10th St., Newark, N. J.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

With this week's issue of THE UNION SIGNAL the Local Union column passes into the hands of the National corresponding secretary, to be used in part, in the interest of the proposed course of study, and in part for the questions and answers which have for years fallen to the wisdom of "Mother Experience." It is my purpose to make the course of study occupy the column on the first and third weeks of each month; the local union needs on the second and fourth. The months in which shall occur five issues of the paper will be given up to review questions. This can not, however, be an absolutely cast-iron rule. There may be weeks when no questions will come to "Mother Experience," in which case the column can be utilized for a fuller elaboration of the course of study. On the plan as outlined there can be but twenty-four studies each year, twelve for the organization and twelve for sociology, and it seems to me already as if fifty-two columns could be well utilized for each. We must learn condensation, and trust to some future plan for further elaboration.

It is my purpose to make the Course of study this year as simple and practical as possible, with the hope that so many of the unions may take it up in this form that there will be a call for its continuance. History of the organization of the W. C. T. U., sketches of its leaders, stories of the rise of various departments and the underlying principles of each will alternate with a very elementary course in Christian sociology. I shall strive to make each article so compact and clear that, if the unions feel that they can not afford to put money into text-books and books of reference, it will not be an absolute necessity; but, at the same time, I hope to make the papers valuable as a Bibliography, by referring to many volumes of great worth to us in our work, which I hope all who find it possible, will purchase. In so far as text-books on sociology are used there will be the little Manual by Professor Stuckenburg, the larger "Practical Christian Sociology," by Dr. Crafts, and "The Social Condition in America," by Professor Henderson.

I can not express how earnestly I hope that this may be made a thing of practical benefit to local unions. In order that it may be thus increasingly more and more I will ask the various unions which take up the course to communicate with me, so far as possible; to give me hints as to how it may be made more effective and in every way to coöperate in this experiment which I desire to make of practical aid to us all.

The Annual Minutes and Miss Willard's Address are now ready, and I hope there will be no delay in the sending in of orders. The price of each will be fifteen cents, which in the case of the Minutes only covers the postage. I regret that a misunderstanding caused the price of the Address to be wrongly given in a former issue of THE UNION SIGNAL. Please take note that it is fifteen cents instead of ten, and that all money should be sent directly to Mrs. Helen M. Barker, 1115 The Temple, Chicago. I hardly need say to all white-ribboners that to receive Miss Willard's yearly message at this price, is to receive much for very little. You cannot afford to be without it. You could make no better gift to your friends during the year. You should see that it is placed in your public libraries, that it is made a study in the local union; in every possible way you should utilize her golden utterances, which mean so much, not for our own work alone, but for the uplift of humanity.

Most cordial responses are coming from the circular letters sent to state corresponding secretaries. In many instances, the lines of work suggested by the National had already been begun, and everything promises a prosperous year.

Please note particularly the first page item in the last issue of THE UNION SIGNAL, in which Dr. Crafts is quoted as expressing regret that petitions were coming in so slowly to the Senate and House. Let each white-ribboner reading this paragraph, bring the matter up at once before her local union, and it would be well if you would not stop at that, but would secure the sending of petitions of prominent citizens, both men and women, in your town. Can you not bring it about this year, as last, that the representatives shall ask Mrs. Ellis "to call off her women." The form of petition has already been given in THE SIGNAL. Let us push this work with might and main.

Yours for a year of victory,
KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

It is most gratifying to note the increasing attention delinquent subscribers are paying to the little yellow label.

We thought that perhaps our readers would be interested to hear of an individual case at the Hospital. It is not practicable to speak of these often because patients properly resent being interviewed and "written up."

There is here at present a little boy, Otto, by name, eight years of age, whose case is full of interest. He has undergone an operation for a diseased knee joint from which a portion of the bone was removed. He has been at the Hospital for four weeks, and previous to his coming his history briefly told is about as follows: Otto remembers no home save a county poorhouse, where, for all he knows, he has been all his life. Another inmate, an old woman, can recall the fact that he had an uncle there once, but he disappeared years ago and no one knows what became of him. When Otto was scarcely more than five he fell one night when he was driving cattle, on the poor farm. It must have been evident at the time that the child was badly injured, for never since that accident has he been able to straighten his leg or walk without a crutch; but nothing was done to relieve his condition, because "the county could not bear the expense." Until he came to the Hospital he did errands about the poorhouse. A kind lady, a minister's wife, was one day visiting the poor farm when she noticed little Otto. She inquired of the attendant how long he would probably remain there. The reply was, "Doubtless fifty or sixty years." The lady'a heart was touched by the boy's gloomy future and she did not forget him. She had been at the National Temperance Hospital and was interested in it, so she wrote to us inquiring if Otto could occupy the L. T. L. bed. He came and has received the best of care ever since. A physician of high repute in his profession volunteered to treat him without expense. His operation, though very painful, has been successful. At present his leg is perfectly straight and has ceased to pain him, which is considered a remarkable cure, because the joint was much diseased.

Several years ago a rolling chair was presented to the L. T. L. room from California, and in this little Otto sits all day. At first the use of the chair was held out to him as a reward for patience. The little fellow had never before known what it was to receive Christmas presents, but this year he has been made happy by numerous gifts. Among others were a mouth organ from his nurse and a horn from his physician.

These two articles were what Otto most desired.

The lady who has proved such a valuable friend will take him to her home after his dismissal from the Hospital and send him to school this winter. After that no definite plans have been made for him. If any one who reads this wishes to learn more of Otto the address of the lady may be obtained by writing to the Hospital.

No money has yet been received on the five-cent pledges. The board hopes that with the beginning of the new year the unions will respond heartily to the call for five cents a member sent out by the state presidents. Yours in the work,

(MRS.) MARGARET INGLEHART.

STUDIES IN HOME AND CHILD LIFE. By Mrs. S. M. I. Henry. 12mo. Cloth, $1. Fleming H. Revell & Co., Chicago, Ill. The book is singularly free from all hackneyed expressions, or modes of dealing with this important subject. It is clear, concise and vigorous throughout, and has the charm of mother love and God love from first to last. We cannot conceive of a more helpful manual than this would be in the hands of young parents, and indeed of all who have to do with children. The writer exalts home work above house work, important as the latter is, and coördinates the mother's and the father's offices. Perhaps one of the most important chapters is that upon the special hygienic purposes of circumcision. Such an insight is given into child character, and the part which parents play in shaping the lives of their children, that the reader will not only wish to do the best thing in the home, but will, to a good degree, know how to do it. The book is beautiful in sentiment, and is not theory, but experience.

To Miss Willard's Friends Everywhere!

The report having been widely circulated by Chicago papers that Miss Willard was taken ill while speaking at Janesville, Wis., last Sunday evening, we think it wise to state here (all other pages of THE UNION SIGNAL having gone to press) that the only foundation for such report lies in the fact that the church in which she spoke was crowded to suffocation, and Miss Willard feeling slightly faint, after speaking an hour brought her address to a close and left the platform to seek fresh air. The newspaper paragraphs referred to caused much anxiety at the Temple, and telegrams of inquiry were sent. These were not answered immediately because Miss Willard and Miss Gordon were at the time engaged in making a round of calls in Janesville (once the home of the former) as per program. They arrived in this city on Monday afternoon and immediately left for Evanston where Miss Willard had planned to take a few days' rest before leaving for New York on Thursday.

Publisher's Notes.

We desire to call attention to our Assorted Packages of Leaflets which have been arranged by our editor of leaflets with a view to supplying our unions with just the material needed to enlarge the work. There are nine of these:

No. 1, The White-Ribbon Organization in general, 20 cents.

No. 2, Prohibition, 30 cents.

No. 3, Anti-Tobacco and Cigarets, 30 cents.

No. 4, Temperance and Labor, 40 cents.

No. 5, Mothers' Leaflets, 50 cents.

No. 6, Christian Citizenship, 40 cents.

No. 7, Gospel Temperance, 40 cents.

No. 8, Campaign Work, 50 cents.

No. 9, The Financial Side of the Liquor Question, 30 cents.

As especial attention has been given to the selection and arrangement of these various packages of leaflets it is believed they will be extensively used. Reduced prices have been made so no extra discount can be given, and we trust each one receiving the packages will not suggest changes or preferences for other leaflets, as it will be impossible to change the selection at prices named.

Mrs. Nettie B. Fernald, whose opinion is of value, writes thus of the package of "Excellent Mothers' Leaflets," which we are sending postpaid for fifty cents: "If we can only supply our unions with this beautiful material you have on hand, we can greatly enlarge our work. Among other excellent leaflets I have often mentioned, is 'Home versus Saloon,' by Miss Willard. I have found it one of the very best to read in a meeting. It is short, bright and cheap, three requisites in leaflets for general distribution."

We are receiving in eacn mail money from delinquent subscribers who are beginning to feel the effects of improving times and who with their money send earnest words of appreciation of the patient waiting, saying, "I still love THE SIGNAL and can not do without it."

Advertisers like to know what paper pays them best. Always mention The Union Signal when writing.

A NICKEL A DAY FOR SIX MONTHS

(Just to set the World a'talking)

A University Course at home by practicing the very slightest economy. This is a special concession made to readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, and is intended to advertise the latest, most authoritative, and most practical reference work ever produced. Two thousand profound scholars produced the great Encyclopedia Britannica; one practical man dominated the production of the famous Hill's Manual. Both works are known wherever the English language is spoken, the one being the most elaborate, the other the most concise. Now, as the crowning effort of his life, THOMAS E. HILL, in collaboration with eminent specialists, in the sciences, literature and art, gives to the world bringing within the means and comprehension of everybody that vast reservoir of wisdom, the ninth (and latest) Edinburgh Edition, saving the thought and simplifying the expression.

THOMAS E. HILL, Editor.

Hill's Practical Encyclopedia Britannica

THOMAS E. HILL never breaks faith with the public. His new work is squarely up-to-date, and is so guaranteed. More than 15,000 subjects are treated, and nearly 2,000 engravings are incorporated into the text. Of this large number 100 (one in twenty) are full-page, while 16 are large multicolor plates of the highest artistic finish. Countries, peoples, industries, arts and sciences, are adequately described and explained in these pages, and every fact, every occurrence that can interest or serve the reader finds fitting mention. As an instance of the work's thoroughness it may be stated that more than 250 commercial products are described, and their progress from raw material to the finished article explained.

THIS WORK IS STRONGLY ENDORSED BY

WM. R. HARPER, President University of Chicago.
J. M. GREENWOOD, Pres. Nat. Ed. Assoc. and Supt. of the Kansas City Schools.
N. C. DOUGHERTY, Ex. Pres. Nat. Ed. Assoc. and Supt. Schools, Peoria, Ill.
The CHICAGO TBIBUNE SAYS: "It is the most practical work that has been brought to our notice.
DR. EMIL HIRSCH.
W. O. KROHN, Ph.D., University of Illinois.
And many others of equally high standing in educational work.

Why?

The Publishers' reason for placing the first edition at a nominal price is simply this: they want to set the whole world to talking. Therefore 25,000 sets (the entire first edition), are to be distributed through leading newspapers in widely separated sections of the country.

A careful estimate was made of each leading paper's field, number of subscribers, influence, etc., and a pro rata allotment of sets made. Our assignment was only 840 sets. Manifestly we did not secure enough, but we had to be content with our apportionment. It has been found that it is good policy to sell the first edition of a useful work at a low price in widely separated sections of the country. People soon begin to talk about it, and this advertises the work and creates a strong demand for it. A second edition at regular prices meets this created demand and the publishers regard the discount on the first edition merely as advertising expenses.

How?

There will be no collectors to bother our subscribers. We rely on all who take sets to pay according to terms. There is no margin for loss. The publishers furnish them at manufacturers' cost as an advertisement, and we distribute them as a matter of newspaper enterprise.

It is a positive fact that after the Newspaper allotment is disposed of the publishers will charge $20 for this same work.

READ THE PROPOSITION CAREFULLY.

ON receipt of $1 we will forward to you, charges prepaid, one complete set of Hill's Practical Encyclopedia Britannica, with the understanding that you are to pay the remaining $9.00 at the rate of 5 cents a day (to be remitted monthly). This is the first edition to be printed from the plates, therefore the print is clear. The paper is of fine quality all rag stock, the volumes are durably bound in cloth with artistic library finish, calculated to last a life-time and beautify any home. The print is large enough to easily read without glasses, and the language is so clear as to come within the comprehension of even a child. That is the Hill idea of what constitutes the practical, while the saving of the thought of the great Edinburgh Edition, constitutes the Britannica. Guideposts, consisting of 87 pages introductory, is included in volume I, and if read in connection with the Encyclopedia forms a full university course for the reading circle at home.

"I have been so thankful to have so thoroughly good a paper as THE UNION SIGNAL in my home while my boys and girls have been growing. Reading in the home so helps to shape character, and now that they have all gone out to battle, I feel so thankful that my four boys go out clean, Christian boys, ready to champion all real reform, and that my girls are pure and sweet, ready to stand aside from the popular temptations that come in such rosy gilded attractiveness hiding the death they carry."

Great men differ on many important subjects; but distinguished scholars all agree that the

NEW FUNK & WAGNALLS

is incomparably superior to all other dictionaries of the English language. For example, we give the views of two of America's most celebrated public men:

HON. E. J. PHELPS,
President Cleveland's most trusted diplomatic representative.

"THE work is extremely well done throughout. I have no doubt that for general and practical purposes it is the best American dictionary now available."

"I AM confident that the published statements of Funk & Wagnalls Company, respecting the value of the Standard Dictionary, are not exaggerated."

CHARLES A. DANA,
President Cleveland's most aggressive journalistic antagonist.

SCHOLARSHIP HAS NO POLITICS!

It would be useless, in the limited space at our disposal, to attempt to put before our readers the many hundreds of commendations of the STANDARD DICTIONARY that came spontaneously from all sources, upon its first appearance. To those who wish to inform themselves fully as to the merits of this great work, we will cheerfully send printed matter containing full description. The following are characteristic expressions from competent authorities:

Harvard University: PROF. N. S. SHALER: "The Standard Dictionary will remain an enduring monument to the labor of its editors. I believe that it will come into general use in this community."

Harvard University: PROF. A. PRESTON PEABODY: "Will prove of invaluable service, and will last while the English language remains essentially unchanged."

University of Michigan (Ann Arbor): PROF. THOMAS M. COOLEY: "It justifies its name—Standard. . . . It is everything that could be desired."

Oxford University (England): F. MAX MÜLLER: "It is a rich mine of information, and shows how much can be achieved by co-operation if under careful supervision."

A. Conan Doyle, the eminent English Novelist, London: "It has become quite a joke with us that we can not trip up this dictionary. We have several times been sure that we would, but have always failed."

Oxford University (England): PROF. A. H. SAYCE, the eminent Philologist: "The Standard Dictionary is truly magnificent, and worthy of the great continent which has produced it. It is more than complete. . . . It is certain to supersede all other existing dictionaries of the English language."

Henry M. Stanley, the African Explorer: "The Standard Dictionary comes nearer to my idea of a first-class dictionary than any of the kind I have seen."

The New York Herald: "We are free to pronounce it the most complete and most satisfactory dictionary yet printed. . . ."

Johns Hopkins University: PROF. WILLIAM HAND BROWNE: "In accuracy, clearness, and fulness it surpasses all similar works."

Sir Edwin Arnold: "A noble piece of work, destined to be most useful. . . . Everywhere copious, erudite, and reliable."

The Irish Times, Dublin: "It is a monument of American learning and industry. . . . From the publication of the Standard Dictionary, America may date a new period of the country's history."

Brown University: PRES. E. BENJAMIN ANDREWS: "I believe that this Dictionary essentially fulfils the high ideal of its projectors. It is an out-and-out new product, and not, like our old dictionaries, the result of patching and amendment, little by little the different pieces often added by many, many minds."

Yale University: T. R. LOUNSBURY, Professor of English: ". . . The work deserves the fullest success, and I doubt not will meet with it."

Gen. James Grant Wilson: "It should, and it would seem will, become what its title indicates, THE STANDARD. I deem it the best English Dictionary published."

Edward Everett Hale, D.D.: "It is the blessing of our breakfast table. I have been surprised at the fulness and accuracy which show themselves to anybody who uses it constantly."

REMEMBER that these Commendations were written after a comparison of the STANDARD with all other Dictionaries now in existence. The full number of words and terms in these dictionaries for the entire alphabet is as follows: Stormonth, 50,000; Worcester, 105,000; Webster (International) 125,000; Century (six volumes complete), 225,000; Standard, over 300,000. In so important a field as the spelling, pronunciation, and definition of the words that make up our vocabulary, it is not worth while to have in your library, or on your study table, a book of reference that is not up to date and authoritative. It is most desirable to be able to consult an unquestioned authority; and such is the STANDARD DICTIONARY. Sent, carriage prepaid, to any address in the United States on receipt of price, $12.00; or $12.75 with Patent Thumb Index.

The Lancet, London, England, the foremost medical journal of the times, has the following in a recent issue regarding the superiority of Quaker Oats:

"It is well known that, owing to the fat becoming rancid, the flavor of ordinary oatmeal deteriorates. In 'Quaker Oats' this flavor would appear to be preserved for an indefinite time. That the oats selected for the rolling process are of a superior quality is evident from the following analysis which we recently made; Starch, &c., 65.77; albuminoids, 15.43; fat, 8.00; mineral matter, 1.35 per cent.; moisture, 9.45 per cent. Thus 'Quaker Oats' contain a maximum proportion of each of the food constituents which place the oat above other cereals in regard to nourishing and sustaining value. A glance at the above analysis will serve to show at once that this preparation represents a complete food, and by its peculiar mode of preparation its nutritive qualities are made more available."

"WHAT ails your mistress, Norah?" asked a neighbor. "The doctors do be sayin' that it is nervous pesteration she has, sure."

"THIS newspaper says that a young woman ought not to sit at a piano more than fifteen minutes at a time." "Here, cut that out and lets send it to that family in the next flat."

Does He Chew or Smoke?

If so, it is only a question of time when bright eyes grow dim, manly steps lose firmness, and the vigor and vitality so enjoyable now will be destroyed forever. Get a book, titled, "Don't Tobacco Spit or Smoke Your Life Away," and learn how No-To-Bac, without physical or financial risk, cures the tobacco habit, brings the vigorous vitality that will make you both happy. No-To-Bac sold and guaranteed to cure by Druggists everywhere. Book free. Ad. Sterling Remedy Co., New York City or Chicago.

"TEDDIE," said the minister, while mamma was out superintending the preparation of dinner, "have you ever been baptized?" Teddie was not quite sure whether he had or not, and after indulging in deep thought for a moment, replied: "Do you git baptized on the arm so you won't ketch things?"

"HERE, my little fellow," said a benevolent old gentleman to a weeping boy, "I wouldn't cry that way if I were you." "How did you cry when you were a little boy?" asked the weeper during a temporary cessation of tears.

THE GENUINE "BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are sold only in boxes. They are wonderfully effective for Coughs and Throat Troubles.

"Who shall decide when doctor's disagree?"
This old-time problem still survives;
And yet—the case is simple, seems to me—
Why not call in the doctor's wives?

Notes and Comments.

AS we go to press word comes that Lady Henry Somerset has resigned the presidency of the British Women's Temperance Association on account of continued ill health.

WE are told that the report is current in certain quarters that the National W. C. T. U. rents Willard Hall and pays therefor a large sum. Of course all white-ribboners know that this is not true, as otherwise that item of expense would appear in the annual report of the National treasurer. Willard Hall is rented and paid for by the Central Union of Chicago, under whose auspices the daily noontide meetings are held. We hope the newspapers which have helped to promulgate the error will now give circulation to the truth as here stated.

ONE National Convention over and it is in order, not only for the National officers, but for white-ribboners all over the country to be thinking about and planning for the next. From the private letter of a W. C. T. U. worker we quote the following: "I happened in at a state executive a fortnight ago, in the Los Angeles Temperance Temple. The women seemed to be thoroughly aroused and very enthusiastic in view of the coming of the National W. C. T. U. They were already devising plans and talking over details. The National is sure of a royal welcome in this garden spot of the globe. Hazard's pavilion will accommodate the audience, with overflow meetings in the adjacent churches, and the numerous beautiful homes will receive delegates. You can depend upon Los Angeles."

IN this issue begins a series of articles (five in all) entitled, "The Weapon Wonderful," which sets forth temperance doctrine from the Scriptural standpoint. The first two articles will treat of total abstinence, the other three of prohibition. The author, Mrs. Lilian F. Lewis, already well known to readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, has, as will readily be seen, given much time and study to the subject and has made a point of sustaining the position of white-ribboners as Christian temperance workers by the "Word" itself. The series will be of great practical value, for too often we have to meet the arguments of professed Christians who believe, or want to believe, they have Bible authority for moderate drinking, or for so-called "liberty."

IN accordance with its annual custom during the Week of Prayer the Central W. C. T. U. of Chicago held an all day service of prayer on Thursday, January 6. The leaders, each of whom had charge of one hour, were Rev. Edith Hill Booker, Mrs. S. M. D. Fry, Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, Mr. W. R. Newell, of the Bible Institute, and Mrs. Helen Harford, of Oregon, one of our National organizers. The keynote was "blessing upon our work and workers, that the baptism of the Holy Spirit may come upon the W. C. T. U. as in the days of the Crusade." Mrs. Carse presided, the room was well filled from first to last by a changing audience, and no one present could fail to be impressed and uplifted by the spirit breathed through the words spoken and by the prayers which ascended from concentrated minds and consecrated hearts.

THE W. C. T. U. of Maine has forwarded a formal protest to Governor Powers against the reappointment to the supreme bench of Judge Foster. The action is based upon the well-known immorality of the candidate, which charge the union declares it is able and willing to prove, if necessary. It would seem a matter of consistency and common sense that a man whose duty it is to decide fine points of the law and to uphold its majesty, should, at least, possess the qualification required of a saloon-keeper—"a good moral character." But it is evident that the "legal male mind" does not thus look at it, many of the lawyers who practice before Judge Foster having petitioned for his reappointment. The W. C. T. U. are "only women," but as a moral entity the organization is a power, and as a political entity it is a lender of influence not to be scoffed at in these later days. We doubt not that the "brave action" (as an eastern journal calls it) of the Maine white-ribboners will arouse such public sentiment as shall demand hereafter that moral character, no less than intellectual ability, shall be required of one who aspires to the ermine.

MISS WILLARD and Miss Gordon, accompanied by their stenographer, Miss Powderly, left Chicago on Monday for the East. They will visit New York and Boston in the interests of the Temple. Miss Willard wishes us to say that the prospects are good and her state of health most encouraging, reports of the press to the contrary notwithstanding. For the past two months she has been domiciled at the pleasant home of her cousin, Mrs. Henry M. Lemon, on Jackson boulevard, Chicago, where she has been as much at home as she would have been at Rest Cottage.

THE Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia, with Mrs. Margaret B. Platt at its head, is waging a most vigorous war against the proposed saloon attachment to the new National Congressional Library. A committee has waited upon the President and received, from his private secretary, the assurance that the matter will be brought to the attention of the librarian of Congress. An effort is being made to reach all influential societies throughout the nation. The corresponding secretary telegraphed the librarian: "National W. C. T. U. earnestly protests against the sale of liquor in National Congressional Library." It is hoped that the various state unions will take up the appeal and that a strong pressure will be brought to bear to prevent this new blot upon our nation's honor.

A CHICAGO editor scouts the idea of there being a woman in the state of Illinois who is taxed without representation, and states his proposition in this wise: Every senatorial district is represented at Springfield, every woman lives in a senatorial district, therefore every woman is represented. This reminds us of the school girl's fallacious syllogism about men and monkeys, which we decline to state for fear the author of the above would feel obliged to accept it, not being able to detect the non causa pro causa involved. That his proposition is faulty is proved by his own words when he follows with this proviso, "unless she is a woman suffragist, in which case she lives in a state of mind; and hence she is represented in some fashion or another," which makes it all as "clear as mud." This weighty editorial says furthermore: "The fact that she did not vote for her representative is supremely unimportant. Thousands of men stay away from the polls on every election day, but they do not caterwaul about being taxed without being represented." We once had a pupil who could not distinguish the differences in the various forms of government. We never attempted to discuss the bed-rock principles of our republic, or of human rights, with him; he might have "caterwauled" with pain from mental indigestion. Argument would be as useless in this case.

Current Events.

Woman's Year of Jubilee.

Fiftieth Anniversary to be Celebrated at Washington, D. C.

A JUBILEE celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the birth of the movement for the emancipation of women will be held in Washington, February 14 to 19, inclusive, by the National American Woman's Suffrage Association.

It is the semi-centennial of the first convention of women ever held in the world, and it will be observed with elaborate programs demonstrating the progress women have made in church and state since that time.

In pursuance of this plan a general call has been sent out signed by Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Susan B. Anthony and others.

It will be the greatest convention in the history of woman suffragists.

Temperance.

FORTY-ONE students have been dismissed from Stanford University, California, for inferiority in college work, immorality and drinking habits.

THE Berlin Anti-Alcoholic League, Germany, has presented a memorial to Dr. Bosse, Minister of Ecclesiastical, Educational and Medical Affairs, asking for temperance education in the schools.

A DECISION has been made in New York that hard cider is a liquor within the meaning of the Raines Liquor Tax Law, and a citizen of Carmel, Putnam county, has been fined $200 for selling hard cider without a liquor license.

THE final proof of a victory for the temperance cause in the matter of the Princeton Inn bar, is given in the recently issued university catalogue for the year 1897–1898. The page giving a map of the grounds has heretofore borne an arrow pointing to the Inn. This year the arrow is omitted.

THE saloon-keepers of Sioux City, Ia., have been notified by the county attorney that they must observe the Martin law in future. This means neither tables nor chairs in saloons, only one entrance, uncurtained windows, no shaking for drinks and ten o'clock closing. Hitherto the law has been openly violated, and its enforcement will drive many dealers from the business.

THE wholesale liquor dealers of New York city have unanimously requested that Mayor Van Wyck appoint as one of the police commissioners a prominent wholesale liquor dealer, Mr. Koehler, who is also treasurer of the Liquor Dealers' Association. They demand this appointment on the ground that they contributed liberally as a class to the Tammany campaign fund, and furnished a goodly number of votes for that ticket.

SAMUEL C. RANK, a former police lieutenant of Chicago, has been convicted of extorting money from the keeper of a "blind pig" establishment in the prohibition district of Hyde Park. The maximum punishment is $500 fine and confinement in the county jail for six months. Rank was suspended some time ago, pending an investigation of the charges made by the Hyde Park Protective Association, and his conviction is a decided victory for the Prohibitionists.

THE following resolution was recently adopted by the Chicago Archdiocesan C. T. A. U.:

"WHEREAS, The Third Plenary Council of Baltimore decreed 'the use of intoxicating liquor, wine and beer included,' should not be allowed at picnics or entertainments given under the auspices of the church or Catholic societies.

"Resolved, That we congratulate the clergy and societies that prohibit the use and sale of intoxicating liquor at affairs given under their auspices, and we commend their action to others who are behind the times, who are violaters of the decrees of the church, who are promoters of the business that causes nine-tenths of our poverty and seven-tenths of our crime, to stop in their mad rush for lucre and quit bringing shame upon the church."

THE Anti-Saloon League of the District of Columbia has made formal protest to the President of the United States, the Librarian of Congress, the Superintendent of the Building, and the joint committee on Library against the sale of liquor in the Congressional Library. The M. E. Preachers' Conference of the same district also passed a strong resolution indorsing Bill No. 1, and protesting against the Library outrage, appointing a committee to look after the matter in person.

Education.

THE school children of Kentucky have been asked to contribute each a penny for the purchase of a library for the battleship Kentucky.

PROF. HENRY W. FARNAM, of Yale, is a member of the civil service board recently appointed in New Haven under the provision of the new city charter.

THE Rev. William F. Lewis, of Wilmington, Del., has been called to the professorship of Hebrew and Old Testament Scripture in the Presbyterian Theological college at Bala, Wales.

NIKOLA TESLA, the inventor, announces that he has perfected vacuum tubes of such high illuminating power that they may be used in lighthouses, and that they will enable the photographer to work by night as well as by day.

GIRARD College, at Philadelphia, Pa., completed the half century of its existence on January 3, and celebrated the event with appropriate ceremonies. Nearly six thousand young men have been educated through the munificence of the late Stephen Girard.

A CHAIR is to be founded at the various universities of Russia for the purpose of having the Hindustani tongue talked to officers. The pupils are to be sent to India to complete their studies if they attain a certain degree of proficiency, to be determined by examination.

AT the session of the Academie des Sciences, held at Paris on December 13, the Cuvier prize of 1,500 francs was awarded to Prof. O. C. Marsh, of Yale University. This prize is "awarded every three years for the most remarkable work either on the animal kingdom or on geology."

THE Georgia legislature has passed a bill for the establishment of a textile school as a branch of the state school of technology in Atlanta. The sum of $10,000 is appropriated for the purpose, on condition that a like sum be raised. The school will be the first of its kind in the South.

THE University of Missouri receives from the estate of John C. Conley $23,023, not by will, but under the operation of a law recently passed by the legislature, providing that if a man dies leaving no father, mother, or direct lineal descendant, a certain per cent of his estate, excluding any amount left for charitable or religious purposes, must go to the state university.

About Women.

MRS. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Miss Helen Gould, Mrs. Charles D. Stickney and Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, all society women of national repute, serve no wine with their dinners.

PRINCESS THERESA, of Bavaria, daughter of the prince regent, has been made an honorary doctor of philosophy by the University of Munich. She is also a member of the Royal Academy of Sciences.

MRS. ADELINE M. FASSETT, an artist of national prominence, dropped dead on the street at Washington, D. C., on January 4. Mrs. Fassett's most noted work was "The Electoral College," now among the paintings hung in the Capitol.

ON the Pacific coast there are two women who hold responsible positions. Mrs. Fish is the keeper of the Point Pinas lighthouse, at Monterey, and Miss Fuller is harbor mistress of Tacoma. The latter is said to be an excellent official, keeping all records pertaining to the extensive shipping business of one of the most important harbors in the west in perfect shape. She will this month send in a "harbor master's" report for the year, which will be the first report of the kind ever made out by an American woman.

THE new city charter of Kalamazoo, Mich., provides for the appointment of a police matron by the sheriff. After delaying the appointment as long as possible, Mrs. Mary Stillwell was named, and the board of supervisors has now fixed her salary at $10 per year, making it practically impossible for any woman to give her time to the work.

MRS. FRANC E. FINCH, of Evanston, Ill., widow of the late John B. Finch, the well-known temperance lecturer, has announced that she will be a candidate for justice of the peace at the annual election next spring. Mrs. Finch is a member of the W. C. T. U., was at one time the second highest officer in the world's lodge of I. O. G. T., and is very popular in Evanston, whose best citizens indorse her candidacy. Her election would mean the annihilation of the "blind pig" business in that suburb.

At Home.

BALLARD & Ballard, of Louisville, Ky., flour millers, have divided among their employés $30,000, being the employés' share of the profits of the milling company during the year 1897.

PAUL L. DUNBAR, the colored poet, has been appointed to a position in the Congressional Library at Washington. He has just completed a novel, "The Uncalled," his first important prose venture.

GENERAL WILLIAM BOOTH, of London, commander-in-chief of the Salvation Army, sailed for New York on January 8. He comes to review the work and lend his personal aid to the colonization schemes of Consul Booth-Tucker.

FOR the first time in the history of journalism, pictures were sent by wire from Camden, N. J., to the New York Herald, on January 4, a distance of 145 miles. The instrument is the invention of Ernest A. Hummel, and has proved entirely successful.

THE Cuban Relief Fund started by President McKinley and the members of his cabinet with a $5,000 subscription, is growing rapidly. Cleveland, O., has contributed $1,500, $800 was sent from Montana, and $700 by The Washington Star. The money will be sent to Consul General Lee, at Havana, for distribution.

THE official call has been issued for a national conference of the Liberty party, to be held at Columbus, O., February 23 and 24. The object of this conference is to effect regular national organization, confer as to the best methods for conducting the party work, and outline a policy which will guide the state conventions to be subsequently held.

S. B. NICKUM, of Logansport, Ind., has invented a perpetual light in the form of a globe or sphere of glass hermetically sealed air tight. The light is inside the globe, and is produced by a compound, the nature of which the inventor will not divulge. Those that have been exhibited show the illumination diffused throughout the globe instead of being in the form of a flame.

Abroad.

TWENTY-FIVE people were killed, and many seriously injured at London, Ontario, by the collapse of the city hall during a political meeting, on January 3.

THE Brussels correspondent of the London Daily Chronicle says that the nephew of King Leopold, of Belgium, Prince Albert Leopold, the heir presumptive to the Belgium throne, will make a long tour of the United States and Canada.

THE latest news from Bombay, India, is to the effect that the plague returns for forty-eight hours, ending January 6, record 142 new cases and 105 deaths. There is a general exodus of the population and a suspension of business is threatened.

EL DIARIO DE LA MARINA, the Havana reformist paper, editorially states that over 500,000 people have died in Cuba of hunger, most of them being women and children. The concentrados are still starving, and there is need of active efforts to relieve the suffering. At La Esperanza, in Santa Clara province, there are 1,000 persons starving or dying of smallpox.

Be Glad.

BY MRS. M. O. PAGE.

WHAT does it matter? the world is bright,
And filled and thrilled with a glorious light,
The insects sing, the birds are gay,
The blossoms are thronging our onward way,
An incense goes up from the fragrant sod,
Returning the smile of a loving God.

'Tis a craven soul that returns no cheer
For the bounties of love that are crowding here;
'Tis a palsied taste that can sip no sweet
From the honeyed cells we everywhere meet.
Shall the sea rejoice, the hills be glad,
And you alone, oh, soul, be sad?

The teacher that lures with a loving heart,
Has made you a guest in halls of art;
You may see on her glorious canvas here
A foretaste of heavenly life appear;
In garments of praise, then, oh, soul, be clad,
And the song of your heart will always be glad.

Michael James.

In Four Chapters.

BY MAX JOHANN, M. D.

CHAPTER II.

VAN BUREN had been called a temperance community. For several years a majority of its people had been anti-saloon in sentiment, and they had kept in the town council men of similar views, so that no liquor was sold except in its one drug-store, and there only for medicinal purposes. But a brewery had been put into operation in our suburbs, and it, as the last local election had proved, had introduced a new element into Van Buren politics; or rather, had strengthened an element which heretofore had been too weak to show itself. The conservatives had not elected their ticket, and were surprised and chagrined thereat, and for a time apprehensive; but when several months had passed since the new incumbents had taken their seats and long established principles were still intact, the defeated almost forgot their institutions were threatened.

Katie entered our garden earlier than usual one October afternoon on which Michael James had promised to dig up and store away some roots for us. She made Mamie sit down upon a step, and, putting the baby into her arms, came straight to me and commenced a conversation; a proceeding which was as surprising to me as if a timid hare from the woods had come and nestled at my feet.

"There's a matin' of the town committee the morrow night, sir," she said.

"Is that so, Katie?"

"Yis, sir."

There was a pause, I wondering to see the lines of her face wavering in new directions, and she evidently frightened at her own temerity.

"I'm hearin' Tim Burns 'll be askin' fur a license, sir, an' Teddy O'Toole an' a lot moore of 'em. An' I'm thinkin' they'll git it, sir; fur Mr. Geldstein has had moore nur one o' thim town committee in his fine kerriage o' late; a-ridin' 'em around, an' on'y this day week I seen him myself lift off his shinin' baver an' bow very low to Mr. Rudd, an' he all the time howldin a moorgige on Rudd's house. An' it's but a fortnight since, sir, that Mr. Geldstein invited the whole boondle o' thim town committee to his house, an' they had a fine parthy. I'm fearin', sir, it's the women an' the childher o' the town that'll pay fur the buttherin' blarny that Mr. Geldstein bastes upon thim town committee."

I questioned her, wishing to discover what the anxiety really was that had emboldened her timid heart and loosened her modest tongue. I remembered afterward that she had hesitated and glanced round, as if looking for something with which to cover her real fear before replying. Her eye rested for a moment upon her "pigeon pair."

"Tim Burns's is jist forninst our place, an' I'd not want little Jamesie to grow up nixt door to a s'loon, sir," she said, but her eyes fell and her cheeks crimsoned.

Geldstein owned the brewery. He entertained handsomely, was a genial acquaintance and his family were fast becoming the social magnates of Van Buren. I knew that his influence in Van Buren politics was to be feared, still I did not apprehend immediate danger. Two members of our board of township committee had held the office for several years and were active temperance men. One, the Mr. Rudd whom Katie had been watching, was a man of good standing and believed to be devoted to the town's best interests. He was proud of the preferment shown in his election and would not, I felt certain, do anything to compromise himself with our better class of citizens. Another had secured for himself a part of the temperance vote by a sort of half-committal to its platform, and the brewery had elected the fifth.

But I promised the shrewd little Irishwoman that I would advise with some of our prominent people the next day; and that we would be present at the meeting and protest against the granting of licenses for liquor selling. I thought that I had quieted her fears, for she left me when Michael James came, and, taking up her baby, went over to where his work was. Having seated herself she took from her capacious pocket a roll of gay-colored wools which she was fashioning into a hood for Mamie, Jamesie catching meanwhile at her ivory hook and tangling his chubby fingers into her yarn. For once his cunning ways failed to win her attention, and her face was so serious that Margaret, who had witnessed but had not heard of our conversation, asked, "What is the matter with Katie?"

"Only a mother's anxiety," I answered.

"Indeed!" she said, glancing up at the window whence sounded the voices of our own "pigeon pair."

"But Katie's," I said, "is far-fetched," and I told her what Katie had said about little Jamesie.

They were a quieter family than usual that evening. As they were leaving, Margaret smiled up at me, for we heard Michael James say, taking the dinner-pail out of her hand (he already had the baby), "I'm thinkin' ye're ailin', Katie. Ye're not light o' heart the day." He opened the gate for her and shut it carefully when they were all outside.

"Bide here a bit, Michael James," she said, "till I go back an' luk fur me hankwechur." She came toward us and I saw her draw her handkerchief out of her pocket, carefully keeping her hand in front of her meanwhile. "I'm 'shamed to be taysin' ye, sir," she said wistfully and in a low voice, "but will ye bear in mind what ye said?" Being reassured she turned quickly, and we watched her pudgy little figure out of the gate.

Tim Burns got his license in spite of us, and so did Teddy O'Toole. Geldstein's flattery, and perhaps a little easing of the mortgage burden, brought too great a strain upon Rudd's limber virtue, and the pivotal member went to earth under a log-rolling scheme.

On the morning after the meeting, Michael James having already passed our house on his way to his work, Katie came into my office to learn the result of the "matin'." I told her. She didn't say much, but there was a terribly troubled look on her face.

As the days grew shorter and colder we were not out of doors so much, and we saw less of Michael James. Karl once said:

"Michael James doesn't go to work near so regular as he used." Karl's adjectives and adverbs never dispute the right of way, but though our boy's observation was seldom at fault, his judgment often was, and his remarks did not always set us to thinking.

"Drive slowly past Katie's," said my wife one day in February as we were returning from a sleighride, one of the little pleasure excursions in which we still sometimes indulge, though we have been married many years, "I quite long to renew my acquaintance with that happy little family."

"The saloon she so dreaded," I said, pointing to Katie's next door, is doing a thriving business, judging from the row of empty beer kegs exhibited." Beppo misunderstood my restraining touch upon his rein and came to a full stop.

The frau took a rapid survey of the unpretentious premises. "The pigs and the goat and the chickens are near neighbors," she observed, "but evidently not on dropping-in terms. Max, as Beppo seems to advise it, let us run in a minute."

Accustomed as I am to mark the effects of time or care upon the human face and form, I fear I was unprofessionally surprised at the work which four months had wrought upon Katie. Some grief in her woman heart had carved its image into her child face and her eyes were pathetic as the eyes of a suffering babe. The new lines on her face, which on a former occasion had only wavered, were fixed now. But if her transformation was wonderful, that of Michael James was complete. He lay upon the floor fast asleep and drunk! Drunk from crown to sole, and through and through! We could see it in the sprawl of his clumsy limbs and in the grossness of his bloated face, while his poisoned breath transmitted the fact to our minds by another sense than sight.

Our pretty picture of a loving home, that glimpse of heaven's infinite landscape, had been wiped out by the act of men who held in trust our town's best interests.

Katie set the chairs for us with the silent courtesy of a funeral director. "My poor, poor little woman," said Margaret, taking both the little work-worn hands into her own, "how did it happen?"

Katie went and stood by the bloated caricature of Michael James with the look that she might have given his mutilated corpse; and I noticed that she spoke of him in the past tense.

"'Twas thim s'loons, ma'am. The likin' fur dhrink was borned in him. Ivery dhrop of his blood an' ivery atom of his bones jist hankered after the liquor an' so it did in his father befoore him. Thim aisy-swingin' doors o' Tim Burns's jist opened an' sucked him in day after day, they did that, ma'am." Jamesie stirred in his cradle and she took him into her arms.

"Oh, Max," cried my Margaret chokingly and with clinched hands, "can't we do anything?"

"No, ma'am," said Katie, with dry eyes and despairingly, "manny's the time when—when it first kem upon him—that he promised me the plidge good an' thrue, but it did no good. He couldn't lave the s'loons so long as he had a cint in his pocket—not—not ma'am even if the hunger had been sore on little Jamsie."

"Surely, Katie, you have not suffered for—for anything needful?"

"There's four of us to kape, ma'am, an' there's little to earn, an' the food an' the fire is dear," was all she said, and I innocently thought it told the whole story.

She stood by a window and just then there came the dash and clamor of sleighbells and a flash of scarlet pompoms. Jamesie in his baby joy nearly leaped from her arms. I sprang to catch him. The action was needless, but I caught a glimpse of Geldstein's new turnout—the admiration of the town. Horses gilt-caparisoned and a gaudy sleigh whose occupants, snuggled beneath billows of fur, sent back in abandon of mirth the sound of ringing laughter into the house of mourning.

For a moment Katie's glance followed mine. "It' the women an' the little childher that pays fur it, sir," she said, "pays fur it in cowld an' hunger an'—may the saints in heaven forgive me sayin' it—in blows."

"Is it possible that it has come to that," I said, and I went and stood over the body, and—her past tense prompted the thought—I wished it had been decently disposed and in its coffin before they had let me see it. Katie came and stood by my side. I think she regretted having given me so deep an insight into her miseries, or rather, into Michael James' apostasy, for she said:

"He was the peaceablest lamb on God's earth, sir, when there was no rum in Van Buren, for he was niver the man to go sake it; an' he could make his dollar-an'-a-half a day wid the best of 'em, an' I could bide at home wid me babies an' kape the house nate like, an' we had our own roof over our heads then, an' a bit fur a rainy day besides; but since the s'loons, sir, all the days has been rainy fur the McGees."

"But my good woman, you still own your home, do you not?"

"It's moorgiged, sir, fur two hundred dollars, sorra's the day, an' Tim Burns it is that howlds the moorgige!"

"Oh, Katie, you should not have signed!" said the frau.

"It's aisy sayin' it, ma'am, but whin the childher is starvin' wid cowld, an' the grocer an' butcher are clamorin' fur pay, an' the man is hard on ye wid the cruel words an' maybe wid worse, belike ye'd do annything fur pace an' quietness, ma'am. He's jist after harryin' me to sign for moore, an' I quiet him wid the last bit o' money that Mrs. Selthurst gav' me fur the washin'. On'y fur the washin' an' the clanin,' ma'am, we'd not be ownin' a cint. The house is skinned, ma'am. The best table and the chairs an' the bureau is sold an' all the carpet—an' Jamsie's cradle is nixt to go." The mournfulness of the last sentence it would be impossible to describe.

"Oh, Katie, don't sign again, don't!" coaxed Margaret. "We'll try to help you to manage some other way."

"I'd not dare to anger him fur long, ma'am."

"My husband will talk to him and try to win him back. Won't you, Max?"

My Margaret's eyes were running over and of course I promised, but my convictions were with Katie, who said:

"Thank ye kindly, ma'am, but it 'ud be no use. Sorra's the thought, ma'am—it jist takes me heart out o' me, intirely—but wid the bewilderin' lights o' thim s'loons in his eyes he's as helpless as a dhry leaf in a storm."

The Weapon Wonderful.

BY LILIAN F. LEWIS.

PART I.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

Take the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. —Ephesians 6: 17.

CONSERVATIVE BROTHER.—No use your talking your temperance hobby; you fanatics see only with one eye.

WHITE-RIBBONER.—If with "eye single to God's glory," as Luke affirms, then the "whole body is full of light." Grant my talking useless, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes." Won't you hear what "cometh forth from the Lord which is wonderful in counsel"?

C. B.—If you'll keep to that authority and not descant on ism and schism, dogmas of what you term your cause.

W. R.—What we make ours, we name God's cause—as the letters W. C. T. U. indicate—declaring Christianity and temperance to be interdependent and inseparable, so deplore your attitude of favoritism toward the drink evil and schism in "split or division" of these coördinates. But if you mean our ultra-ism in doctrine of total abstinence and desired ostracism of the liquor traffic through prohibition, we accept the "soft impeachment" and refer you to the law and to the testimony in Scriptural support of these gospel temperance principles.

C. B.—Professing "gospel temperance," is your gospel of war consistent with our Lord's gospel of peace?

W. R.—James teaches: "The wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable," and "the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace to them that make peace;" not hold their peace, when God commands, "Cry aloud and spare not, shew my people their transgressions." Zechariah explains: "These are the things that ye shall do, speak ye every man the truth to his neighbor; execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates." By battling for temperance truth, we "follow after the things which make for peace," as Paul exhorts.

C. B.—Christ, as the Prince of Peace, and His dispensation of reconciliation, instructing us to "live peaceably with all men," seem ignored.

W. R.—"If it be possible, as much as lieth in you," are qualifying clauses, followed by "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good," our aim and end. The Prince of Peace makes at peace with God, but not with "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience." Christ said, "I came not to send peace but a sword." His scathing denunciations of the Pharisees and his driving from the temple with a scourge of small cords those making it "an house of merchandise," remind me of Isaiah's words, "Arise, ye princes, and anoint the shield;" and Jeremiah's warning against doing the work of the Lord deceitfully, "Cursed be he that keepeth back his sword from blood."

C. B.—Christ also said, "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me"—suggesting rather a sceptre of love.

W. R.—But unto the Son he saith, "A sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity." To truly lift up the world's Redeemer, should we represent Him as a friend or a foe to intemperance and impurity?

C. B.—You need not favor, though you do not fight a thing. Persuasion, by the law of kindness, would sheathe the sword.

W. R.—"Say ye, the sword of the Lord and of Gideon." Isaiah declares, "By his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh;" therefore, to the Philistine argument, "Oh, thou sword of the Lord, how long will it be ere thou be quiet? Put up thyself into thy scabbard, rest and be still," we answer: "How can it be quiet, seeing the Lord hath given it a charge against Askelon, there hath he appointed it."

C. B.—Does that order you into the temperance campaign?

W. R.—It does, if interpreted with correlative teaching and with the divine appeal, "Who will arise up for me against the evildoers, or who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity?"

C. B.—But why your rabid views? I advocate temperance that's temperance—deprecating excess in any line. I read lately about the arrest of a woman grossly intoxicated, whose babe rescued from her was drugged by drink. Happily the courts are growing stricter with cases arraigned for drunkenness. They should impose heaviest sentence, or fine, allowed by law, to teach such offenders to keep within the prescribed bounds.

W. R.—Opposing the forbidden use, and sale, of strong drink as inimical to personal freedom, claiming denial of liberty to obtain or dispense it as an infringement of the individual's inalienable rights, by what logic can you approve restriction, punishment, or limitation to "prescribed bounds"? If the arm of the law may outreach to the arrest for, why not to the arrest of drunkenness, by refusing permission and protection to what leads thereto, dealing with cause rather than with effect?

C. B.—Sounds like your "ipse dixit"!

W. R.—I was about to add, we are to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them," i. e., the evils responsible for the manifest ill. The outcast of the saloon evidences its works of darkness. A fine neither reforms the victim nor affects the trade supplying that product, but burdens his oppressed family for its payment. Better the Denmark rule, that "all drunken persons shall be taken to their homes in carriages provided at the expense of the publican who sold them the last drink." Habakkuk asks, "Wherefore lookest thou upon them that deal treacherously and holdest thy tongue? They catch them in their net and gather them in their drag, because by them their portion is fat, and their meat plenteous. Shall they therefore empty their net and not spare continually to slay the nations?"

C. B.—The New, not the Old Testament belongs to our Christian era.

W. R.—Some thousand allusions to the Old in the New—including Christ's and the apostles' repeated quotations from the "sure words of prophecy"—assure that "whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning." But is not Paul's demand for "no fellowship" equal to total abstinence and prohibition?

C. B.—Taking a glass of wine with discretion you could hardly class among the "works of darkness."

W. R.—"Discretion shall preserve thee from the way of evil." "Enter not into the path of the wicked, turn from it," are wise proverbs. It crosses the line into the adversary's dominion. "What concord hath Christ with Belial? "Wherefore be ye separate, saith the Lord; touch not the unclean thing." "Abstain from all appearance of evil." "Ye can not drink of the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils," warns Paul.

C. B.—Decidedly far-fetched that last; like the straight-laced, narrow-minded reasoning your few followers advance, impossible for thinkers of breadth and brains or the many to indorse.

W. R.—"Wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat; because straight is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

C. B.—That doesn't relate to the drink question. Its perverted use but corroborates my previous assertion.

W. R.—But it relates to that of salvation, and because "no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven," the drink question becomes a question of salvation. It was cited to show that majorities may mislead and minorities represent the right.

C. B.—I countenance neither drunkenness nor hard drinking, but can point to plenty of moderate drinkers.

W. R.—All too plenty, furnishing the annual supply of seventy thousand who fill drunkards' graves in our land. As the Japanese says, "The man takes a drink, next the drink takes a drink, then the drink takes the man," proving, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." History rewrites Isaiah's prophecy, "Strong drink shall be bitter to them that drink it," and the definition of drunkenness as a fire, of moderation as that which kindles the fire and of total abstinence as that which prevents or puts out the fire.

C. B.—Yet the learned Paul advises, "Take a little wine for thy stomach's sake." I might expatiate energetically upon the mood and tense employed, but forbear, leaving you to preach from it your creed.

W. R.—To save discussion, suppose the wine thus commended is alcoholic, as questionably assumed, "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick," spake Christ. The advice, "Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities," refers to Timothy's stomach in particular, not to any one's in general, and the kind of wine expressly prescribed for physical ailment, not for gratification of appetite. To argue indiscriminately for wine drinking from this text is no more warrantable than to counsel unconditionally against water drinking, or than to quote eminent authority having recommended a medicinal dose of arsenic for a certain abnormal condition in some individual case, as thereby advocating its common or unqualified use for the health's sake. Let me offer other Pauline advice.

C. B.—If it is, "Touch not, taste not, handle not," I challenge your appropriation of what the context characterizes a "man-made ordinance."

W. R.—I never count that on our side, because a condemned quotation, not a Christian command, and because it proceeds to expound, "which all perish with the using," while the ordinance of total abstinence flourishes with the using. I was thinking of the direction to bishops and other pattern saints, "not to be given to wine."

C. B.—The same pen enjoins, "Let your moderation be known unto all men." Can you twist that to serve you white-ribboners?

W. R.—Untwisted, it should ensure us your respect, and its introductory verses convince of your duty to help, as a true yoke-fellow, women co-laborers in Christian work. Probably an outspoken opposition to the active sisterhood led to this expostulation that the brethren exercise the spirit of "moderation" or kindlier tolerance.

C. B.—A veritable woman's Bible exposition, inserting mere supposition in the text!

W. R.—The revised version (prepared by a committee without woman representation) substitutes in the margin "forbearance" or "gentleness" for moderation, thus encouraging the hypothesis you criticise.

C. B.—It seems sacrilegious to thus wrangle over Holy Writ.

W. R.—"Profitable for doctrine, for reproof and for instruction in righteousness" that the Christian may be "thoroughly furnished unto all good works." To compare Scripture with Scripture aids in truth-seeking and to truth-serving. If a "wrangle" it is over the wresting thereof, not over its accepted, revered revelation.

WHAT a brave winning!
Lo, the idol ours.
When, softly as the fingers of the wind
Unleaf the tallest trees, the fairest flowers,
So God, with pity infinitely kind,
Strips the illusions, one by one, till fain
We are to trust His wisdom once again.

Willard Hall Echoes.

FOR five days Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, D. D., pastor La Salle Avenue Baptist church, has spoken for us. I wish I could give you some idea of his forceful utterances.

One day his theme was, "The Mind of Jesus." When at the close he asked those who desired this mind and wanted an interest in the prayer just then to be offered, thirty responded.

Some time ago I told you about a young man I met on the railway train. One day, several weeks afterward, a young man waited a long time at the edge of the rostrum to speak with me. Extending his hand, he said, "Do you remember me?" I knew I had looked into that face before, but could not quite place him. "Do you remember the young man you met on the train? You asked me if I was a Christian, and invited me to Willard Hall." "I do remember you." "I am not addicted to drink." "But you want Christ in the soul?" "That is what I want." A few days later he confessed Christ in Willard Hall. Since that time I have watched for that face, and at last he came again. "Is your soul prospering?" I asked. "I am happy," he replied. Then he told me how the Lord was wonderfully providing for him in his daily life.

At the close of the service one day last week, among the many who crowded about the platform, was a little woman dressed in black. "I want to speak with you," she said. And then, "I want you to pray for my son. He was a noble boy. Graduated from the University of Chicago two years ago, but—he is overcome with the drink. I am going now to take him home. He did not learn to drink at home. His father never tasted or touched it. He learned it at the university. He earns $130 per month. He is generous and kind, and if any poor fellow asks him, he puts his hand in his pocket until what he has not spent for the drink, is all gone." And this mother with the heavy heart clung appealingly to me. I called Dr. Henry to come near, that he might hear this story and join with us in the heart cry to God.

This is not the first case that has come to me of sons and brothers taking their first steps in the downward way at college and university. Parents, brothers, friends, wrestle in prayer, that those in charge of our educational institutions may have wisdom to discern and destroy the death traps that are open all over the land for our boys and our girls.

Not Forgetting Simplicity of Attire.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—There appeared a number of months ago in this paper an anonymous communication deploring the wearing of out-of-style dress by women advocates of temperance, and rather intimating that it was the duty of such to keep well abreast of the modes, not altogether for fashion's sake, but to make a bright and fair show before the world. This was briefly replied to by a subscriber, probably a month later. The subject, however, has persisted in presenting itself to the view of my mind repeatedly since then, and believing that a little more may properly be said in connection with it, I trust that my sisters will bear with me in so doing.

And why should it be thought without the province of a man in essaying thus to deal with the matter of woman's attire? There was a time, indeed, in the history of the race, or at least of so much of it as is spoken of as "God's chosen people," when the topic was shown to be of pressing, even of the first importance, to its welfare. If we will turn to the latter part of the third chapter of the prophet Isaiah, we will find enumerated in long array the fashionable kinds of apparel and ornaments of the time, and that because the hearts of the daughters of Zion were bound to those things, the judgment of the Lord should pass upon them and upon the land, so that "thy men shall fall by the sword, and thy mighty in the war. And her gates shall lament and mourn; and she, being desolate, shall sit upon the ground." Likewise, the Apostle Paul, in writing upon the excellency of the adornment "which becometh women professing godliness," bids his junior, Timothy, see that the women beware of those outward fashions that consist in "broidered hair, or gold, or costly array," reminding him later of "the unfeigned faith" of his grandmother Lois and his mother Eunice, the same which he is persuaded dwells in Timothy also. And we may be sure that these women who are cited as worthy exemplars in the Christian walk, were not followers of the Babylonian fashions which so caused the daughters of Zion to err in the days of Isaiah.

The problem before us lies closely related to the subject of social purity, which latter so greatly engages the efforts of those who are striving for home protection. In the introductory note to my tract upon "Simplicity of Attire as Related to the Promotion of Social Purity," an edition of which is issued by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, I stated that I had had "considerable active experience in suppressing the exposure of demoralizing show bills and other prints opposed to social purity." I am, nevertheless, fully persuaded "that it is in the power of professing Christian women to accomplish far more for purity by their adherence to simplicity of attire than can be gained by all the 'heroic' measures which man can undertake to this end."

Several years after the above view was expressed—it was in 1893—I had a letter from the late James T. Kilbrech, collector of the port of New York, and formerly a court justice in that city, in which, referring to "the causes which led the majority of young girls astray," he said, "My experience on the bench was very extensive, and led to the conclusion in my mind that the principal cause to which the evil referred to may be traced is the unfortunate and pronounced desire for dress."

The Mail and Express of New York told several years ago how two college-bred young women, desiring to investigate the condition of the tenement population of the east side of the city, with a view of seeing what good they could do, were quite astounded to find that many of the girls possessed clothes finer than they themselves wore. The people pay their rent—they would be hustled out on the sidewalk in short order if they didn't—they eat at least enough to keep them alive, they go to balls in the winter and to picnic and chowder parties in the summer, but the main part of their income is put upon their backs. Every member of the family who can even earn a quarter of a dollar a day is set to work. They live in wretched quarters, they occupy just as little space as possible, in order to reduce their rent; they scrimp and save in their table expenses and they economize at every opportunity, and all for the sake of making a stunning display of clothes. . . . This extravagance is increasing, too. At least, so say those who have known the East Side pretty well during the last three or four years. They say that this wish for fine clothes and the determination to have them are growing so rapidly that they can notice the increase from year to year, almost from season to season.

In a late number of THE UNION SIGNAL there is mention made of the acceptable presence of the Tamil evangelist V. D. David, at the noon-hour religious meetings in Willard Hall. About five years ago David accompanied (from Ceylon) George C. Grubb, a minister, Edward C. Millard and wife and others, on a religious visit to Australia and New Zealand. The printed account of this visit narrates a number of very interesting experiences having relation to the relinquishment of the liquor-drinking and tobacco-using habits. There are likewise given some incidents touching upon dress enslavement and its happy overcoming. A reception is mentioned of delegates of a woman's temperance association at ——, to which went the wife of E. C. Millard, but not to be greatly comforted. She remarks, "Many of the leading Christians of the place were present, dressed in costumes of the latest fashion; plenty of young girls flitting about evidently quite delighted to find that one could be religious under such enjoyable circumstances."

I remember a lady telling me, that upon sending the tract on simplicity of attire herein alluded to, to the principal (a Baptist) of a largely attended normal school for both sexes, he replied that he quite approved of the sentiments it contained, and hoped they would specially claim the attention of the women workers in the temperance reform by whom, speaking from observation, he thought it had been too much overlooked. The public receptions and conventions of the white-ribboners will be likely to lose, I fear, their simple power and impressiveness in proportion as they are made occasions for dressy display. The service which engages them is most beneficent; the term "Christian" in the title is a most honorable one, should be jealously guarded, and ever kept well to the fore.

The Police Court Jury System.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—In the issue of the Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune, Monday morning, November 29, there appeared Coroner Haerr's verdict:

"Albert Cook, acute alcoholism. I further find that the liquor was purchased by deceased and several other minor boys from J. C. Michael and Julia Aufderheide, and would recommend that the law prohibiting the sale of liquor to minors be strictly enforced."

Albert Cook was a "minor boy," to use the coroner's language, fifteen years of age, who, after a drinking carouse on the evening of Saturday, November 20, was found, on Sunday morning, dead in bed. A post-mortem examination was held, and two physicians testified that his death was due to "acute alcoholism." The testimony upon which the coroner based his finding as to the guilt of Johann Christoph Michael, a grocer-saloonist, and Mrs. Julia Aufderheide, a grocer-saloonist, was given by Henry Becker, a boy of seventeen years, who, with Cook and other chums, had met, after their day's work, for a "drunk." His evidence was so direct and positive that Mr. Michael and Mrs. Aufderheide were arrested, brought before the coroner, and identified by the witness. Mr. Michael admitted that he sold liquor to all patrons, without distinction, but Mrs. Aufderheide denied the charge. The two saloon-keepers, were, however, arraigned in the police court on Wednesday, November 24. Jury in each case was demanded. Both were immediately released on bond, and notified to appear for trial on Wednesday, December 1. At that time the case was divided, and trial of the charge against Michael set for Friday, 2 P. M., December 10; and trial of the charge against Mrs. Aufderheide set for Tuesday, December 14. Mr. Michael's case, however, was called at 9:45 A. M., on the 10th, and postponed until the 16th inst. Mrs. Aufderheide's case was called early in the morning of December 14, and postponed until December 23.

Mr. Michael's case was tried on Thursday, December 16. The impaneling of the jury consumed at least three hours, and created intense excitement in the court. Each juror was examined and cross-examined, and the rights of challenge were freely exercised by both the prosecuting attorney and the counsel for defense.

The boy Becker told the story of the fateful Saturday night, and your correspondent testified to Mr. Michael's admission in the coroner's office. An attempt was made to destroy the value of this testimony on the ground of "bias," but no attempt was made, or permitted, to demonstrate the bias of witnesses for the accused, whose evidence was so flimsy that no sane man can give it credit. After several "reputable" but obscure friends of Mr. Michael had testified as to his "good character," acting Judge Ermston delivered a "charge" to the jury. Mr. Ermston read the section of Ohio statutes under whose provisions the case had been tried. He called attention to the fact that the testimony for the defense was not less "direct" than that of the prosecution, and expressed the opinion that the testimony of the saloon-keeper was "probably better" than that of the boy Becker who, at the time of his purchase of whisky in Michael's grocery-saloon was intoxicated. The judge did not, however, call attention to the fact that the preponderance of evidence was in favor of the prosecution. Apparently he has forgotten that "preponderance of testimony" determines opinion—not mere "directness;" for in the case of Rapp vs. McDevitt, he decided that as Mr. McDevitt's denial of the charge of giving liquor to a nine-year-old boy was as "direct" as the boy's evidence (which was not shaken by the cross-examination of the Saloon-keepers' Association lawyer), there was no "case," and Mr. McDevitt was dismissed.

Under instructions of the Honorable Judge, the jury, after seven minutes' discussion of the "testimony," brought in a verdict of "Not guilty."

Mrs. Aufderheide's case was called on Thursday, December 23. The prosecutor stated that, having failed to make a case against Mr. Michael, he had decided not to prosecute the accused. He did not state that he had failed to call witnesses, nor that he had permitted a saloon-keeper to serve on the Michael jury. The judge also expressed the opinion that, as the Michael case had cost the city sixty dollars, it would be unadvisable to proceed against Mrs. Aufderheide. The Saloon-keepers' Association lawyer, who is always on duty in the police court, proposed placing the case on the "open docket," but the Honorable Judge did a better thing than that, he dismissed the case! But before exercising his authority, he arraigned the present police court jury system. "Under the present jury system," he said, "it is impossible to convict."

There is a flaw in the law! That "flaw" is attributable to the astuteness of a criminal lawyer, whose practices precipitated the famous Cincinnati riot. It is concealed beneath an ordinance providing that members of the common council or board of legislation shall deposit fifty names each in the police court jury wheel, and that the venire shall be drawn from the wheel so filled.

Each of these legislators deposits fifty names in the wheel. But his subserviency to the Saloon-keepers' Association is so notorious that acting Judge J. D. Ermston, from the bench, declares, "under the present jury system, it is impossible to convict a saloon-keeper!" That is to say, there are always one thousand five hundred and fifty citizens of Cincinnati who may be relied upon to perjure themselves if summoned to serve as juror in a case against a saloon-keeper.

It may be of interest to know that seventy-seven "polling places" in Cincinnati for the fall election of 1897, were rented of saloon-keepers, each receiving five dollars for the use of his "place." GEORGE M. HAMMELL.

One Off Day of a Worker.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"I still live." Listen to the account of one day. Last Saturday, 10 A. M., visited the jail; 11 A. M., the lockup, 2 P. M., was taken in a pouring rain to see the town. I tried to beg off. I could dispense with seeing, but no, the wagonette was engaged, and we must go. The curtains were down, "fore and aft" and all around, and five women were shut in with me. They told me, "now, we are passing" such a place, and so on. I grew wise, and did not get very wet. We only dismounted at the public gardens and walked around. I did not wonder at their pride in it, for even in the storm it was delightful, and the statuary in the pavilion was grand. At 3 P. M. we were due at the Benevolent Asylum, 350 inmates, and I spoke to many of them. At 4 P. M. we were due at the City Hall, where the mayor received us. It was quite a gathering, with tea, speeches and a beautiful bouquet for me. At 4:30 P. M. we were due at the Town Hall, where the mayor and mayoress received us, more speeches, etc. Then we drove to the lockup for the east side, where I investigated the case of a poor young girl, and at 5 P. M. the mayor took me to the Orphan Asylum, of which he is proud. There tea was served, and more speeches, etc.

This was an "off day" for rest, and no meetings, and I kept my equilibrium and thanked the Lord when it was over. Lockups and receptions were sandwiched in queerly, and the same gloves did duty right through.

[The above is a private letter which we take the liberty of printing anonymously as a suggestion of better rest days for our workers.—EDS.]

Local Union.

QUESTION.—Can you give a good program for a mothers' meeting, not necessarily along the line of social purity, but one dealing with some of our other departments?

ANSWER.—A most suggestive program has just been sent me by Mrs. Nettie B. Fernald, of West New Brighton, N. Y. I gladly pass it on, sure that it will be useful and suggestive to many local unions.

General subject, Food. Devotional exercises.

Response to roll call, with some well-tried recipe, a favorite in the home circle.

Papers, or talks on

Meat as food; its value, its use and abuse. Methods of preparing it for the table.

Vegetables, their value; what the chief vegetables supply to the system; how prepared.

Milk, its value as food for children; use of hot milk, etc.

Fruit, special value of the apple, grape, banana, cherry and other fruits in supplying the system with necessary juices.

Cereals, new and valuable kinds and methods of cooking.

Alcohol, not a food. Why?

I very much wish that the unions using this suggestive program would write me of its results, also of any variations on the plan as given here. This column is open to suggestions and to programs which have been used in local unions. I know of no way in which it can be put to better use. We should meet with fewer difficulties and fewer perplexities if we were constantly on the alert to find new and interesting ways of presenting our work to the public.

Q.—Is it proper for white-ribbon women to wear a badge of crape with their ribbon and march in a body to the funeral of the son of one of their members?

A.—Eminently proper and very appropriate, provided one considers crape the proper badge of grief and sympathy. For my own part I would be glad if crape were never again worn as a symbol of grief, but if, on the contrary, we were to express our hope and faith for our loved ones in the one hue which is symbolical of the Christian faith—spotless white. That is a matter, however, which each must settle for herself. So far as marching in a body to the funeral is concerned, it seems to me a touching mark of sympathy and one well fitted to aid in comforting and sustaining the bereaved heart. For several years it has been the custom, at the National Convention, to inscribe the names of departed friends upon the memorial list, with those of our comrades who have fallen in the battle and it is certainly well for the members of the local unions to draw more closely to their comrades in hours of bereavement. We know God's sympathy through human sympathy.

Q.—The question comes from a member of a local union as to whether or not the W. C. T. U. can still be called a Christian organization. As cause for asking this question a case is cited in which members of a local union argued, in debate, that it would be better for a man to reform for one year only and then go back to his drink than it it would be if he were to drink that year also, in connection with all the others of his life. The writer of the letter holds that to embrace that belief is distinctly non-Christian.

A.—I confess that I can neither understand the spirit of the criticism nor the motive prompting it. If I understand the meaning of the word Christian, it is to be Christ-like. If I understand what it is to be Christ-like, it is to have a spirit which pours itself out for others, which gives its life, in the largest measure, to lifting others up to a higher plane and to making the world worthy the indwelling of the kingdom of God. It seems to me that, with this interpretation, the W. C. T. U. merits the name as few organizations do. With reference to the particular discussion, I can not see that to hold it better for a man to reform for a short time only, rather than never to reform at all, can possibly be non-Christian. Undoubtedly it would be far better if the reform were a permanent one; but I think no drunkard's wife in all the broad land could be found who would not agree that it would be a blessing to her, and to her children, if even one year of her husband's life were to be lived in sobriety. The question does not apply at all to the future state of the man.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us; and establish thou the work of our hands. I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you.—Psa. 90:17; Jer. 29:10.

REV. A. P. HUTCHISON, a minister of the United Presbyterian church, and state chairman of the National party of Pennsylvania, went to Sandy Lake, Pa., to build up a poor, little, weak, struggling church, and help them get a new building. He was in Buffalo the time of the National W. C. T. U. Convention, and attended the Temple rallies, and pledged $20, although he has a large family to support and receives a very small salary. The following is an extract from a letter just received from him: "I have come to regard the 'House Beautiful' as the highest tide mark of Christ's kingdom in the world. To hold such a crest of conquest is the highest honor ever assigned a soldier in battle. There center the forces which make for righteousness. The recurrent tides of holy impulse from the living waters which flow out, center there. You will not falter, I know, for 'The Eternal God is thy refuge and underneath are the everlasting arms.'"

The past week at the office of the Temple trustees was marked by the receipt of hundreds of letters containing money, most of them from individuals, a large number sending $5 gifts. Quantities of our fifty-cent subscription cards were received. Of the large amounts the Temple's ever-generous friend, Miss Susan Sturges, of Mansfield, O., came in and brought $100. Mrs. T. M. Comstock, Oil City, Pa., sent as a personal gift $100. Mrs. Mydia Johnson, Farmer City, Ill., sent a check for $100, making the third hundred she has sent. A few unions sent money. Of the larger amounts $66.25 came from the W. C. T. U. of Salem, Mass., $26.65 from the Pittsfield, Ill., W. C. T. U., and $53.03 from the Y's of Bedford, O. The last day of the old year we received in cash and pledges, $2,226. The day before that we received in cash alone, $510, and yesterday, January 3, we received in cash, $595. If subscriptions would keep up like this until the first of July, we would see the desire of our hearts accomplished. The Temple Wheels are coming in more rapidly than they have for some time. We hope all friends who hold them will hasten to fill them and send them on to us at once.

Mrs. Helen A. Sherfey, Brazil, Ind., has sent the last instalment on her pledge to place the name of her husband, J. E. Sherfey, on the Indiana tablet in Willard Hall. She writes: "I do most sincerely desire that we may be able soon to give a victorious shout over part ownership of the Temple." We have received a legacy of $100 for the Temple, left by the will of Mrs. Eleanor Lent Weston, Riverton, Va. Mrs. Weston was a devoted white-ribboner, and organized the first Y union in her own town, of which she was president until the time of her death, in June, 1896.

Miss Ella Palmer, Sherwood, O., writes, "Last year I paid $50 toward placing mother's name, Eliza G. Palmer, in Willard Hall. The Temple must not fall into the hands of the enemy. Enclosed find my prayer of $20; the remaining $30 will be sent as fast as I can raise the amount. Yours enthusiastically for the Temple." We should greatly appreciate a great many prayers like the above. Miss Anna Carpenter sends a nice check from the Y's of Blissfield, Mich. A personal gift comes from Mrs. Ella V. Carter, Livingston, Mont. It has been decided that it is not best to make the Temple column a medium for giving the detail of amounts received. These will be given by the financial secretary.

All orders for Temple Wheels, Temple bricks, mite-boxes, Baby Band lists and Temple programs should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two-cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel, mite-box or subscription card. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Our Children.

Turning a New Leaf.

BY LAURA E. RICHARDS.

"NOW what is that noise?" said the glad New Year;
"Now what is that singular sound I hear,
As if all the paper in the world
Were rattled, and shaken, and twisted and twirled?"

"Oh, that," said the jolly old Earth, "is the noise
Of all my children, both girls and boys,
A-turning over their leaves so new—
And all to do honor, New Year, to you."

WHAT THE LEAVES SAID:

"I won't steal Alice's stick of candy;"
"I won't call Robert a Jack-a-dandy;"
"I won't squeak my pencil on my slate;"
"I won't lie in bed every day and be late;"
"I won't make faces at Timothy Mack;"
"I won't make fun behind any one's back."
Rustle and turn them, so and so!
The good shall come, and the bad shall go.

"I won't tear 'barndoors' in all my frocks;"
"I won't put my toes through all my socks;"
"I won't be greedy at dinner table—
At least—I think I won't—if I am able;"
"I will not pinch, nor poke, nor tease;"
"I will not sputter, nor cough, nor sneeze;"
"I will not grumble, nor fret, nor scold;"
"And I will do exactly whatever I'm told."
Rustle and turn them, so and so!
The good shall come, and the bad shall go.

Liberty—A Fable.

BY M. M.

ONCE upon a time there lived, in the land of Freedom, a great and good man, named Right Rule. He had in his service one, Weak Will, who was claimed as a slave by his neighbor, Evil Passions. The strife had been long between them, but Right Rule being the stronger, Evil Passions had been forced to retreat, but not to give up.

He retired to his castle in a rage, and called his slaves. He told them, with curses, that if they did not get the man, Weak Will, for him their heads should be cut off.

One after another tried, but the castle of Right Rule was so strong that it resisted all their efforts.

At last, License, twin brother of Liberty, the king of the country, whom he much resembled in feature, though not in character, offered his service to Evil Passions, for the work in which his servants had failed.

"If thou wilt indeed overcome Right Rule, and put Weak Will into my power, I will help thee in whatsoever thou dost wish," said Evil Passions.

Now, this pleased License greatly, for he had long been secretly plotting to gain the throne of his brother, and Evil Passions, with his multitudes of slaves, would be a great aid to him in carrying out his designs.

Accordingly, he arrayed himself in royal garments, called his servants, and set out in state for the castle of Right Rule, who, when he saw him coming, thinking it was Liberty, ordered the gates to be flung wide, and everything in readiness to welcome his lord and master.

License greeted him with all the dignity and condecension due to his assumed rank, then inquired why he had so far violated his commands as to keep slaves in his service.

"Nay, my lord," said Right Rule, "I meant no offense. My servants stay with me from year to year, I know, for they do not wish to change masters. And I keep a strong watch on the walls, for there be many unprincipled men who would carry them away by force and make slaves of them. But I pay them their wages regularly and they can go at any time that they really wish."

"Nay, but you should let your servants go freely to and from the castle and visit with the neighbors within its walls. You are really making slaves of them. Throw open the gates and call down thy watchmen, for thou art transgressing the law of the land."

"I will do even as thou dost command, my Lord," said Right Rule.

Accordingly he threw open the gates and called the watchmen from the towers, and that night when all was dark, Evil Passions stole in through the open gates, seized Weak Will, bound him hand and foot and cast him into his lower dungeon, there to toil night and day in darkness and chains.

Unfortunate Interruption.

WILLIE was asleep and Dan was lonely. Willie is the minister's son; Dan is his dog. It was Sunday morning, and every one was at church but these two friends. It was warm and sunny, and they could hear the good minister preaching, for their house was next door to the church.

"Dan," said Willie, "it is better here than in church, for you can hear every word, and don't get prickles down your back, as you do when you have to sit up straight."

In some way while Willie was listening he fell asleep. Dan kissed him on the nose, but when Willie went to sleep he went to sleep to stay, and did not mind trifles. So Dan sat down with the funniest look of care on his wise, black face, and with one ear ready for outside noises.

Now the minister had for his subject, "Daniel." This was the name he always gave Dan when he was teaching him to sit up and beg, and other tricks. While the dog was thinking, the name "Daniel" fell on his ready ear. Dan at once ran into the church through the vestry door. He stood on his hind legs, with his forepaws drooping, close beside the minister, who did not see him, but the congregation did. When the minister shouted "Daniel" again, the sharp barks said, "Yes, sir," as plainly as Dan could answer. The minister started back, looked around, and saw the funny little picture; then he wondered what he should do next, but just then through the vestry came Willie. His face was rosy from sleep, and he looked a little frightened. He walked straight toward his father, took Dan in his arms and said: "Please 'scuse Dan, papa; I went to sleep and he runned away."

Then he walked out with Dan looking back on the smiling congregation. The preacher ended his sermon on Daniel as best he could, but he made a resolve that if he ever preached on "Daniel" again that he would not forget to tie up his dog.—Our Little Ones.

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I wonder how many of you read the story of "Siegfried" on the Children's page in our last issue! It was written by a boy not much older than some of you who have come into the Cozy Corner, about sixteen, I think.

He came to Aunt Mary's desk with it one day, a frank, manly looking boy, and when I read his little story I hoped that it would help some other boy to consecrate his young manhood to the cause of temperance.

There are so many little letters awaiting publication that mine must be brief this time.

Lovingly yours,

AUNT MARY.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I would like to join the Cozy Corner. There are 120 saloons where we live. Our minister preached a temperauce sermon last Sunday night, and the choir sang some of the most beautiful temperance songs I ever heard. I am twelve years old, and my sister that sends her letter with mine is eight. We take THE UNION SIGNAL.

Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.—Rom. 11:21.

One Daily Paper.

THE morning paper usually presents a conglomeration of events, grouped together without regard to antecedent or consequent, and without thought of correlation. This is inevitable from the nature of the daily press. The newspaper exists to give news, not to philosophize concerning it, and since the law by which things come to pass has not yet been definitely formulated, it is not strange that in the record of things each event should be left to stand out in sharply defined isolation, without apparent connection with any other. Yet the historian professes to have discovered the philosophy of history; a law running through widely divergent occurrences, subduing them all to itself. If there be such a philosophy of past events, is there not of the present, and may not even the apparent hodge-podge of a daily paper be reduced to a definite principle, obedience to or divergence from which has caused the happenings recorded to be what they are?

In a recent issue of a Chicago daily, we noted four events of considerable moment:

First, the aldermen at their meeting on the previous evening had voted to raise the salary of an alderman from three dollars per meeting to fifteen hundred dollars per year, the same to take effect immediately, despite Section 11, Article 2, of the constitution of Illinois, which states: "The fees, salary or compensation of no municipal officer who is elected or appointed for a definite term shall be increased or diminished during such term."

(Later developments show that although the mayor promptly vetoed the bill, so far as aldermen now in office are concerned, an ingenious way of meeting the difficulty was discovered, viz., the employment of their wives, or of each other's daughters as private secretaries, at a salary covering the balance to be received by newly elected aldermen.)

Second, the county commissioners had recommended that no outside relief should be granted to the poor during the winter. Cook county was already facing a deficit of many thousands of dollars, and must, therefore, retrench. What more convenient mode of retrenchment than the cutting off of the one hundred thousand dollars appropriation to outside relief work, leaving the poor of the city to private charity?

Third, the number of burglaries and hold-ups was said to be growing more and more numerous, and a prominent divine of the city was reported to have declared that he never left the house unarmed, and that he believed the shooting or hanging of a dozen or so of the footpads is necessary to public safety. In an editorial, also, was urged the necessity of strengthening the police force with a view to dealing adequately with the situation.

Fourth, the Booth-Tucker meeting of the previous evening and the colonization scheme of the Salvation Army were fully described, and enthusiastic praise was given to this practical attempt to solve the problem of poverty.

If "things which are equal to the same thing are equal to each other," is there a corresponding law in the higher mathematics of life which rules that things invariably equal to each other are also equal "to the same thing," although what that same thing is we may not as yet know? Let us see: as greed of gain is to the alderman so is greed of gain to the footpad, although in the former case there is doubtless lacking the twin motives of hunger and want. This proposition proves itself under the old rule without recourse to the possible new.

Increase of crime in Chicago equals in point of time and of degree the refusal of the city to care for its poor, even to the miserably inadequate degree to which it has previously cared for them.

The helplessness of private charity to cope with the problem of poverty equals the hopelessness with which men have come to look upon the so-called Christian civilization as a remedy or even a palliative for existing conditions. Witness in proof of this the spectacle of a Christian minister, a follower of the Prince of Peace, urging that the shooting of a dozen men is necessary to the safety of the city.

The unrest of the poor under existing conditions is being equaled by the unrest of the rich. They feel that things are tottering to a fall, and many of them would gladly "stand from under" if only they knew how. Witness the gladness with which men rally to the standard of any one who has a clear-cut remedial plan. Many times ten thousand dollars could be raised to get the poor out of Chicago. It is the problem of the poor who remain which is the unsolvable one.

These things are clearly equal to each other. What is the one thing to which all are equal? What is the missing element necessary to the solution of all these problems? We answer unhesitatingly, "social justice." What is social justice? The Golden Rule applied in society. What would be a concrete expression of that rule? Giving to each man and woman the possibility of an honest livelihood, and the taking from the few the possibility of vast accumulation at the expense of the many. Why is there such suffering in Chicago? Very largely (far more largely than we have dreamed in the past) because there is not work enough to go around. Why is there not work enough? To a good degree because the means of production and the amount produced are regulated by the few, and regulated, not with an eye to the interests of the people, but to the wealth of the few. Why are there hold-ups and burglaries? Largely because avenues to a livelihood seem closed and men become desperate, and too, because existing circumstances are such as to make dishonesty seem more honorable than starvation to these men. The example of those above them in the social scale is too often in direct line with this conclusion. The line of demarcation between a hold-up and a board of trade "deal" is an interesting study in psychical, if not in physical geography.

There is but one safeguard for Chicago, or for any other city. That safeguard does not consist in the payment of larger salaries to aldermen, in cutting down the appropriation to the poor, in shooting footpads, nor in arming clergymen. It does not even consist in subscribing money to colonization schemes, however admirable, but it does consist in placing that which is the keynote of every true colonization scheme, "an equal chance for all," in the center of its municipal life.

Hyde Park Prohibitionists.

IN the midst of the great and wicked Chicago there are some tolerably clean spots. In the thirty-second ward there are twelve square miles of absolute prohibition of saloons and forty-five miles of local option territory.

"We have no poverty in our parish," wrote one of the priests in the district, "because we have no saloons."

"We have less trouble politically in the thirty-second than any other ward in the city, and we come nearer to getting what we want," said former Alderman Kent. "That is because we have no saloons in our residence district."

"The people in Hyde Park average higher in the scale of respectable citizenship than do the people in any other district of equal size in the city," said another prominent resident of the prohibition area. "People come here because they know the law will not permit Tom, Dick and Harry rascals to build saloons next door to their residences."

Before Hyde Park became a part of Chicago its trustees passed a local option law and its maintenance became a part of the annexation agreement and the Hyde Park Protective Association was organized principally to keep saloons out of this district. It has fought many battles, not only against saloon men but against the corrupt local police, and has won every time in the city and higher courts. It is composed of good citizens, and its officers, directors and committees serve without pay, but one agent is kept on a salary all the time, and others "about the breeding time for 'blind pigs.'" The money to pay the expenses is raised by subscription in the district.

"The work of the Hyde Park Protective Association," said Thomas A. Hall, its president, "has raised the value of property in the prohibition district at the lowest estimate $50,000,000 over what it would be worth were saloons permitted to remain open and flourish. Our work has been such that we have peace and safety for our wives and children, and quiet neighborhoods undefiled by the gamblers, bums and disreputable women who hang around saloons."

All of this and much more was set forth lately by a leading Chicago daily, and no better testimony in favor of universal prohibition could be brought forward than, "No poverty, less trouble politically, a higher average of respectable citizenship and a great advance in the value of property, women and children safe." Were it not for the depraved appetites of the people, every neighborhood where such facts are known would be seeking the same conditions. But the article was careful to say something about personal liberty, and that perhaps fifty per cent of the residents of the prohibition district would take a drink occasionally, but that they would not allow saloons in their neighborhood. Just so, and the saloons are crowded into the poorer districts where the people are less able to resist temptation and less able to combine against an evil. Why are these gentlemen who are so anxious to keep the thugs and gamblers out of their district and to make a safe place for themselves and wives and children willing to frequent the very places where thugs and gamblers congregate, and not only willing to allow other districts to bear their own proportion of all that is disagreeable or dangerous from the saloon, but to make them bear the proportion that rightly belongs to the Hyde Park fifty per cent that drink? Will some one please tell us if this is philanthropy or pure selfishness? We do not like to find fault with prohibition sought for any motive, but the principle will not make much headway till the Golden Rule is recognized and practiced. We hope there is a mistake as to the per cent who are not abstainers in the prohibition district, and that the number who do unto others as they wish to be done by may increase.

Bed-Rock Propositions.

PROFESSOR SAMUEL DICKIE, chairman of the National Prohibition Party, closed his address before the Chicago M. E. preachers' meeting some weeks ago with these six propositions:

1. If the saloon is ever overthrown, political corruption rebuked, and civic righteousness inaugurated, it will be by the triumph of the Christ spirit among men.

2. This spirit can manifest itself in the improvement of the social order and the political life of the nation only as exhibited in the lives and activities of men.

3. Though not necessarily confined to such channels, this divine force must operate chiefly through organized Christian bodies and individual Christian lives.

4. Whatever in the policy of government or the administration of public affairs is clearly contrary to the will and word of God should be rebuked by the church and opposed by the Christian citizen; and conversely, whatever is in harmony with the moral law should receive the Christian's support and the church's approval.

5. Whatever ought to be done by the church as a body, or by the Christian as a citizen, may properly be discussed and should be enjoined by the preacher as the teacher and the leader of his people.

6. The sentiment that preachers must not meddle with politics is a device of the pit, invented by the devil, patented by the politician, owned by the saloon, and industriously worked for the benefit of the trio, the senior member of which thereby makes sure of gathering in the other two, with perhaps an occasional preacher to boot.

REV. JOHN M. WALDEN, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church, had this to say, in part, in answer to an invitation to attend the twenty-fourth annual Convention of the National W. C. T. U.:

My interest in all forms of temperance work is sincere; you may judge that when you know that my first public advocacy of prohibition was nearly forty-five years ago, and that I study and rejoice in every substantial indication of its ultimate success. I assure you that it is a matter of personal interest that it was my privilege to preside in the first great convention held by the Crusaders, which you know met in Cincinnati more than a quarter of a century ago. The growth of real temperance sentiment during these years is one of the most significant facts of this century of great reforms. I read with interest such reports of your recent Convention in Buffalo as appeared in the papers to which I had access. I congratulate you upon its manifest success. Your "methods" and "watchwords" mean effective work and large results. As I remember the wonderful influence of the temperance work between 1845 and 1855—a great decade—I can but wish that more sympathy for the drunkard might be manifested and more work in his behalf might be done. Whatever else is said or may be said about drunkenness, it is a habit whose fetters are worse than imprisonment, and it is Christlike to visit and help those who are in this bondage. This work was prominent in the earlier stages of the temperance movement, and I have no doubt was one of the efficient elements in its marked progress. I can but believe that a greater measure of this kind of service in our day on the part of all temperance movements, including the churches, would add to the efficiency of the work and hasten the victory.

A BOOK has recently been published in England, the title of which we will not give because we do not wish anybody to read it since no one would be the better for so doing. It deals with the W. C. T. U. in spots, and although the allusions are of the most crude, not to say brutal sort, it is indirectly admitted in the outcome that white-ribbon women were the truest friends of the astounding heroine, standing by her even to the bitter end. The president of the local union "came and wept and kissed her hands through the bars mourning that she was not to die like a Christian." To this the Nondescript replies, "It can be said that I died like an American gentlewoman of the nineteenth century"! And when her loyal friend shook her head saying, "Only God can sustain you," the answer was, "I shall not make a spectacle of myself, don't worry!" We wonder what sort of people will be "brought up" on novels so full of irreverence and utter folly as the one in question, and we do not know a worse token of the time than that a woman journalist of decided talent wrote it, a famous publisher gave it his imprint and that it seems to have plenty of readers.

SOME time ago THE UNION SIGNAL noted the plan of the Secretary of the Navy, John D. Long, and his assistant, Mr. Roosevelt, to introduce a system into the navy whereby the men would get their drinks at a post exchange within the navy yard and directly under the supervision of the officers. It now transpires that there is some difficulty in finding officers who are willing to include the saloon business among their duties. Major Meade in command at the Charlestown Yard opposed the plan when it was to be introduced there and has been removed to the Portsmouth Yard, a much inferior position. It is denied, however, that his removal had anything to do with the change. Whatever there may be in this, one thing is certain, that if Secretary Long believes that "it is necessary to have an open saloon in connection with every navy yard under his jurisdiction that the men may be made better thereby," he ought to resign from the presidency of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society, and no doubt he will soon be under conviction to this effect.

SPEAKING of the conviction of two Chicago election judges who betrayed their trust in the interest of corrupt politicians, and were sentenced to a term in the Joliet prison, the Chicago Daily News says, "From top to bottom the profession of politics of to-day is putrid. It is bred and taught in the corner saloon and hence it is not strange that its graduates are legitimate candidates for the penitentiary. The pity is that more of them do not reach their proper station." And we are still asking, why continue to have the saloon? Will politics ever be purified while the saloon remains?

IT is strange how many educated people say "Between you and I" for "Between you and me." "The book lays there" instead of "The book lies there." "Who do you mean?" for "Whom do you mean?" "It is awful cold" for "It is very cold," etc. Among other errors may be named the following: Guess for suppose or think. Fix for arrange or prepare. Ride and drive, interchangeably (Americanism). Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

Mrs. H. J. Bailey, the National superintendent of the department of peace and arbitration, who often passes the winter months away from her Maine home, has gone to Saranac Lake, N. Y., for the season.

After a continuous trip which began the day following her return from attending the National Convention, Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, president Texas W. C. T. U., spent the holidays with her son and wife. She visited twenty towns, held thirty-five meetings and organized two new unions. Her route lay mostly in new territory, where seed-sowing only could be done. In several instances she gave the first temperance lecture in the town and was the first lady speaker.

Charles A. Culberson, governor of Texas, appointed Mrs. Lizzie Johnson, Paris, Texas, (state superintendent of prison work for the Texas W. C. T. U.) a delegate to the "National Prison Congress," which convened in Austin, Texas, the first week in December. Mrs. Johnson made an address on "Ex-convicts," which was greatly appreciated. Governor Culberson, it will be remembered, convened the legislature to keep prize-fights out of the "Lone Star State."

Miss Elizabeth L. Kinney has been admitted to practice before the supreme court of Illinois, the supreme court of California and the United States district and circuit court. She has located in Los Angeles. In the announcement she is now sending out we read that especial attention will be "given to probate law and property rights of women and children." Her mother, who is state president of the Southern California W. C. T. U., is to be congratulated on the attainments of her daughter.

Mrs. Charlton Edholm has held large meetings in Pittsburg, Pa., and in Newcastle and Erie county in the interests of the Pittsburg and Erie Florence Crittenton Missions, resulting in about $1,200 for those two homes for erring girls. The welcome given her and her startling subject, "Traffic in Girls," by ministers of the largest city churches shows the great change in public sentiment in the past twenty years. She never forgets to plead for members for the W. C. T. U., and to appeal most vigorously for all men to vote against the saloon. She may be addressed for engagements, The Temple, Chicago.

Mr. George Willis Cooke, of East Lexington, Mass., has been at work for twelve years on "A History of Woman." He has accumulated a large amount of material but is unable to bring his work to a conclusion without financial aid, and is, therefore, asking for subscriptions in advance. He is commended by a long list of Boston and other literati. Mr. Cooke is lecturing before women's clubs in the East on "Woman's Place in the History of Humanity." Mrs. Julia Ward Howe says, "In the interest of literature and of women also, we should wish that these lectures might be heard in many places, and by large as well as appreciative audiences."

The clothing fund for the famine stricken women of India is about to be closed, and Mrs. Hauser, of 225 Dearborn St., Chicago, wishes to thank the many donors of the garments already forwarded for their kindness and coöperation in this great act of charity. About ten thousand garments in ready made clothing, material and cash have been sent from the United States. For many months after the stress for food is past these garments will still be among the people, reminding them constantly of the kindness and charity of Christian nations in their time of need, and often will they pray in their own quaint fashion, "May God clothe those who remembered us." All further gifts should be sent in before the 20th of January. If any one has material on hand, let it be forwarded at once without making up.

Is There Need of a Young Woman's Branch?

THERE seems to be an impression abroad among a good many of the workers in the W. C. T. U. that there is no need of a Y Branch, and a feeling of dissatisfaction with the work of the Y unions. Some of the best workers even go so far as to say they do not believe in Y work, that they do not want a separate organization, and because they will not work along that one line, they are doing absolutely nothing to enlist young women, or young men, either, in temperance work.

Thousands of young people are graduating from our schools and colleges every year. They have trained minds; they have had educational advantages many of their parents have not had. There is work for them in the temperance reform. But we are not getting them in very large numbers. Why not? Are we making the effort that we should make? Whose work is it to create in them an interest in this great reform? No one will do it unless the W. C. T. U. attends to the matter, and it properly comes under the work of the Y secretary. I know no organization better equipped for developing workers along reform lines, and especially for developing young women, than the W. C. T. U. or the Y. W. C. T. U. Young men receive a training in other organizations the young women do not receive, because the young women trust to the young men to be leaders. In the Y. W. C. T. U. the young women are leaders, just as the women are in the W. C. T. U., and who will doubt that the greatest work yet done by the W. C. T. U. is the development of women?

There ought to be a Y secretary in every local union, whose duty it shall be to enlist young people in temperance work in such a way that they will join the Y. W. C. T. U. or become members of the W. C. T. U.

I have inquired diligently, but I find that comparatively few young women join our organization unless there is a special invitation given through some one especially interested in inviting them and who will plan work for them.

It may not be practicable to have a Y in every town, but surely there is not a single union in the United States which would not be glad to add to its membership from the ranks of the young women there. Then, if you cannot have a Y have a Y Branch. In a Y Branch the members meet with the W. C. T. U., and become responsible for fifteen minutes of each session, the time being filled under the direction of the Y secretary with readings, recitations, original papers, or musical selections, vocal or instrumental. Just think what it would mean for some of our unions to have this help in making the meetings interesting, and many times the material for a Y Branch is right in the homes of our own members. We want the daughters of W. C. T. U. mothers to be Y's. But, some one says, there are not enough young women who will join to form a Y Branch; then let the Y secretary still be a committee of one to invite young women to join the W. C. T. U.; then when you do get them to join, give them something to do that they may be developed into workers.

Not only is there work for a Y secretary along these lines, but still there remains temperance work in young people's societies, and temperance work in schools and colleges.

The Y. W. C. T. U. is the best agency for the development of trained workers for the W. C. T. U., nevertheless, if you think you can not have a Y do not neglect the young women. If, in all cases, the record be carefully kept and reported, we will know how effective the Y Branch is in increasing the membership of the W. C. T. U. How many unions are willing to make the effort?

Yours for service in enlisting young women in temperance work, ELLA A. BOOLE.

"What God Hath Wrought."

NO brighter or happier party ever left the harbor of New York for a distant land than the one headed by Miss Anna M. Cummings on her return to South Africa. The work accomplished by Miss Cummings during the three and a half years she has been in this country has been marvelous from a human standpoint, but from the side of faith only that which might be expected by one trained in the school of prayer with Andrew Murray.

I take pleasure in forwarding her printed letter sent out in November to the Y's and her other friends, at the same time reminding our young women that in the new college building is an upper chamber to be devoted to the meetings of the Y. W. C. T. U. and that its walls and furnishings depend still upon the Y's of our own, as well as other countries, and all gifts sent will be kept separate for our Y room and work in South Africa.

Miss Cummings carried with her four pieces of white ribbon, the gift of the Friends C. E. society of New York city, beside many other tokens of love and good wishes which will continue to follow her. F. J. B.

MY DEAR FRIENDS:—Limited strength and the brief time at my disposal before my departure have led me to give you in this form the latest tidings concerning the work in Africa, under the care of Rev. Andrew Murray, in which, as you know, I have been privileged to have a little share, either there or here, for nearly ten years. After three and a half years in this country, spent almost wholly in the service of Africa, either in addressing missionary meetings or in looking for helpers for the work, the time has come for my return to that land so dear to me.

Let us give thanks together for what God hath wrought during these last three years. He has enabled me to speak of His work in Africa in fifteen different states, besides the District of Columbia and Canada, to travel 15,000 miles, to address more than 500 gatherings, to receive for the building fund about $25,000; and for the training of students at Wellington, the support of native workers and children in Nyassaland $4,000 more, individual gifts ranging from five cents to $10,000, and offerings at meetings from seventeen cents to fifty dollars. Twelve earnest Christian women have gone out, at the call of our Master as we believe, to take up work waiting for them either at Wellington or some other part of South Africa, and have already accomplished much in His name. One is now on the journey thither, and four more are ready to go with me in December. At the request of Rev. Andrew Murray, a minister has been chosen by a committee of pastors in this country to take charge of the Mission Training Institute for young men at Wellington, which was for so long under the care of Rev. George Ferguson, who passed to his heavenly home a year ago last June. This young minister, eager to win souls for Christ and train them for His service in Africa, will also go out in December.

The new building, whose upper stories are to be used as a dormitory and the first floor as class rooms until other provision can be made for the classes, seems even now likely to be hardly adequate for the numbers of young women eager to receive training for service. It is nearing completion, and I hope to arrive in time to have a share in arranging its furnishings. You who have already contributed blocks of stone for the walls, furnishings for the students' rooms to bear your own name or that of some loved one, or toward the general building fund, will be glad to know that almost all the sum we had hoped to secure in this country has come, while the friends in that land are laboring hard and making great sacrifices to do their share.

The furnishings for the students' rooms have largely been provided and are on their way to Africa. Some gifts have been received toward the furnishing of dining-room, sitting-room and teachers' rooms, and we are asking that by the time the building is ready to be dedicated the necessary silver and gold may all be given.

To those who have been helping in the training or support of native evangelists, of the little native girls in Nyassaland or in the training of students at Wellington, who may go out as missionaries or as teachers into the regions beyond, let me say the possibilities were never greater than now, the Macedonian call, "Come over and help us," never clearer than now.

I am hoping, as soon as possible after my arrival in Africa, to put into regular communication with the work the many who have expressed a desire to be thus connected with Rev. Andrew Murray and his African field.

There are many who have asked how their gifts might be sent after my departure. Any contributions for the work or requests for leaflets concerning the work will be promptly cared for by any of these three: My sister, Miss Sarah R. Cummings, Strafford, Orange county, Vt., who will have my power of attorney, so that she can satisfactorily attend to the signing of checks and any other business; Mrs. H. B. Allen, 41 Lincoln street, Meriden, Conn., and Miss Ellen C. Wood, 7th and Erie streets, Camden, N. J.

I do not wish, however, that any of you should feel that I am too far away for you to send me letters, and postoffice orders drawn to my address as below or drafts upon the Bank of England made payable to me will be most gladly received for the work. ANNA M. CUMMINGS.

Y's at Work.

DEAR Y EDITOR:—Perhaps the Y's in other states will be interested to hear from the Y's in the upper peninsula of Michigan. The Marquette Y will celebrate its second anniversary the coming March. While working under many discouragements, the unvaried portion of all Christian workers, much good has been accomplished, and remembering the words of our Master, "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid," we go on, feeling the Lord is on our side, come what may. We have thirty-eight active and seventeen honorary members, with five departments of work, of which the flower mission and purity department deserve special mention.

But the pride and joy of the society is the Y News, published bi-weekly, and edited by two of our best and brightest girls. In their energetic hands it bids fair to keep up its aim, "to increase in our members greater interest, enthusiasm and sympathy in all that is good, noble, pure and best, the goal of Y endeavor."

The union temperance service on Temperance Sunday was a success financially as well as otherwise, and it was a true pleasure to send $10.50 to the Temple fund, also two dollars from the L. T. L.

We meet bi-weekly, transact business, and have a short program. The honoraries are welcome to come to all the meetings, and they show their interest by coming as many and as often as possible.

I heartily approve of the Wyoming Y's plan of admitting their honoraries to full and active membership. It will increase their interest and make them feel they have something to do besides listening.

In behalf of the society I send greetings to all the Y's in the Union. It is pleasant for us to wish you all a Happy New Year; may 1898 be the sweetest, brightest and most successful the Y's have ever had. Let us remember, girls, that whether it be happy or unhappy, successful or unsuccessful, it depends very largely on ourselves. For, after all, we must make our own years. However beautiful our last may have been, our next should always be better. So, our wish for all the Y's is that 1898 may be the best year you have ever lived.

Personally, I want to send hearty greetings to the North Dakota Y's, especially the Grafton Y. Three cheers for the girls on the blizzard swept prairies in the far West. Hold aloft the white banner. Never mind if discouragements do pile up; climb over and keep right on—success will be yours in the end.

KATHARINE D. WESTPHAL,

MINNESOTA.

INTEREST in temperance work among young women has certainly increased in our state, largely owing to the ceaseless activity of our state president, Mrs. Bessie Laythe Scovell, herself a member of the Duluth Central Y all the years of her connection with the W. C. T. U. until a year ago, when she removed to Minneapolis, where, shame to say, no Y existed.

Since state convention the last of August, nine unions have been organized, the largest of forty-six members being a Somerset Y in the high school at Mankato. Mankato is our banner city, having two other Somerset Y's in the Normal School and the Commercial College respectively, and a suburban Y of nine active and seven honorary members. Two other Somerset Y's have been formed in high schools. No school in the state is exempt from our white-ribbon attack, and we hope to report many successful sieges.

The girls of Minnesota send greeting and cheer to all their sisters.

Massachusetts.

THE work of the W. C. T. U. has been likened to a sugar orchard. The drops trickling from the trees very aptly represent the "not much to report" of the local unions, while the buckets into which these drops are gathered constitute the work of the county or district. These again, collected into barrels, represent the work of the state, while Old Mother National spreads out her great evaporating pan, and after her annual boiling down, presents the world with a fine lot of temperance sweetness.

In October, fourteen buckets of these drippings were carried in a barrel to the city of Taunton, and the Old Bay state considered the quantity and quality of her productions. To say that those deliberations were "the very best," would be to use a stereotyped expression, but as the verdict of some who attended the World's and National is, "give us our own state convention," we infer that there exists either a self-satisfied state of mind, or else true helpfulness comes from contact with the more immediate family circle. Indeed, we are of the opinion that though the large gathering gives inspiration, enthusiasm and a broad outlook, the small one is more conducive of that strength and courage which abides. The features of a state convention are too well known to give in detail. That the workers have been steadily pushing was evident from the reports, and that our president had lost none of her powers, was apparent from her address, which had plenty of food for thought.

The demonstration of the children representing the L. T. L., the S. T. I., the S. S. and Anti-Cigaret Leagues was an effective sight. About two hundred boys and girls with banners and flags forming a pyramid, carried out a program of speeches, rallying cries and songs.

Mrs. Clara Hoffman delivered an address upon "Human Equality," which was an argument from the Bible for equality of man and woman. The convention was edified also by Mr. Lou Beauchamp, who gave unanswerable arguments, wrapped in fun, wit and pathos. A very gratifying growth in the true spirit of giving was manifest when the executive recommended that in place of special contributions a fair be held for the raising of funds. When a determined looking woman arose and said, "I object to fairs," the mind of the convention was expressed.

Another occasion upon which the long gathering "drops in the bucket" were collected, was at Boston, in November, when the Willard Y Settlement was dedicated. White-ribboners thronged the house, and after inspecting it from attic to basement, pronounced it a home with "nothing institution-like about it." The dedicatory exercises consisted of Scripture and prayer by Dr. Perrin, of Boston, the singing of our much-loved state song, "Rock of Liberty," and addresses. Miss Ida Clothier, the National Y organizer, was present, and urged the workers to watch their own home lives. The exercises closed with the singing of "Home, Sweet Home," that song which it is hoped will be echoed and re-echoed by the many girls who will there find shelter from the storms of life.

And so, if space allowed, we might bring to old Mother National drops from the Convention echo meetings being held all through the state, drops from the renewed activity in organizing and securing members; in fact, there would be such a barrel of sweetness that our readers would be swarmed by the Massachusetts hive of bees, which is composed of the "Be not weary in well-doing," the "be ready to every good work," the "be swift to hear, slow to speak," the "be fellow helpers to the truth," the "be glad, then, ye children of Zion," and many others.

MODESTO is an ideal place for a convention, and here for four October days and five evenings the Woman's Christian Temperance Union spoke and listened, and planned and prayed and enjoyed. From the initial meeting on Monday afternoon when the key was set in a peculiarly earnest and tender evangelistic service, all through until the grand close on Friday night, the same earnestness of purpose and consecration to the cause were all pervasive.

Only one hundred and thirty-six unions reported, but our actual working force is diminished very little if any. The old guard stands, better organized, better disciplined, and not less ready for service. Our treasurer's books show a paid-up membership of three thousand.

It was impossible to report all the "mighty works" done in the franchise department during the great campaign. In some of our counties they almost come under the head of the miraculous. Hundreds of thousands of pages of suffrage literature were distributed; the press was everywhere utilized; lecturers were constantly busy; ministers pleaded our cause; the mails (males?) were burdened with our arguments and urgings; the amount of petition work done almost staggers us as we recall all it involved; money was collected as though times were not "hard;" the weight of personal influence was everywhere brought to bear; every device that woman's ingenuity aroused could conjure—from Fourth of July floats to sham elections for educational purposes—was put in motion; and when all was done, and well done, women went to the polls and tallied the vote. All saloons watched, and a woman at every polling booth in such a city as San Francisco shows that if we did not succeed we deserved success, and this is said to be better than success itself.

Other department reports showed vigorous effort, the evangelistic being especially gratifying.

The grand gold medal contest proved that a mine richer than gold lies undeveloped in this special work. Rev. Eugenia St. John, who was our "right hand man" all through the convention, was particularly happy in her presentation of the medal which was won by Master Horace Atwater, of Oakland.

An impromptu platform meeting revealed a surprising amount of ready talent and showed us where to look for speakers, while demonstration night was well characterized by the editor of our state paper as W-ondrous, C-omplete, T-riumphant, U-nique. Our different departments were represented by women arrayed in emblems which told their own story. Nellie Blessing Eyster, in her own inimitable way, introduced eighteen departments, each appropriately symbolized, to an audience that can never forget the object lesson thus presented.

The election of officers resulted in the choice of Mrs. B. Sturtevant-Peet, president; Mrs. Anne K. Bidwell, first vice-president, Mrs. E. G. Greene, second vice-president, Mrs. Dorcas J. Spencer, corresponding secretary, Mrs. R. A. Emmons, recording secretary, Mrs. Blanche English, auditor; all but the recording secretary were the old officers.

[The above account of our state convention was written by Mrs. Mary C. Lord, who was a fraternal delegate from our sister union, Southern California. The state reporter claims the readers' thanks for sending it to THE UNION SIGNAL.]

THE fifteenth annual convention of the Middlesex county W. C. T. U. was held at Middle Haddam, November 17. The reports from different unions show much good accomplished, and cheering prospects for the coming months. Interesting reports of the state and National conventions were given.

Four departments viz., press, scientific temperance instruction, Sunday-school and L. T. L. were reported, and that of franchise incorporated into the county work. The state corresponding secretary was present and aided by her cordial words and helpful suggestions.

The Mystic union observed the ninth anniversary of its organization by giving a supper and entertainment. An interesting sketch of the union was prepared and read by its secretary. The union takes courage from an increase in membership from the encouragement and patronage of the public and the earnestness and zeal of its officers and members.

November 28 the first Sunday-school temperance rally in the state was held at Greenwich. The national and state banners were displayed. All churches and Sunday-schools united, and all the infant classes joined in the "patriotic salute." December 7 Miss Hall, president of New York city Y's, addressed an afternoon meeting on "Why?"

Danbury union keeps on steadily with its regular weekly meetings. Volney B. Cushing of Maine, recently gave a lecture on Christian citizenship.

Stamford union has secured ten new members this fall, paid expenses of delegate to state convention, renewed subscription for twenty-six copies of the School Physiology Journal for the teachers in their public schools, also copies of THE UNION SIGNAL and White Ribbon Banner for the public library and Y. M. C. A. rooms.

Sherman union is rejoicing over the no-license victory this fall, and feel that their efforts have helped to bring about the good result. This union supplies its public school teachers with the School Physiology Journal.

The Pawcatuck union held their annual bazar in their spacious rooms on the afternoon and evening of December 13. The Riverside wheelmen also courteously tendered the use of their attractive parlor on this occasion. A variety of useful and fancy articles were on sale, and there was a Y table and an L. T. L. table.

REPORTS of county conventions are staple news nowadays, though considerably belated because of the greater ones which must, of course, have precedence. Most of our counties hold their annual meeting in the fall. Wayne's, held at Ontario, was late enough to have reports of the state and National conventions from delegates fresh from these great meetings and bubbling over with enthusiasm. Wayne county workers have been re-enforced by a former district president of Minnesota, Mrs. Dr. Fish, who spoke on the L. T. L. work. Rev. Stanley B. Roberts, of Utica, gave the evening address.

Two of the most widely circulated of the county papers printed full reports of the convention. One printed a column of news of our state convention. One paper also printed the full report of the National press superintendent, under the caption, "What the W. C. T. U. thinks of the Press."

Delaware county held its convention at Treadwell. Their expected speaker being ill, the ministers rallied to the support of the cause and the evening was crowded with good things.

"Increased membership," is to be the watchword this year, for to make up their quota of five hundred members before the next state meeting is their aim. This will necessitate much stirring temperance work all through the county.

Onondaga county white-ribboners met at Syracuse. A large attendance, fine music, excellent reports and great enthusiasm made this one of their best conventions. The young people were prominent. The Y hour was delightful. A quartette from Somerset Y, of Syracuse University, gave great pleasure. Both Senior and Junior Legioners had a place on the program. The latter gave a fine flag drill. The Seniors had excellent reports of their county work. Mrs. Willis, the county president, gave a graphic description of Toronto and the World's Convention.

Orange county held its fourteenth annual convention at Walden. Major Geo. A. Hilton gave two fine addresses, and nineteen members were added to the local union.

The nineteenth annual convention of Westchester county was held in the W. C. T. U. building, Willard Hall, at Mount Vernon. A more than usual earnestness was manifest through the entire session. Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, of New York, gave the evening address, and also an inspiring talk, one afternoon, to the Y's, of whom Westchester has more than any other county in the state. Mrs. E. U. Burgess gave a Bible reading on peace.

Herkimer's twelfth annual convention, held in Ilion, had an unusually fine musical program. Mrs. P. J. Adams, state organizer, was the speaker of the evening. The neighboring county of Fulton held its eleventh annual convention in the great glove manufacturing town of Gloversville. The reports showed earnest work in every department.

Tioga county, also, is eleven years old in white-ribbon work. The president, Mrs. Nellie H. Hutchinson, was presented with a life membership in the state W. C. T. U. A department parade participated in by about thirty young people, was an entertaining feature. Each superintendent spoke for her department, as its representative, appropriately costumed, was presented.

Rev. Stanley B. Roberts took for his topic, "The Cross in Politics," and delivered a powerful address. Mr. Roberts is becoming a favorite speaker with the W. C. T. U. and seems to be much in demand at conventions. He gave the principal address also at Broome county convention held in the city of Binghamton.

Sullivan county held its first decennial convention at Long Eddy, the home of the county president, who instead of her usual annual address gave a history of the county union from the organization of the first union, and of the county by Mrs. Bullock in 1887, up to the end of the fiscal year just closed. Mrs. Hutchinson, recording secretary of the state, was present through the entire session, speaking on the L. T. L. work the first evening, and giving her notable lecture on "The Calf Path," the second. Three saloonkeepers and their wives were in the audience. Mrs. B. E. Tredwell, of Brooklyn, gave two excellent talks on the proper care of the body that it may be fit for God's service. Several unions in this county contributed toward a Thanksgiving dinner for the poor in New York city.

Jefferson county had a gold medal contest and reports of state and National conventions. Fourteen members attended the National from this county. They certainly must have brought back enough enthusiasm to keep the county work "humming" for a year. A certificate of life membership in the state was presented to Mrs. Anna Devendorf, of Watertown, who has for many years served the county as corresponding secretary. The Loyal Temperance Legion occupied an hour on the program. A series of papers on the "Model President," "Model Secretary," "Model Treasurer," "Model Superintendent" and "Model Member" were presented by different women and must have given the convention a glimpse of what a "Model Union" would result in if each of these ideals were realized.

THE fifth district W. C. T. U. convened in Bastrop, December 8–10.

Mrs. L. F. Blanks, of Columbia, state treasurer, and Mrs. A. M. Zable, of New Orleans, state corresponding secretary, conducted the opening exercises.

The ladies of Bastrop spared no pains in making the Methodist church attractive and in welcoming the delegates to their hospitable homes. The Misses Hall rendered valuable service in teaching the children to sing and recite, and thereby added much interest to the meetings. The exercises of the children, in the model L. T. L., conducted by Mrs. L. F. Blanks, and the recitation by Miss E. Dalton, "Old Church," were enjoyed by a large audience.

The district president, Mrs. J. R. Wilson, of Monroe, was re-elected. Mrs. J. T. Howell, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. A. K. Clingman, treasurer. The convention was a success and resulted in the organization of a union and an L. T. L.

Mesdames R. B. Blanks, A. M. Zable and L. F. Blanks went by carriage to Mere Rouge, and reorganized the union and L. T. L. there with efficient officers and superintendent. The aggregate membership of the two unions is thirty-five, and of the L. T. L's forty-five. These ladies were kindly assisted and entertained by Mrs. J. M. Sharp, and they returned home well pleased with their reception and the work accomplished in Morehouse parish.

That the W. C. T. U. was an organization with banners was evident to every one who attended the National at Buffalo. Louisiana has now caught the spirit, and the wherewithal to procure a state banner is a thing greatly desired at present.

Miss Willard to the Local Unions.

BELOVED SISTERS:—The outlook of our hospital was never so encouraging as it is to-day. Our training school for nurses has a superintendent whose presence and character insure not only respect and confidence, but personal affection. The same is true of our new matron, one of the most accomplished women for the place that we have ever seen.

These statements are made to inform and cheer our sisters all this wide country over who have long given the hospital a warm place in their hearts. While the two women I mention are the right and left arm of the service in the hospital itself, they could do but little were they not supported by a board of trustees, which in appointing them showed, not only its devotion to the interests of the hospital, but building on the experience of many years manifested its careful study of the situation and ability to select only those who are worthy of the confidence of our constituency.

Now, with such an outlook, we ought to thank God and take courage. The enthusiasm felt toward the hospital at the National Convention in Buffalo should be extended to the great effort now in progress whereby it will own, instead of rent, and in a most advantageous location will be housed inside its own four walls, in a tasteful and commodious building, with all the modern scientific improvements that will compel the public to feel that not only have we come to stay, but that we are here with a comprehension of our mission that is commensurate with its great and sacred character. We are here to be among those who help to protect and develop the human brain, that searchlight of God whose flame is so easily made to diminish, to waver, or to be extinguished altogether. We know that women are more in danger of being marred in the organ of thought than any other branch of humanity, because in times of special stress they are subject to the deadly prescription that involves alcohol. We believe this prescription is made because the "set of the brain" in the average physician is that way, as the result of bygone ages of unintelligent prescribing, and that nothing will replace this deadly misapprehension except to supply in that brain a different set of ideas, and this can in no way be done so effectively as by the presence of an object lesson in the form of a National Temperance Hospital, where the proof is daily given that we are right in teaching that non-alcoholics in medicine is the true scientific position.

Beloved sisters, in order to keep the hospital up to its present high standing and to pay the necessary installment on the property we are purchasing for its permanent abode, $5,000 must be gathered in before next spring; if this is not done payment can not be made upon the lot on which we wish to build. This is the situation in a nutshell. You know how enthusiastic the executive committee felt on this subject at the Buffalo Convention, and that the state presidents agreed to send out to their local unions asking for five cents a member, an amount so small that the only danger of its being collected lies in its minuteness. Do not, I beg of you, regard this subject lightly; if you do, it is going to bring a very heavy responsibility upon some of us, for it would be a bad blow if we should lose the option on the eligible lot in the midst of our great medical colleges in Chicago. I appeal to our presidents of states, knowing their ability and energy. They can do what they will, and they are not only willing, but eager to help. The only danger is that in the midst of such a multiplicity of cares and enterprises they may not begin to canvass for the five cents per member as promptly as is needful. Therefore I have written this little plea for my heart is deeply engaged in this. I doubt if any one has been more warmly devoted to the idea of the hospital than I have since it was first brought forward at the Detroit Convention in 1883. Let it not be "a long pull," but may I lovingly say it must be "a strong pull" and "a pull altogether" if we are to secure that $5,000 in time. Please send it in just as fast as you can to the treasurer, Mrs. Calista M. Bigelow, 539 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

Important Communication.

To White-Ribboners and all Temperance Workers:

DEAR COMRADES:—Never has there been greater need of concerted persistent petition work. The friends of the liquor traffic are insolent and aggressive, and determined to push the sale of liquors into every nook and corner of our land. Even the beautiful new marble palace dedicated to literature, and called the Congressional Library, is not to be exempt. The Capitol of this great Christian (?) nation is not exempt. No place is too sacred for the sale of wine and beer. Comrades, "get thee up!" Make your influence felt. Make your voice heard. Let legislators know by petition what is the wish of Christian citizens. Let them know you are watching them and noting their votes on moral measures. Liquor men unhesitatingly tell legislators what they desire in legislation—go thou and do likewise. Now is the time. Petition for the passage of each of the bills mentioned on this slip. Note especially No. 1, but petition for all. Secure the indorsement of churches, of the Y. M. C. A., C. E., E. L., B. Y. P. U., and all temperance societies and lodges. Petition! Petition! Overwhelm the national Senate and House of Representatives with petitions for these bills. It means much even to let them know that you know that these bills are up for consideration. The enemy is clamoring for concessions and crowding to the front with brazen effrontery. Comrades, in the name of God and His righteousness, "up and at 'em."

MARGARET B. PLATT,
Pres. W. C. T. U., District of Columbia.
Washington, D. C., Jan. 3, 1898.

[All W. C. T. U. state papers please copy and keep this standing.]

What to Ask of Congress and How.

Let every church and every other society devoted to social welfare adopt at an early day, some or all of the following petitions, all of which call for bills pending in present Congress.

Resolved, That the pastor of this congregation (or the president and secretary of this society) is hereby authorized in our behalf to sign and send petitions in duplicate to the two houses of Congress, through our congressman and one of our senators, requesting the passage of bills:

1. To forbid the sale of liquors in the National Capitol and in all government buildings.
2. To prohibit interstate gambling by telegraph or telephone.
3. To raise the age of protection for girls to eighteen years in the District of Columbia and the territories.
4. To protect the first day of the week as a day of rest in the same.
5. To prohibit, so far as the power of Congress extends, the reproduction of prize fights by the kinetoscope or kindred devices.
6. And also the interstate and mail circulation of extended newspaper descriptions of such fights.
7. To substitute voluntary arbitration for railway strikes.
8. To protect state anti-cigaret laws by providing that cigarets imported in original packages on entering any state shall become subject to its laws.

Please write your congressmen and senators in behalf of the above.

PETITION PATTERN.

Having voted the petitions preceding, make a separate petition for each request on large square sheets, as follows: "To the U. S. Senate: The undersigned hereby petition your honorable body to———. The above was approved by a vote of —— persons at a meeting of —— in —— on —— Attest:——Presiding." Then make duplicate addressed, "To the U. S. House of Representatives." Fold petition once and back it, "Petition from — for—." Send the petitions for the House to your own congressman; the one for the Senate to one of your senators. Let us keep up a steady snowstorm of petitions and letters for the whole two years of this Congress, beginning early and winning surely.

[Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, our "brother helper" at the national capitol, sends the above instructions. He says: "Submitted for a place in some nook of THE UNION SIGNAL for every issue, save as reduced by victories, till March, 1899. Let the type be as small as you please, but please keep this information before your constituents constantly as we can not possibly spare the precious hours to mend petitions day after day. I have spent nearly eight hours today making over petitions of W. C. T. U., and sending back many so bad they could only be made over at the starting place."—EDS.]

Treasurer's Corner.

Now that the rush of accumulated Convention work is over, the treasurer is glad to get back again to her Corner for a chat with the women.

The executive committee, after considering financial matters very carefully, instructed the National treasurer to send out a letter to each local union asking for a donation of two dollars for the general work of the National. Thirty per cent of this will be returned to the treasurer of the state from which the donation comes. The response of the local unions for the two dollar pledge, sent out two years ago, showed such cordial sympathy with National work that we feel encouraged to believe that every local union where at all consistent, will be glad to donate that amount to the work of our great organization. The last four years of depression have told seriously upon the receipts, and we began the present year with a smaller balance than in any previous year of the treasurer's incumbency, save, of course, the first year when we began with a deficit of two thousand dollars.

It is the purpose of the National this year to push organization as never before, but these plans can not be carried out unless more money comes into the treasury. Last year eight thousand dollars was given to the Armenian fund; this necessarily took away from our general receipts which were three thousand dollars less than the previous year.

The Headquarters has been a busy place during the last two months. The work of getting out the minutes, the compiling of the annual leaflet, then the wrapping and mailing hundreds of annual reports and hundreds of Miss Willard's Buffalo address (which we are sending out for fifteen cents each) has kept every one at work. Then the work necessitated by the inauguration of our new financial plan, sending circulars to every local president and many other workers, answering letters of inquiry about the same, has left little time of leisure. We desire to thank the state presidents and state editors for their cordial endorsement of the plan and the space they have given it in their papers. If we will all be diligent, I believe this plan will put much money into both state and National treasuries. Don't forget to gather up and send the wrappers. Terre Haute, Ind., has the honor of sending in the first package. These are the times of especial anxiety for the treasurer, very little coming in, and large demands made upon the treasury for printing our enormous minutes, stationery for the year, annual leaflets by the thousands, while rents and other expenses are just as great during the first quarter as during the last. One state president cheered my heart by saying, "I have asked the treasurer to send you $100 of dues." Ohio, Wisconsin, North Carolina, Indiana and Rhode Island have sent in dues thus early.

Mrs. Baxter, our financial agent, has a unique plan that will not take money in any large amount to carry out. By it she sees a way in which she can help the National. Please get out a search warrant and find every old coin that you have had hidden away for years and send it to Mrs. Baxter, North Harvey, Ill., and you shall hear from it after many days. Miss Willard says to her:

"I think your announcement is remarkably good and refreshingly ingenious. I shall have to look among my bric-a-brac and souvenirs, my 'put aways,' my 'top shelves,' my bureau drawers and such like, for I am one of the people who likes to 'keep things' when they relate to matters of sentiment. So if every woman will have a 'clarin' up' time with the flotsam and jetsam of her various nautical ventures upon that 'sea of life' concerning which we had much to write in our schoolgirl compositions, I think they will pour you out a blessing for which the Temple itself will hardly afford room."

How many unions are working now for new memberships? I can tell of one that added fifty-nine new members in one day. They set apart a Sabbath-day for temperance Sunday. Each pastor was asked to speak in the morning on some phase of woman's work, and they nearly all spoke of temperance. In the afternoon a large mass-meeting was held in the Swedish Lutheran church and twenty-five new names were added at close of meeting. The grand rally came in the evening in the Congregational church. Four earnest, faithful pastors with their congregations united in the service. Fine music added its charm and the writer enjoyed uttering the truths that met such warm response. Thirty-four members were added in the evening. Was not that a good day's work? Where was it? At Moline, Ill. Who worked up this splendid meeting? The bright, energetic women of the local union. Mrs. Mary Metzgar and Mrs. Quick, the president, and Miss Mahon, I apprehend, were the leaders, but what can leaders do if they are not supported and followed? Every woman, it seemed to me, was in her place. Why can not every union work up a similar day? Be sure and have your tablets and solicit names. There are many signs of activity all along the line thus early in the year. May a tidal wave of temperance prosperity lift us all to higher ground and give us a new impetus that shall not cease until we render our accounts at Los Angeles next fall.

HELEN M. BARKER.

QUO VADIS is the grandest historical romance of the century, depicting life in Rome, in the time of Nero. In a description, never before equalled in literature, we witness the Christians in their trials and pitiless sufferings in the Coliseum; see the gladiatorial combats; and observe the universal hollowness and selfishness pervading society, and the iniquities and rottenness of the Empire, foreshadowing its sure and certain downfall.

The ablest critics pronounce this translation as being characterized with great accuracy and a marked penetration into the spirit of the Polish author. The price brings it within the reach of all readers.

The handsome, artistic half-tone, and photogravure illustrations and large readable type, add greatly to the pleasure, instruction, and entertainment of the reader.

Publisher's Notes.

We desire to call attention to our Assorted Packages of Leaflets which have been arranged by our editor of leaflets with a view to supplying our unions with just the material needed to enlarge the work. There are nine of these:

No. 1, The White-Ribbon Organization in general, 20 cents.

No. 2, Prohibition, 30 cents.

No. 3, Anti-Tobacco and Cigarets, 30 cents.

No. 4, Temperance and Labor, 40 cents.

No. 5, Mothers' Leaflets, 50 cents.

No. 6, Christian Citizenship, 40 cents.

No. 7, Gospel Temperance, 40 cents.

No. 8, Campaign Work, 50 cents.

No. 9, The Financial Side of the Liquor Question, 30 cents.

As especial attention has been given to the selection and arrangement of these various packages of leaflets it is believed they will be extensively used. Reduced prices have been made so no extra discount can be given, and we trust each one receiving the packages will not suggest changes or preferences for other leaflets, as it will be impossible to change the selection at prices named.

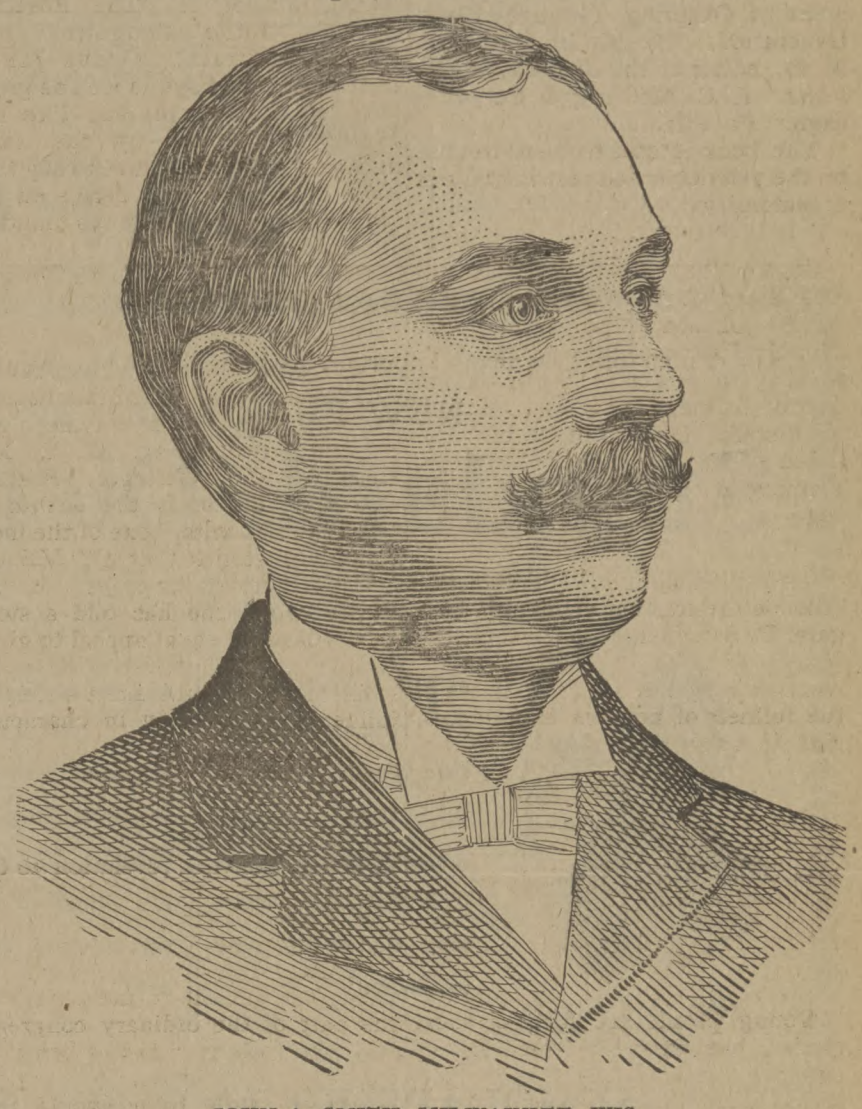
A correspondent writes: "Inclosed find one dollar for a subscription to the best paper I ever read. I have pinched myself in many ways to save this money that I might pay for my paper, and it does not go grudgingly. THE UNION SIGNAL has come to my home until it is like the visit of an old friend, and has always been so inspiring and uplifting that I do not want to try to live without it. I find in it many things that comfort and strengthen me and brighten my often gloomy way. I have a family of sons and daughters who all love its pages, and I feel that I can place no better paper before them than THE UNION SIGNAL."

We are receiving notices from unions of the appointments of superintendents of literature, whose names we do not find on the list of UNION SIGNAL subscribers. Believing no woman can satisfactorily fill this position who does not take and read the official organ, we trust the presidents of unions will take this matter into consideration.

We wish again to call attention to the frequent loss of money in the mails, and as many complaints are reaching our office, we urgently request our patrons to forward to us checks or postoffice orders in settlements of all accounts.



We are having some inquiries for the World's Minutes and the address given by the World's president at Toronto. At the request of Miss Agnes Slack we ask that all orders be sent to her at Ripley, Derbyshire, England. She will forward them to any address postpaid for thirty-five cents per copy.

15,000 Packages to be Given to All Who Apply—John A. Smith and His Remarkable Rheumatism Cure.

THE FIRST TEST AND WHAT IT LED TO

Cured Himself First, Then His Friends and Neighbors and Now Proposes to Cure the World.

JOHN A. SMITH, MILWAUKEE, WIS.

On the theory that "seeing is believing" John A. Smith of Milwaukee wants everyone to first try his remedy for the cure of rheumatism, at his expense. To that end, he proposes to distribute 15,000 free sample packages to all persons sending him their name and address. Mr. Smith had for years suffered all the agony and torture of rheumatism, tried all the remedies known, and yet utterly failed to find relief.

At times he was so helpless that he had to take morphine and after considerable doctoring with leading physicians, who were unable to help him, he gave up in despair. He began studying into the causes of rheumatism and after much experimenting and repeated failure, he finally found a remedy which cured him in a few days. The result was so beneficial to his entire system and was such a glorious escape from the clutches of rheumatism that he called his new found remedy Gloria Tonic. Those of his friends, relatives and neighbors who were subject to rheumatism were next cured and Mr. Smith concluded he would offer his remedy to the world. But he found the task a difficult one. Nearly everybody had tried a hundred or more remedies, just as he did, and they couldn't be made to believe there was such a thing as a cure for rheumatism. But an old gentleman in Seguin, Tex., Mr. Bertram, wrote him saying if Mr. Smith would send him a sample he would try it, but as he had suffered forty-one years and wasted a fortune on advertised remedies he wouldn't buy anything more until he knew it was worth something. The sample was sent and the results were astonishing. He was completely cured. This gave Mr. Smith a new idea and ever since that time he has been sending free sample packages of Gloria Tonic to all who may apply. It cured H. Bucholz, 70 years old, of Norborne, Mo., after suffering 25 years. In Regina, N. W. Ter., Anton Bengert was laid up nine years. A sample of Gloria Tonic was the first relief he ever got and three boxes entirely cured him. Thomas Callahan of Harvard, Ills., suffered continuously four years and was cured by Mr. Smith's remarkable remedy. At Indian Ford, Wis., Friedericke Arnold aged 66 suffered 12 years. Nothing ever relieved her until she tried Gloria Tonic. She was cured completely. At Pittsburg, Ind., a druggist was cured after 33 years suffering. John Carston of Belton, Tex., had planned to give his wife a trip to Germany, but she was taken with an attack of rheumatism and the trip abandoned. But she tried a sample of Gloria Tonic, got some more, was cured and went to Europe rejoicing. She is a firm believer in Gloria Tonic. Mrs. Persohn of Amsterdam, N. Y., believes Providence directed her to Mr. Smith's remedy. She was nearly insane from the intense suffering from rheumatic pains and was entirely cured. Thousands of other instances could be related where this magical remedy has cured rheumatism. It is well worth anybody's time to send their name and address to Mr. Smith and he will send a trial package of Gloria Tonic absolutely free of charge. If you have a friend, or acquaintance, a neighbor or relative suffering from rheumatism send for a trial package and give it a test. It is a remarkable remedy and there is no question but what it will cure any case of rheumatism no matter how severe or of how long standing. Send your name and address to John A. Smith, 125 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

The supply of "Woman and Temperance" is gradually diminishing, only a limited edition having been ordered. Important.

If our friends and patrons would send all business letters direct to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, it would expedite filling their orders. In many instances letters sent to editors, treasurer, secretary, etc., do not reach the business office for several days, and goods which would otherwise have been shipped at once, are delayed, much to the annoyance of the person ordering. To avoid mistakes please name also both the town or city and state to which goods are to be shipped.

IN Hawaii there are 23,273 Protestants, 26,863 Catholics, 4,868 Mormons (polygamy is forbidden), 44,806 of Eastern creeds and 20,192 who declined to state their faith, or possessed none.

ONE of the leading men of the Liberal party made the statement, while presiding over a meeting to strengthen the candidacy of Henry Somers Somerset for Parliament, that at present they knew very little of Mr. Somerset, but they all revered his esteemed mother, Lady Henry Somerset, who had done much for the uplifting of fallen humanity. He was not aware, he said, of any one who had put herself to such inconvenience to help those who could not help themselves.

Great men differ on many important subjects; but distinguished scholars all agree that the

NEW FUNK & WAGNALLS

is incomparably superior to all other dictionaries of the English language. For example, we give the views of two of America's most celebrated public men:

HON. E. J. PHELPS,
President Cleveland's most trusted diplomatic representative.

"THE work is extremely well done throughout. I have no doubt that for general and practical purposes it is the best American dictionary now available."

"I AM confident that the published statements of Funk & Wagnalls Company, respecting the value of the Standard Dictionary, are not exaggerated."

CHARLES A. DANA,
President Cleveland's most aggressive journalistic antagonist.

SCHOLARSHIP HAS NO POLITICS!

It would be useless, in the limited space at our disposal, to attempt to put before our readers the many hundreds of commendations of the STANDARD DICTIONARY that came spontaneously from all sources, upon its first appearance. To those who wish to inform themselves fully as to the merits of this great work, we will cheerfully send printed matter containing full description. The following are characteristic expressions from competent authorities:

Harvard University: PROF. N. S. SHALER: "The Standard Dictionary will remain an enduring monument to the labor of its editors. I believe that it will come into general use in this community."

Harvard University: PROF. A. PRESTON PEABODY: "Will prove of invaluable service, and will last while the English language remains essentially unchanged."

University of Michigan (Ann Arbor): PROF. THOMAS M. COOLEY: "It justifies its name—Standard. . . . It is everything that could be desired."

Oxford University (England): F. MAX MÜLLER: "It is a rich mine of information, and shows how much can be achieved by co-operation if under careful supervision."

A. Conan Doyle, the eminent English Novelist, London: "It has become quite a joke with us that we can not trip up this dictionary. We have several times been sure that we would, but have always failed."

Oxford University (England): PROF. A. H. SAYCE, the eminent Philologist: "The Standard Dictionary is truly magnificent, and worthy of the great continent which has produced it. It is more than complete. . . . It is certain to supersede all other existing dictionaries of the English language."

Henry M. Stanley, the African Explorer: "The Standard Dictionary comes nearer to my idea of a first-class dictionary than any of the kind I have seen."

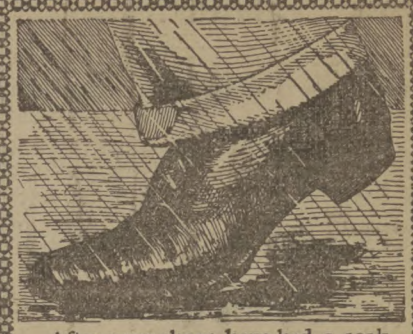
The New York Herald: "We are free to pronounce it the most complete and most satisfactory dictionary yet printed. . . ."

Johns Hopkins University: PROF. WILLIAM HAND BROWNE: "In accuracy, clearness, and fulness it surpasses all similar works."

Sir Edwin Arnold: "A noble piece of work, destined to be most useful. . . . Everywhere copious, erudite, and reliable."

The Irish Times, Dublin: "It is a monument of American learning and industry. . . . From the publication of the Standard Dictionary, America may date a new period of the country's history."

Brown University: PRES. E. BENJAMIN ANDREWS: "I believe that this Dictionary essentially fulfils the high ideal of its projectors. It is an out-and-out new product, and not, like our old dictionaries, the result of patching and amendment, little by little the different pieces often added by many, many minds."



Yale University: T. R. LOUNSBURY, Professor of English: ". . . The work deserves the fullest success, and I doubt not will meet with it."

Gen. James Grant Wilson: "It should, and it would seem will, become what its title indicates, THE STANDARD. I deem it the best English Dictionary published."

Edward Everett Hale, D.D.: "It is the blessing of our breakfast table. I have been surprised at the fulness and accuracy which show themselves to anybody who uses it constantly."

REMEMBER that these Commendations were written after a comparison of the STANDARD with all other Dictionaries now in existence. The full number of words and terms in these dictionaries for the entire alphabet is as follows: Stormonth, 50,000; Worcester, 105,000; Webster (International) 125,000; Century (six volumes complete), 225,000; Standard, over 300,000. In so important a field as the spelling, pronunciation, and definition of the words that make up our vocabulary, it is not worth while to have in your library, or on your study table, a book of reference that is not up to date and authoritative. It is most desirable to be able to consult an unquestioned authority; and such is the STANDARD DICTIONARY. Sent, carriage prepaid, to any address in the United States on receipt of price, $12.00; or $12.75 with Patent Thumb Index.

Notes and Comments.

AMONG the pardons granted on Christmas day, by President McKinley, was one issued to a young man upon recommendation of the judge who tried him, on the ground that the crime was committed while under the influence of liquor. Doubtless many thousands of our criminals might sue for pardon for a similar reason. We make no criticism on the President's leniency, but we do condemn the political policy which makes President, judge, jury, criminal and every old party voter partners in the drink business.

SECRETARY of the Navy Long says (in attempted vindication of his navy-yard saloon policy) that "prohibition would be of little value if limited to a few acres of land on the edge of a great city and surrounded by a cordon of rum shops." Prohibition states, and prohibition districts in liquor-selling states have found out long ago that the measure of failure attending the enforcement of prohibitory law is due to the active operations of the liquor business on every side, and often to the traffic as carried on by Uncle Sam himself within the boundaries of the prohibitory district.

THE young women of Kansas University have formally and publicly taken a stand against the practice of liquor-drinking at parties given by the members of the different fraternities. Thirty-five of them, reinforced by a few of the wives of the faculty, met for action. They bound themselves individually and their fraternities to leave the next party in a body the moment the odor of liquor should be detected, a signal given by the one who discovers it to be a peremptory sign to the young women to go home. Such manifestation of independence, of grace and grit, is only what might be expected of young women reared in the healthy atmosphere of a prohibition and woman suffrage commonwealth.

THE senatorial contest in Ohio has been made conspicuous by some of the most disgraceful demonstrations of party and personal rancor the country has ever witnessed, even in these days of frantic scrambling for the crumbs of political patronage. Mark Hanna escaped defeat by the "skin of his teeth," as it were. He wins the senatorial toga by just one majority. So close was the race between the Hanna and anti-Hanna forces, so universal and so intense the political excitement, that the bosses and their emissaries widened their sphere of labor to include not only the representatives themselves, but their wives and children, their relations and friends and neighbors; and one of the unique features of the situation was the vigorous manner in which women took a hand in the fight. It is plain to be seen that while politicians may, for a time, keep women out of the polling booth, nothing and nobody can keep them out of politics when they decide they ought to be in.

OF the general mix-up-edness of the two dominant political parties Ohio furnishes the latest illustration. The House has a republican majority of fifteen, but as a result of the plotting and planning of the "Kurtz combine" against Mr. Hanna, that body was given into the hands of the democrats. Further, Mayor McKisson, of Cleveland, appearing before the democratic caucus as fusion candidate for the United States Senate, pledged himself, though "publicly, and before the people a republican, to stand if elected upon the Chicago platform." And the democrats, evidently of the opinion that a democratic rose with a republican name smells just as sweet, declared then and there for the half-and-half politician. The two old parties are fast approaching the condition of the illustrious twins of whom it is related their friends were unable to tell "t'other from which or which from t'other," and unless they hasten to adopt some distinguishing label, there is danger of the same deplorable fate overtaking them.

IN accordance with instructions issued by the Canadian government, a bill will be submitted to the present session of parliament providing for a Dominion plebiscite on the question of prohibition, the vote to be taken at such time as can be agreed upon, probably in October. The liquor interests desire that the question be submitted in three-fold form, thus: 1. Are you in favor of the total prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors? 2. Are you in favor of compensation to manufacturers and venders of liquor in the event of prohibition? 3. Are you in favor of direct taxation to recoup the treasury for the loss of revenue consequent upon prohibition? Prohibitionists, of course, want a vote upon the first question unincumbered by side issues. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has, it appears, been inclined to favor the more complex form, but the temperance party is strong in Canada, and it is thought he will, after further study of the subject, change his mind.

DISCUSSING the question, who is responsible for that product of city civilization, Chris Merry, the wife-murderer,—a leading Chicago paper argues that as between heredity and society, the latter is the guilty party. The people themselves, it says, are to blame for the environment which developed the criminal tendencies transmitted from the drunken father, who was also a product of Chicago civilization. Both grew up, we are told, in surroundings where "a saloon is the common rendezvous, a drink the commonest form of social pleasure." That there is analogy between the social and individual organisms, no thinking person will deny, but the sweeping assertion that "the conscience and will of the people of Chicago are typified in a saloon-keeper who sits in the common council and helps make laws," is only half true. The saloon alderman represents only one-half the will and conscience of Chicago. The other half is as yet an unknown quantity in the councils of the municipality. The writer whom we quote believes that "Every society has the criminals it deserves," and that the man Merry, under arrest for killing his wife "as a wild animal might snap at something which disturbed its comfort or its temper," and the man Luetgert, charged with boiling his wife's body in a vat, are only part of Chicago's just deserts. Yes, every member of society is more or less to blame for its criminals, but it should be remembered that were there no drink traffic there would be no dramshop, no saloon aldermen, and that the citizen who perpetuates by his vote and the newspaper which supports by its influence the legalized cause of saloon environment and saloon-made laws are infinitely more to blame than the citizen who by vote and influence works to abolish it.

Christian People Protest Against the Sale of Liquor in Library Building.

[Special Correspondence.]

ON the afternoon of January 9, one of the largest auditoriums in the city was filled to overflowing with an intelligent and patriotic audience who met in the interest of the bill now pending in Congress forbidding the sale of liquors in government buildings. The meeting was held in Foundry M. E. church, Rev. Lucian Clark, D. D., pastor. Enthusiasm ran high, as was testified by the rapt attention to the eloquent utterances of the speakers, and the frequent applause. Arguments of the strongest kind were presented in favor of the bill.

The meeting was called by the W. C. T. U., but participated in by clergymen of all denominations. Mrs. M. B. Platt, the District president, presided. Addresses were made by Rev. L. B. Wilson, presiding elder of the Washington district of M. E. churches, Rev. A. S. Fiske, D. D., of Gunton Presbyterian church, Rev. Samuel H. Beiler, vice Chancelor of the American University, and Rev. Walter H. Brooks, the eloquent temperance orator, who represented the colored race. Rousing prohibition hymns were sung by the Central Union Mission Quartet, with Percy S. Foster, leader of the Moody choir, as organist.

Letters were read from Bishop Satterlee, of the Episcopal church, Rev. B. L. Whitman, president of Columbian University, Rev. Teunis S. Hamlin, D. D., Rev. E. J. Rankin, president of Howard University, Rev. Samuel H. Greene, Rev. J. J. Muir and Rev. Mr. Stevenson, of the Baptist clergy, Rev. J. G. Butler, and Rev. C. H. Butler, of the Lutheran denomination, Rev. J. E. Font, of the United Brethren, Rev. H. R. Nailor, and others of the Methodist church.

Rev. Lucian Clark, the pastor of the church, presented the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

"Resolved, That this meeting representing the Christian people of the District of Columbia, urgently request the superintendent and the librarian of the new National Library not to permit the sale of wine and beer in any part of the Library Building."

Rev. Samuel H. Beiler was selected, together with the general officers of the District W. C. T. U., to convey copies of this resolution to Mr. Young, the librarian, and Mr. Green, the superintendent of the building.

LATER.—Prompt and concerted action has, in this case, won a victory for temperance, and there will be no liquor sold in the National Library building for the present, at least. Such an overwhelming protest, leveled at the proper persons, has accomplished this fact, and it now remains for Bill No. 1 to be passed, which prohibits the sale of liquor in all government buildings.

Ballington Booth on Temperance.

A FRIEND sends us the following extract from an address given by Commander Ballington Booth, of the American Volunteers, at Washington, D. C., on January 9. He said:

"Though not a Prohibitionist in party, I am a strict Prohibitionist in practice, and if through the Volunteers I ever control any part of this country, I will there have prohibition enforced."

He quoted the voice of the New York Tribune and the London Times as condemning the liquor traffic, and also the opinions of eminent statesmen.

"The London Times declares that 'if we do not finish this evil, it will finish us,' and Supreme Justice Davis says that 'eighty per cent of the crime in this country comes from intemperance.'"

"I have clasped the hand of many a poor fellow through prison bars, who has cried to me, 'God knows it was drink that brought me here.'"

Education.

THE Massachusetts Institute of Technology starts off grandly in 1898 with the new president, James M. Crafts, and gifts aggregating $1,000,000, which means a new building worthy the institution.

IN 1869 fifty-five per cent of the teachers of England were women; now eighty per cent are women.

THE teachers of Syracuse, N. Y., have determined to start a retirement or pension fund. For this purpose they have set apart one per cent of their salaries, making an annual sum of $2,800.

A NEW $5,000 scholarship has been established at Mount Holyoke College. The money is the gift of Miss Helen Gould, of New York, in memory of her mother, Mrs. Jay Gould. There are no restrictions imposed, and the college authorities will award the scholarship as they see fit.

THE King of Siam, through his New York consul, J. Townsend Smith, has presented the library of the University of Chicago with a valuable set of books on the history of New Amsterdam. A similar set has been given to several of the more prominent universities through the generosity of the Oriental ruler.

PRESIDENT HARPER, of the University of Chicago, in his last convocation address, proposed the establishment in Chicago of a teachers' college, to be located and conducted so that teachers in the city schools might attend and work for a degree without interfering with their daily occupations. This suggestion is an outgrowth of the University Extension work which has been carried on by the university with so much success.

Temperance.

THE Grand Field Council of the Volunteers of America have decided that a temperance meeting must be held every Saturday night in all their posts throughout the United States. Temperance speakers and workers will be welcomed to these meetings.

THE coroner's jury at Wolseley, Canada, brought in a verdict holding four men responsible for the death of Mr. James Fleming, who was thrown from his rig while intoxicated. Two of the men had furnished him the liquor and the other two had put him in the rig and started him off for home alone, knowing he was helplessly drunk.

VIRGINIA has a law forbidding the sale of intoxicating liquors to students in the state University "and all other institutions of learning." A bill has just been overwhelmingly defeated in the senate, the design of which was to repeal the vital points of this law. Senator Morris, who introduced it, was the only one who voted for it, and nearly every college in the state protested against the proposed repeal.

THE manufacturing and wholesaling of liquor became lawful in Dubuque, Iowa, on January 12, when the supervisor granted the petition filed by the brewers and wholesale liquor-dealers under the amended mulct law. They are now not only safe from prosecution, but can maintain suits in court to collect bills. This protection does not extend to the saloon-keepers, as, beyond paying the tax, they make no pretense of compliance with the law.

ABOUT 1,000 people attended the sessions of the National and state conventions of the Anti-Saloon League which opened at Columbus, O., on January 12. The secretary reported that last year ninety-six different bodies were affiliated with the Anti-Saloon League, and that during the coming year he would place state superintendents in Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland and Massachusetts. Officers were elected as follows: President, Hiram Price, Iowa. Vice-presidents, Rev. Dr. L. B. Wilson, Washington; Most Rev. John Ireland, D. D., Minnesota; W. T. Tilley, Pennsylvania; Bishop B. W. Arnett, (colored) Ohio; Rev. Dr. P. S. Henson, Chicago; Rev. Dr. B. B. Tyler, New York city; Rev. Dr. Newman Smythe, Connecticut. Superintendent, Rev. Howard H. Russell, Ohio. Secretary, James L. Ervin, Washington. Treasurer, J. W. Cummings, New York city. Resolutions were adopted condemning the interpretation of the law by public officials which permitted wine and beer in the capitol restaurants, requesting President McKinley to refrain from using liquors in state dinners, and condemning the sale of liquor in the Indian reservations. The board of control selected Cleveland, O., as the place for the next national convention.

About Women.

DESPATCHES from Fairmount, W. Va., state that after nearly a year of unsuccessful effort on the part of the local preachers to drive away evil resorts by legal means, the women of the town have inaugurated a crusade which they propose to keep up to a finish.

THE death is announced of Mrs. Rebecca D. Rickoff, a well-known author of school books. Mrs. Rickoff was the wife of Dr. Andrew J. Rickoff, a well-known educator. In collaboration with her husband and Dr. William T. Harris, the present United States commissioner of education, she published the Appleton series of readers, being the author of Appleton's charts, chart primers and first and second readers.

MISS HELEN LONG, daughter of the Secretary of the Navy, will name the first Japanese warship to be launched in the United States. The ceremony will take place at Cramp's shipyards on January 20. The cruiser is to be named Kasagi, and for the first time there will be a departure from the custom of naming the craft in the contents of a bottle of wine. Instead, she will be named according to the beautiful Japanese custom. As she glides into the water Miss Long will pronounce her name, loosen a silken bag and release a white pigeon, a bird which is held sacred by the Japanese in such ceremonies.

At Home.

MAJOR MOSES P. HANDY, a prominent Chicago journalist and United States commissioner for the Paris Exposition to be held in 1900, died at Augusta, Ga., on January 10.

THE annual report of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. is to the effect that the year just closed has been the most prosperous in the history of the association. The total paid membership of the city is 5,128.

WISCONSIN liquor dealers have appealed to Dairy and Food Commissioner Adams under the new pure food and drug law, asking him to protect them from competitors who sell inferior goods by imitating their labels.

Two score of human lives were lost, as many more persons were seriously injured, and upward of $1,000,000 worth of property was destroyed by a terrible tornado which burst upon Fort Smith, Ark., on the night of January 11.

A COMMITTEE appointed from the Illinois senate has, for a week past, been conducting an investigation into the methods of the Chicago police force and the policy of the civil service commission by which police appointments are made. The inquiry so far has revealed an astounding array of facts detrimental to a great many of the men who are paid to "protect" the city. Blackmail has been levied on disreputables of every class and vice has flourished with official approval. Whatever the political motive may be that prompted the inquiry, the result is startling enough to promulgate a reform.

Abroad.

M. BERLIER, a well-known French engineer, has submitted to Spain and Morocco a project for tunneling the Straits of Gibraltar.

A VERY severe shock of earthquake was experienced over the whole of North Island and as far south as Christ Church, New Zealand, early in the morning of December 8. Its duration was from one to two minutes.

PROFESSOR NORDENSKJOLD, the Arctic explorer, has informed the Swedish Academy of Science that the Foreign office has received intelligence that several persons worthy of credence saw Professor Andree's balloon early in August in British Columbia, seven miles north of Quesnelle Lake, in the district of Cariboo.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Associated Press at Delagoa Bay, writes that Bishop Hartzell of the Methodist Episcopal church is being received with the greatest cordiality during his tour of Africa. He has been offered concessions in land and other valuable properties for missionary purposes. One donation includes six thousand acres under the British flag in a mountainous and healthy region.

My Friends.

BY MRS. S. L. OBERHOLTZER.

MY many friends, I love them
With love that is firm and true.
Life is love; and its purpose
The good that we can do.

They as mirrors reflect me;
I see in their faces mine.
Life is a glass; the smiles we shed
In other faces shine.

The love, the faith, the kindness
Of human hearts is great;
The loving ties of friendship
With years accumulate.

Of life they are the sunlight,
The glorious daily rays
Chasing the dews and shadows
Into forgotten ways.

Friendships and friends reflect me;
I love and they love me true;
Together we move and live for
The good that we can do.

My Baby Sleeps.

BY IRENE FOCKLER-HALLOWELL.

MY baby sleeps,
—Not cradled on my breast,
But daisied turf above him pressed.

My baby sleeps,
Not rocked to rest in snowy white,
But curtained close by starry night!

My baby sleeps,
Oh, not in churchyard's sullen gloom,
But lulled to rest in deathless bloom,
My baby sleeps.

Michael James.

In Four Chapters.

BY MAX JOHANN, M. D.

CHAPTER III.

THE next morning Margaret packed a basket for Katie and I carried it to her early, before I started on my professional rounds, that I might make an appeal to Michael James before he visited Tim Burns'. I talked him into a kind of half-drunken promise—though I believe it was as much a result of his desire to get rid of me as of his skin-deep remorse—that he'd "niver touch the vile stuff moore." Three hours afterward, returning from my rounds, I saw him come staggering out of Tim Burns'. Again? No, only the same old condition. He had not been soundly sober for four months.

After this the Frau had Katie at our house always on Tuesday to assist our Chrissy, for whose unaided hands the washday duties were growing heavy, and again later in the week if there was extra work on hand. On these occasions she always brought Mamie and Jamesie with her, not daring to trust them to the uncertain freaks of their father. She never failed to bring also the tin dinner-pail of happier days, for which there was now no other use; and the wistful independence with which she tried to refuse for the children the warm meals which Margaret insisted they should share with their mother was pitiful to see. We learned afterward that she always prepared an evening meal for Michael James as nearly like what she had had at our house as her earnings would permit, eating coarser food herself. "He niver wanted better nur me afoore it kem upon him," she explained, "an' I won't ate better nur him now."

At the suggestion of my wife, its treasurer, the Van Buren Female Charitable Society voted ten dollars to the relief of the McGees. With a small portion of the gift Katie paid part of her coal bill, and, notwithstanding the fact that Michael James had driven herself and children out of doors the night before, and muttering dire threats for the morrrow had staggered off bent on an all night's carouse, trotted off down to the police court with the rest of the money and paid his seven-dollar fine for being "drunk and disorderly." Then she led him maudlinly remorseful, back to the bare shelter where nothing but the omnipotence of mother-love—the plunging weakling at her side was the most helpless child of all her flock—could have maintained a home.

I was impatient. "That's the Irish of it," I said.

"That's the woman of it," said Margaret.

So the poor Frau had to go before the V. B. F. C. S. and give an account of its ten dollars handed over to her protégée, Katie McGee. Mrs. Selthurst, the second director, said it was "just such want of common sense on the part of the poor that made charitable societies necessary," and when Mrs. Hart, the secretary, modestly, as became an officer who was poor and could give nothing but services, suggested that, since Katie couldn't be trusted with money, the society send her coal or flour, Mrs. Geldstein, the first director, said that "If Mrs. McGee were a widow"—as if she were not a hundred times worse than widowed—"it would be a duty and a privilege to assist her, but to take the burden of his family's support off a husband who was able to work, was actually paying a premium upon dissipation." This she said with the impressiveness of one who is able to give largely and whose opinions merit, therefore, instant adoption. So she decided Katie's case.

The next Monday when Katie went to her day's washing at Mrs. Selfhurst's, that lady, by way of admonition, but with doubtful delicacy, repeated to her the speeches I have recorded, and a few unpleasant echoes of them besides. Katie, pursuing her avocation at our house next day, said:

"I wanted her work, ma'am, or I'd ha' minded her that it's hersilf that's rintin' to Tim Burns the place where he kapes his s'loon. The s'loons kin pay big rint, ma'am, but as I've towld ye befoore—ye'll excuse me sayin' it over—it's the price of the bread an' the coals fur mesilf an' Mamie an' little Jamesie here an' manny like us—moore's the pity—that's payin' Tim Burns' rint money. We wasn't wantin' charity, ma'am, till since thim s'loons has been starin' at me man an' beckonin' to him day an' night—an' he wid the whisky-loving blood of no knowin' how manny ginerations jist ragin' in his veins."

We thought that Michael James must be a little worse off than ordinarily that day, for neither Chrissy's wholesome sympathy nor her mistress' hopeful words, nor the practical benevolence of little Gretchen, who filled the children's pail with cookies and home-made confections, could smooth out the lines which care and terror had cut into her face.

It was a dull day and darkness settled early. I had intended to go out that evening, but our sitting-room, comfortable and snug and bright with the dear home faces, beguiled me, and when a driving rainstorm began to dash its persuasives against the windows I yielded weakly and settled myself for a cozy evening at home.

Shortly I heard a splash of footsteps before the house and felt glad that they passed the office and went round to the back door. "Chrissy's friend is brave," said the Frau, and smiled; and I smiled too, thinking of a time when I was brave. But it was not Chrissy's friend, at least not the devoted swain we had in mind; it was Katie and her children, and Chrissy ushered them into the office.

Two dripping figures, Katie, with Mamie sobbing and clinging to her dress, stood by my table as I entered.

"It's Jamesie, doctor, an' I fear he's hurted bad," said the woman, her face pallid and her hands working nervously at the baby's numerous wraps. While I examined the child's injuries she talked as only a frightened Irish woman can talk. I could not listen to it all, but the burden of it was: "He was crazy—he didn't know what he was doin'," and so I knew that Jamesie owed a broken arm and a dislocated shoulder to his father's drunken frenzy.

I restored the tortured little bones to their places and applied the lotions and bandages, Katie watching me meanwhile with distressed eyes, not quite trusting me, I fear, or at least jealous lest I should cause her darling a twinge of unnecessary pain. But when I let the Frau assist me I could see that she unclinched her hands and breathed more naturally, as if she could trust the blessed mother-heart that makes all mothers kin. It was Margaret, too, who discovered that Katie herself needed my ministrations almost as much as her little boy had done; for she carried upon her flesh, soft and white as Jamesie's own, great livid tokens of a madman's kicks and blows.

"He lost his timper entirely, sir," she explained, making as light as she could of her husband's fiendishness, "because I wouldn't promise to sign again. But I didn't promise till he begun to chuck Jamesie about."

It was only her fear for her children that made her yield to our entreaties to stay with us until morning; and when daylight came she was up and determined to go though the rain still poured. Kind-hearted Chrissy prepared for them the best breakfast which their haste permitted her, but Mamie was the only one who did it justice.

I knew that Katie didn't want me to go home with her. She would face her danger alone rather than expose Michael James to my upbraidings, for she felt that I was full of wrath. We almost forced her into my carriage.

"Ye'll not be hard on Michael James, doctor," she entreated when we came into sight of her home. "Sure, sir, he's the kindliest craythur you could find, on'y fur the dhrink. It's not him that's to blame, sir, it's the divil of owld Mike McGee that's tearin' through his blood." Ah, tender and true-hearted Katie! Not a word of bruised and quivering flesh, not a word of days of toil and nights of terror, only "Ye'll not be hard on Michael James!"

Arrived at her door we found it fast. Some one brought us the key and explained that the master of the house had been arrested and locked up the night before and a neighbor had fastened up the house.

My wife that morning discoursed of paralysis of will power in quite a professional way; she had been "reading up."

"Max," she said later in the day, "I am going to Jefferson on the 2:15." Jefferson is a little town twenty-five miles distant, in which was held a monthly meeting of the officers and stockholders of a manufacturing enterprise in which I had an interest. So I said, "Why not wait and go with me the last of the month?"

"I can not, Max. I'm going to make one more effort to save Michael James. I am going to see my old friend, Mr. Berry, and ask him to take Michael James to work for him and give him a chance to reform. Mr. Berry boards his own men, and poor Michael James would be kept out of temptation, especially as Jefferson has banished its saloons under the local option law. The busy season is approaching, Mr. Berry will need extra hands, and I am sure that I can persuade him to give Michael James a trial."

"If, Margaret, men had been endowed with womanly perseverance, the Michael Jameses would not have the saloons to point to as an excuse for their brutality."

She winced a little for she had little censure for Michael James, almost taking the ground where Katie stood so firmly; and brutality was a harsh synonym for delirium. She winced, I say, for, though man and wife may learn to hold different opinions with perfect peace of mind, they can not learn it in twenty years, which is all the time that Margaret and I have had. But she laid a persuasive hand upon my shoulder and, taking it into mine in the fashion of twenty years ago, I answered "yes" to the request in her eyes before she gave it voice: "If I succeed with Mr. Berry, will you help me get Michael James to Jefferson?"

She came home triumphant, and I went to find her protégé. He was still in the hands of the officers, tearful, demonstratively remorseful, but he would not consent to go to Jefferson. He wanted to "thry ag'in," he said. I reasoned and exhorted to no purpose until Katie, whose despondent heart Margaret had fortified with some of her own hopefulness, added her entreaties, then he gave in. I went for him next day, took him to his home and waited for him to make the small preparation necessary for his journey. I did not intend to let him out of my sight until I had seen him safe in Mr. Berry's care; but when he came to his good-by to Jamesie, and took the little peaked face between his rough hands, his remorseful look was more than I wanted to see, and I went and busied myself with Beppo until he came out. I took him to Jefferson and left him with our friend, a philanthropist who is willing to advance society at large by advancing the individual.

The twenty-ninth of the month found me again in Jefferson attending the meeting as was my custom. I asked after "my wife's protégé." I had not the courage to call him "ours," and Mr. Berry told me where I could find him. I was prepared to see him look badly, but there was a look of agonizing solicitude upon his face that I was not prepared for, and that drove the last thought of censure from my heart. He found something far-off to look at when he inquired for Jamesie. He was "getting on finely" I told him —for the sturdy little fellow had responded manfully to my treatment—and then Michael James stooped to pick up something—a pebble—but it took him a long time to do it, for he must needs run the back of his hand across his eyes a few times. Then he produced from some de profundis of a pocket something wrapped in a bit of newspaper, and asked me to see that Katie got it.

"It's sivin dollars an' thirty cints," he said, "an' ef it'll not inconvaynance ye, sir, will ye sind it to her the morrow,—it's the 30th they're tellin' me, an' mabby it'll be like a bit of a burruthday prisint fur 'er." Consulting his books afterwards, Berry told me that it was every penny he had earned since he had been there over and above his board.

Michael James kept his place; and every month I interviewed him, always taking back with me a sum sufficient for the expenses of Katie's modest household, which I was to "kape by me till the 30th." I was generally commissioned, too, with a request that "Katie would bide at home now wid the childher an' not waken hersilf wid washin' abroad. An' sure, sir," he would add with simple pride, "ef Mamie was here she could write that same in a letther an' I'd not be botherin' ye to remimber it."

"The fellow is the most indefatigable worker I have ever seen," said Berry to me one day, "he's always doing some kind of overwork, cleaning sidewalks, digging gardens, beating carpets—anything in the world that he can find to do. I don't see how he gets hold of so many odd jobs; and he bothers me to death bringing to me his odd quarters and half-dollars and wanting to know the aggregate. He picks up quite a sum, too. See, here is his book; it represents, I believe, every cent that he has earned since he has been here, excepting his board and what he sends home. He is so confoundedly stingy that he won't clothe himself decently. Actually my wife has taken to drawing upon my wardrobe in his interest, which is great extravagance, seeing the difference in our size." (Berry weighs two hundred and fifty pounds.) "His 'Katie' sent him some good, new shirts last week, and thus deprived my children of a never-failing source of amusement. He sleeps in one of the rooms over the carriage house, and they never wanted any better fun than to go out and watch him sew patches on his shirts. They'd chaff him in a way that would have made any other man furious; but he'd take it all in good part. He's faithful and trusty as a hound, and a fair workman, but he certainly is a niggard."

BY LILIAN F. LEWIS.

PART I.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

CONSERVATIVE BROTHER.—I recall as controverting your total abstinence teaching an eloquent, convincing sermon on the text, "Brethren, ye have been called unto liberty."

WHITE-RIBBONER.—Taken from one of our stronghold chapters! After denouncing troublers of such as stand for the truth, Paul writes what you repeated, adding, "Only use not your liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another, for the law is fulfilled in one word, even this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"; then proceeds, "Walk in the spirit and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh," naming temperance as the fruit of the spirit and drunkenness among the works of the flesh. You who make Paul your criterion, should exemplify his instruction to "Take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumbling-block to them that are weak," and mindful of his teaching, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor," take his pledge, "Wherefore if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no meat while the world standeth; lest I make my brother to offend."

C. B.—Critically speaking, does eating no meat signify drinking no wine?

W. R.—Not in the letter but in the spirit of its law—marginal reference carrying to the statement, "It is good neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine, whereby thy brother stumbleth or is offended or is made weak." Then the counsel, "Be not among wine-bibbers, among riotous eaters of flesh," and the caution (I Peter 5: 8, as taken from Hebrew text and Koran translation), "Drink not, be vigilant, for your adversary seeketh whom he may drink down," commend to total abstinence.

C. B.—The danger signal, I take it, waves for me to save my brother, not being myself at all a slave to the cup or in the enemy's power.

W. R.—But in the enemy's path. Schiller asserts, "The iron chain and the silken cord, both equally are bonds." Freed from each, it will cost small effort or sacrifice to "eschew evil and do good," by practicing total abstinence. "If sinners entice thee, consent thou not; refrain thy foot from their path." "Thus saith the Lord, seek and ask for the old paths, where is the good way and walk therein."

C. B.—Yet you modestly maintain the new path of your making the only and wholly right way! "Consistency, thou art a jewel!"

W. R.—Shakespeare's utterance might apply differently—his wisdom having shown the consistency to call the invisible spirit of wine "devil," and to protest, "Oh, that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains." Total abstinence, as Father Mathew claims, "is not a novelty nor an innovation; strong drink is the innovation and was no sooner introduced than men were led astray by it." Therefore recorded the temperance pledge of the Nazarenes and the Rechabites and shining character-examples of total abstainers in early sacred history. "The best evidence that God is on our side is the devil's growl," which total abstinence and prohibition principles undeniably provoke.

C. B.—If recognizing it my personal duty to abstain, what business of mine whether others acknowledge it theirs? To be biblical, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

W. R.—"It is not good to accept the person of the wicked to overthrow the righteous in judgment." That is an unchristian query. The Lord's first question to man, "Where art thou?" is followed in the next chapter by "Where is thy brother?" Cain replying, "I know not, am I my brother's keeper?" God answered, "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me." Where art thou? seems embodied in Solomon's charge, "Look not thou upon the wine," and "Where is thy brother?" is that of following chapter. "If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death and those that are ready to be slain, if thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not, He that keepeth thy soul, doth not He know it? And shall not He render to every man according to his works?" Paul recognized this dual duty, proclaiming, "Every man shall bear his own burden," coupled with the mandate, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." Because "no man liveth unto himself," not only regulation of one's own life but education of others to that doctrine, is in the interest of fellowman. First, "Why stand ye in jeopardy?" Get into position of safety, and then, second, "Why do ye sit still?" Get into position of service for the safety of others. "Prepare the way, take up the stumbling-block out of the way of my people." We are obligated to "war a good warfare" for the truth.

C. B.—Howbeit, your own members, designating temperance work God's and not man's fight, urge to "rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him," or pray the victory in.

W. R.—"Faith without works is dead," therefore, "to every man his work." True, "the effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous availeth much;" but righteousness involves obedience to the Christ-command, "Occupy till I come," and the apostolic injunction to "be instant in season and out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine—do the work of an evangelist," as co-laborers with God, "redeeming the time because the days are evil." Too often Christian leaders present the half truth or emphasize divine teaching in misdivided part to the subversion of the full text or its context meaning. A specious inertia theology drawn from Moses' solace to the complaining Israelites, "Fear ye not, stand still and see the salvation of the Lord; the Lord shall fight for you, and ye shall hold your peace," comes from not proceeding to note, "And the Lord said unto Moses, Wherefore criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." Daniel teaches, "The people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits," and Amos, "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion—that put away the evil day and cause the seat of violence to draw near."

C. B.—To return to the question of interfering with another's concerns. Don't put it "interfering," but "interesting" yourself in what concerns others.

C. B.—However "put," you can not compel acceptance of your views. Why, then, thrust your opinions where not wanted nor likely to be heeded?

W. R.—Follow Paul's example, who, before Felix, fearlessly "reasoned of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come." We can not save men, but can preach the way of salvation unto them. Ezekiel gives God's commission, "Thou shalt speak my words unto them, whether they will hear or whether they will forbear," explaining in the thirty-third chapter, "Wherefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth and warn them from me. When I say unto the wicked, 'Oh, wicked man, thou shalt surely die,' if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked man from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand. Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn him from it, if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity, but thou hast delivered thy soul."

C. B.—Your look and tone might well strike terror to the heart.

W. R.—It is a solemn message, ever leading me to pray it may not be mine in the day of judgment to hear God say, "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me," but rather, "She hath done what she could," and I so earnestly desire you shall hear, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

C. B.—As someone exclaimed after Paul's bold preaching, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian," I confess almost thou persuadest me to total abstinence.

W. R.—I reply, as did the apostle to King Agrippa, "I would to God thou wert both almost and altogether as I am except these bonds." Altogether as I am, that is, both a total abstainer and prohibitionist; "except these bonds," that is, free from fetters which preclude from franchise essential to effect most practical temperance reform or results.

C. B.—Don't spoil "whereunto you have already attained" by debating prohibition and woman suffrage!

W. R.—I recall the Master's words, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye can not bear them now." Therefore, "this one thing I do," entreat that you take the pledge, "for the truth's sake, which dwelleth in us and shall be with us forever."

C. B.—I am willing to take Paul's pledge because of some weak brother. As a strictly temperate indulger, I could see heretofore no reason to deprive myself of freedom to partake as I might please.

W. R.—"We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak and not to please ourselves"; in the temperance connection, though, we may lay too much stress upon the weakness of the victim overcome by strong drink, and not enough upon the subtlety and power of this "satan in solution" obtaining the mastery, since science and biography testify no absolute safety exists save on the high and dry ground of total abstinence. But if not for your own, you owe it according to Paul, "For His sake that shewed it and for conscience' sake."

C. B.—Ready to "follow the right as God gives me to see the right," I will sign here and now.

W. R.—"Blessed are the undefiled, who walk in the law of the Lord. Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to thy word."

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

THE past six weeks have been red-letter weeks in Willard Hall. Could you have looked into the faces of the hundreds sitting and standing, listening for nearly an hour with acutest interest to every word spoken by V. D. David and Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, you would say that God is using men as of old. I rejoice that the world is looking to Willard Hall. It would be a greater joy if the hungry-hearted of the world could catch the words of burning truth, which make the atmosphere of this room pregnant with holy power.

Thursday, January 6, was the annual day of prayer—from 10:30 A. M. to 3:30 P. M. Rev. Edith Hill Booker, National evangelist, led the first hour; subject, "Confession of Sin and Consecration," using Dan. 9:3-23.

Mrs. S. M. D. Fry, managing editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, led the second hour; subject, "More Love." The speaker, guided by the Master, led us out of self into the love born from above. Prayer for temperance workers that the baptism of the Holy Spirit will come upon the W. C. T. U.

Rev. J. Q. A. Henry had charge from 12:30 to 1:30; subject, "The Fullness of Christ." Special prayer for Christian ministers and church members, that the church may be emptied of worldliness. And even while he was speaking, the awakening began.

Mr. William R. Newell, of the Bible Institute, led from 1:30 to 2:30. He, too, led us beside the "still waters," and made each long more earnestly to be soul winners in the great field so white to the harvest.

The fifth and closing hour Mrs. Helen D. Harford, of Oregon, National organizer, had charge of the meeting. Subject, "Temperance and Righteousness." Prayer for the overthrow of the liquor traffic. Filled with her theme she inspired increased consecration to the work of casting out the demon licensed to destroy the souls and bodies of millions.

Miss Pratt sang two solos. All joined in gospel song, and this service, rich with holy joy, closed with the W. C. T. U. benediction.

Liquor-Selling in the National Library, Washington, D. C.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The liquor traffic has secured a foothold in the last and noblest building erected by the United States. The new National Library dedicated to learning with the "torch of knowledge ever burning," symbolized upon its golden dome. For beauty, richness and fitness to its purpose, it challenges the world. Visitors gaze with delight upon its carvings, sculptures, frescoes and mosaics. Its cost was six millions and it was ten years in building. In its architecture it is Italian Renaissance and a model of beauty and dignity. It has three stories and a dome and covers three and one-half acres. It is built of white granite from New Hampshire and has two thousand windows. Its interior is enriched by choice marbles, and artistic gems from the whole earth. The books it contains are a marvel and are the grandest sight after all. More than two hundred and thirty thousand running feet (about forty-four miles) of shelving now accommodate one million volumes. Here are found rare and nearly extinct books, exhibits of engravings and other works of art as well as the thousands of books that by the copyright law have been and are constantly being deposited there. The reading-room for the blind, the only one in the world, the copyright office; the Tower, Force and Jefferson collections, all combine to fill the beholder with reverence and aspirations toward high and noble things, as, from one of the tablets, we read Tennyson's lines:

"One God, one law, one element
And one far-off divine event
To which the whole creation moves."

We are glad that all this possibility of knowledge is for the people. Our youth here may gather wisdom, our children may inhale its atmosphere. Surely our sons and daughters here are safe. Yet pause! upon the third floor of this building there is a cafe and restaurant where intoxicating liquors are dispensed. A bar is in surreptitious operation. It exists without authority and has no sponsor "to own" it. Mr. Bernard R. Green, the superintendent of the building, has promulgated his intention that the café shall be conducted on a plan "commensurate with the dignity and purpose of the building; that whatever is done by way of selling liquor therein will be in harmony with the best practice in vogue in the restaurants of the Capitol building, on the same basis and subject to the same rules!"

Alas, the whole country now knows that the rule there is to sell intoxicating liquor to all who pay for it—old or young, black or white, the senator who makes our laws and the navvy who trundles the trucks. Sold, also, without a license. Yes, in direct defiance of the United States law that forbids the sale of liquor on government reservations. Besides this, the vulgarity of liquor selling is a blot upon the dignity of the building.

Mr. Geo. A. Mills, of Baltimore, has the contract for the restaurant, but he has no contract for furnishing wines and liquors; that could not be legally granted. The excise board of the District of Columbia do not and never have granted any license to sell intoxicating drink in any government building. The local liquor laws forbid its sale without a license. A license can not be obtained. It is openly permitted by the committee on rules in defiance of the people's will.

What is treason? Treason has been defined as "giving aid to the enemy of the king." Here there is no king, save the sovereign people. The liquor traffic is the enemy of the people. The people's enemy is aided and harbored where that traffic is permitted. Down with treason and those who aid and harbor it! The liquor traffic is an anarchist. It refuses to obey the laws.

The W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia was the first to obtain an inkling of the intention to have liquors sold beneath the beautiful dome. A delegation, consisting of Mrs. M. B. Platt, the president, Mrs. Clinton Smith, the vice-president-at-large, and Mrs. E. F. Shelton, the secretary, waited upon Mr. Green to respectfully inquire if it were true. In courteous language Mr. Green informed them that it was true, that permission had been granted to sell the best of liquors to customers of the café. "I thought of you ladies," said Mr. Green; "I remembered the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and determined that no objectionable and strong liquors should be sold. Only the best and most refined of wines, clarets, punches will be allowed."

He then made the statement that many make, that a restaurant would not prosper financially if these things were excluded, and that it would be impracticable to attempt it. How little the principles of the W. C. T. U. are understood by those who suppose wine, beer and the lighter alcoholics to be "unobjectionable."

Since our W. C. T. U. protest became public, many protests and petitions have been sent by local organizations to Superintendent Green, Librarian Young and President McKinley.

The C. E., E. L., Y. M. C. A. and some ministerial associations have taken steps in the same direction. The first and most telling of these was by the Reform Bureau, under its valiant superintendent, Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, to whom the local W. C. T. U. is indebted for constant encouragement, counsel and aid.

The Anti-Gambling Amendment in New Jersey.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—I found in September last that the gambling element were very buoyant over the prospect of defeating the amendment prohibiting, by a fundamental constitutional law, the further use of New Jersey as a paradise for gamblers!

Permit me to look back two or three years and recall the condition that confronted the good citizen when a suborned legislature gave the Duke of Gloucester the right to run the state as he pleased, with race-tracks galore and faro-bank attachments. It is said, on good authority, that it cost $165,000 to secure votes enough in the Senate of New Jersey to legalize gambling, to say nothing of the House, in which members were bought at a much lower figure!

Of course, the gamblers were afraid of the pulpits and the men who filled them. All this nefarious, disgraceful, rotten legislation (including the overriding of a friendly governor's veto by both houses) was accomplished between Monday evening and the next Saturday at noon.

Then the churches woke up, and at the elections next fall the gamblers and their allies were whipped. Would that I had space to tell how grand juries and sheriffs and common pleas courts were suborned and controlled in the interest of the gambling fraternity. To get rid of the "flowerpot judges" (so called) these common pleas judges were abolished by law; and but for the supreme court of New Jersey, whose conduct was as white as the ermine it wears, the arch gambler boss would have controlled the state for one year longer. But the supreme court very promptly declared the Thompson minority, who tried to rule a majority of eleven with a minority of ten votes, a "rump parliament," not deserving consideration; a thing of shreds and patches.

The laws now on the statute books against making the state a gamblers' thoroughfare are ironclad. But the gamblers are by no means idle. Year by year they try to gain, buy over or elect a legislature of their own kith and kin and kind. Good men thought it safest to put in the constitution of the state a perpetual injunction against the gamblers. Such an amendment was sent from a willing legislature to the people last fall, and to the consternation and disgust of the gambling element it was carried by over eight hundred majority!

Anthony Comstock says the gay Gamboliers spent a million of dollars to defeat the amendment. At least one preacher from his pulpit, in Trenton, N. J., declared the anti-gambling amendment a bad thing, but his own denomination quickly squelched their free and easy parson.

The gamblers' children of this world, and seemingly more cunning than the children of light, "planted" their money in the big cities like Newark, New Brunswick, Paterson and Camden, and here they ran up rousing majorities for their iniquitous, back-acting attempt to defeat a righteous amendment. But like the guest who "reckoned without his host," the gamblers fell into the pit they had digged for others!

For many days it seemed the people had lost the battle. But in ten days from the election the returns from the mountains came in. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union had done quiet but effective work all over the state. The hills of Sussex and Warren counties sent down to Trenton large majorities for the anti-gambling amendment. Burlington county, under the lead of Mrs. Budd, head of the W. C. T. U. in that county, astonished the gamblers by a big amendment majority from "Old Burlington."

In Salem county, where the W. C. T. U. has for a strong leader Mrs. Sallie H. Johnson, another rousing majority was sent up to Trenton from West Jersey; Cumberland county fell into line with the W. C. T. U. workers, and to their everlasting credit be it said, the deathless courage and patient energy of this grand organization gave the "Gamboliers" their Waterloo in New Jersey. Ever since the law-breakers and the race-track men have been groaning over their defeat. They tried to get Governor Griggs to hold back his official declaration that this amendment was part of the law of the land! But the governor, a clean, able statesman, declared the amendment a substantive fact, as passed, and it is now a part of the constitution.

Thirty-four years ago I sat at the fireside of Richard Cobden at Hazelmere in England. In speaking of our conflict (it was 1863), he said: "The North will win; the forces go with the virtues." No sentence ever impressed me more, and when I think of the great battle for the emancipation of woman and for the liberation of humanity, waged with resistless energy by the good women of this great land, I pause to say, "God speed these great hearts; their victory is sure, for the forces go with the virtues."

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes Explains.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—During my visit in the United States of America and Canada various paragraphs appeared in the American and Canadian newspapers with regard to the action of the Wesleyan Methodist conference of England, with reference to admitting any one connected with the liquor traffic to church membership. I shall be glad if you will kindly publish the enclosed letter, written to me by the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.

With affectionate greetings I am yours cordially, AGNES E. SLACK

Ripley, Derbyshire, Eng., Dec. 27, 1897.

DEAR MISS SLACK:—The facts are as follows: Some of the younger teetotal ministers moved at the last conference that all liquor sellers should be excluded, not from membership but from office, in the Wesleyan Methodist church in England. The ex-president (Dr. Randles), Dr. Jenkins, the secretary of the conference committee, I think Mr. Garrett, I and all the older and more responsible promoters of the temperance movement in Methodism, all the men who had borne the burden and heat of the day and had fought for the recognition of the temperance movement in Methodism, were unanimously opposed to that proposal as absolutely impracticable and, under existing circumstances, unscriptural. We were ourselves prepared to use every form of moral suasion to persuade persons to have no connection of any kind with the liquor trade, and to discourage their election to any office in the church; but to make this a rigid, absolute, universal and compulsory law of the church was, as I have said, absolutely impracticable. The young men who moved the resolution had never considered, in a statesmanlike spirit, how they would define liquor-seller. The trade is so widely ramified in England that it would be necessary, under so absolute an enactment, to exclude not only the owners of tippling houses but thousands of grocers, all farmers who grew barley or hops, and everybody who had a share in any railway company, as all the railway companies sell liquor at their refreshment bars at the railway stations. Such a proposal is absolutely impracticable. Further, both the New Testament and Christian history prove that this is not the way in which evil trades are to be abolished in the Christian era. It was a very long time before slavery was put down, as absolutely inconsistent with Christianity, and there is at this moment a far more anti-Christian trade than the liquor trade, and that is the trade in war. It is impossible to conceive anything so absolutely anti-Christian as an organization which exists for the purpose of killing our brother men. But no one proposes at present to exclude all soldiers from the Methodist church, and until that is done it would be the basest hypocrisy to exclude liquor-sellers by compulsory enactment. For such extreme measures we must wait until public opinion is sufficiently enlightened to justify an extreme step of that sort. The Apostle Paul himself went so far as actually to return a slave to his owner, because the time was not yet ripe for the definite and final exclusion of all slave owners, as such, from the fellowship of the Christian church. I am not aware that a single temperance minister of experience and official responsibility in England favors the extreme proposal made in good faith by well-meaning men, but made without any adequate sense of the insuperable difficulties in its way.

Yours very sincerely.

Introductory Studies in Sociology.

SOCIOLOGY is the science of society, the correlation of laws under which men live, not as isolated individuals, but as a whole. The term is practically a new one, for although men have been grouped together in society since primeval man, it is only within a comparatively recent time that an attempt has been made to discover, analyze and put into practical use the laws under which men are living. Theology, the science of God and of man's relation to God, was hoary with age before sociology, the science of man's relation to man, was recognized. But rapid strides have been made in the past quarter of a century, and to-day there is no study more popular and important than this.

Another new term which has recently appeared is that of Christian sociology. This originated with Professor Stuckenberg, and has been well defined by Dr. Crafts as "the study of society from a Christian standpoint, with a view to its Christianization." The term Christianization must be understood in a vastly larger significance than merely bringing men to a knowledge of Christ as a personal Saviour. It means nothing less than obedience to Christ's teachings, which teachings, if obeyed, would mean the establishment of the kingdom of God upon earth. "The heart of Christian sociology is the kingship of Christ." The individual is saved by His cross, but society is saved by His crown, that is, by the application of the law of Christ to all human associations, the family, the school, the shop, the church, the state.

Christ taught far more about the life here than He did about the life hereafter. Consult your New Testament for proof of this. He taught that men were to live together in love and peace, that they were to bear each other's burdens, and each to love his neighbor as himself.

When we consider society to-day, in our study of its laws, we find that after eighteen centuries of nominal Christianity, the law of Christ is not yet in the ascendant. We find ourselves confronted with problems which could not possibly exist if that law had had right of way through the ages. The liquor problem is one of these, but side by side with that stands another, the labor problem, or as it is sometimes called, the social problem of to-day. What do we mean when we use the term? To many it suggests only strikes and meetings where men express in strong language most unreasonable desires. Does it not have to do with society as a whole? "Labor has become the burning question of society. Labor is the support of life, the basis of the church's welfare and national prosperity, as well as of culture, morality and religion. The labor question is a social problem which concerns every interest of society. For that reason, the labor movement has aroused capitalists, economists, educators, reformers, statesmen, theologians and Christian workers." The question which lies at the heart of the problem of Christianity is whether Christ's teachings are practical in life, whether men are to live for each other or the many to live for the few.

What has been the history of the labor movement through all the ages? What is its present status to-day as compared with the past? What is its relation to Christianity and the church of Christ? What its relation to other reform movements? Why do we consider the labor question an integral part of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union? These are some of the many questions that will arise which we shall try, although imperfectly, perhaps, to answer in this series of articles. For reference books, I will mention Dr. Crafts' "Practical Christian Sociology;" "The Social Spirit in America," by Professor Henderson (chapters nine and ten); "The Man, Christ Jesus," by Robert E. Speer, section six of chapter second; "Studies on the Labor Problem," by Prof. Graham Taylor, as published in The Commons; and as handbooks which I would like to see in every one's hands, "A Guide for Workers in the Social Problem," by Professor Stuckenberg, 17 Arlington street, Cambridge, Mass., and "The Ethical Aspect of the Labor Problem," by J. Stitt Wilson, of Evanston, Ill. The last two may be secured of their respective authors.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Fight the Lord's battles. Be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work, for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts. Lift up your eyes and look on the fields: for they are white, already to harvest.—1 Sam. 18:17; Hag. 2:4; John 4:5.

"I SHALL never forget the scene in which Miss Willard shouldered the Temple burden," writes Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, "and you can only imagine how"—she goes on to say—"I felt for you and shared with you the suspense and joy which came later; I believe in the Temple, as I believe in anything else which means the gospel in our work. You know that has always been my view of it. That it stands as a monument of what we believe to be the privilege of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union as an evangelizing agency in the world, and that Temple is to me what I believe Solomon's temple was to the devout Israelites of old—an expression of Jehovah's presence in our midst. Be of good courage, and keep your unfaltering trust and good health and you will see the salvation of God." This dear woman of God shows her faith by her works, as she has pledged to give and raise $200, part of which she has already paid.

Yesterday our Chieftain left us for New York. As I bade her good-by at the depot, and looked at the pathetic little figure—the last of a household—and kissed the sweet face, pale as the white lilies she is so fond of, I could not but admire the brave, heroic soul, hidden away in such a fragile form, who, for the cause she so loves, lays her all upon the altar. I said to myself, Will the W. C. T. U. women prove themselves worthy of such a leader? Will they match her heroism by a little self-sacrifice? If they do not, they are unworthy of such a cause and such a standard-bearer. Miss Willard goes to New York to devote the balance of the winter to try to raise money for the Temple to which her whole heart seems devoted, but she is not yet robust enough to go about seeking the rich. The most of her work at present will have to be done by her pen, and that is rather an unsatisfactory way, for it is so easy for persons to refuse when a letter is the medium of appeal. Here is where white-ribboners can step in and aid our Chief. All who can afford to give large sums or small, let them do so, and all who can raise money from others for the "House Beautiful," let them go to work at once, not waiting for the first of July, as that is the last limit for completing the $300,000.

The "Trumpet Blast" is still finding an echo in many hearts, as large numbers of five-dollar contributions have come in during the last few weeks. The names of donors will be given by our financial secretary. Mrs. Bessie Laythe Scoville, president of the W. C. T. U. of Minnesota, is at work throughout her state, getting each member in every local union to raise or give $5. This week we will complete sending out our fifty-cent subscription cards to Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts, making over 200,000 we have sent to these four states. We do hope the women who have nothing to give themselves will see their opportunity to aid Miss Willard and pay for the Temple by sending out the four subscription cards we ask each member of a local union to send to friends. This surely is not too much to expect from our constituency. A great many Temple Wheels were sent in, the first of the year, but there are still thousands of people who have them stowed away in their houses unfilled; we beg of all such to look them up and have them filled and sent to us as soon as possible.

All orders for Temple Wheels, Temple bricks, mite-boxes, Baby Band lists and Temple programs should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two-cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel, mite-box or subscription card. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Our Children.

Two Little Maids.

THERE were two little maidens named Folly and Sense
Who were dressed to go out, when the fog grew so dense
That their mother, Dame Wiseacre, said, "Oh, my dears,
We can not go shopping unless the fog clears."

Good Sense was content to stay in with her dolly,
(She was always much wiser than little Miss Folly).
Folly murmured and grumbled, then said with a pout,
"Stay in if you like, but I mean to go out!"

So out Folly trotted in spite of her mother,
She so loved her own way that she'd hear of no other;
That the fog was so thick she soon learned to her cost,
And that mother and home and good Sense she had lost.

Yes, Folly was lost, but I've heard people say
That she's often about and in little folks' way.
But she can't find a home! Serve her right if it's true!
For good Sense is much better. Don't you think so, too?

A Group of Little Cooks.

BY MARY WILLIS.

THE room was at the top of the tall building. The sky was blue and the world was bathed in warm sunshine that morning. I had wanted to visit that class each Saturday morning since it began, but I had not been able to do it. This Saturday I found the time. As I came near the top of the building I heard girls' voices. The owners of these voices seemed to be using them all at once. "Dear me!" I thought, "how can any one teach in such a racket? How can any one learn?" I opened the door. There were eleven little girls, just as busy as bees. Down one side of the room were two tables, each with eight gas burners arranged for cooking. In the middle of the room was a pine table. At one of the burners were two little girls. Over the burner was a double boiler. I looked in it. There was oatmeal cooking, the little cook busily stirring. At another burner was an interested group. There was the odor of lemons and sugar.

"What are you doing?" I asked.

"Making a lemon pudding," was the answer.

A little girl at another table was breaking egg-shells into a coffee-pot, while another was measuring flour at the other side of the cooking table. At the window stood a little girl beating the white of eggs on a plate with a fork. They were so busy, and seemed to understand so well what they wanted to do, that I had forgotten there ought to have been a teacher there.

"Where is your teacher?" I asked.

"She didn't come, and we are repeating last week's lesson," came in a chorus. "As much as we can," corrected a very accurate little girl.

The spokeswoman explained the situation. "The teacher didn't come, and at first we did not know what to do. Then we looked in the closet, and we found that we had flour, and baking-powder and corn-starch and coffee and oatmeal; then we found two lemons and one egg. We thought we would cook some oatmeal, make coffee and biscuit, and a lemon pudding. We each bring a penny. So we bought five cents' worth of butter and a pint of milk and an egg—we had one egg." The little cooks flew about, feet and tongues keeping time. The flour and baking-powder and shortening were measured and mixed and rolled and cut. If it is true that "too many cooks spoil the broth," it is not true of biscuits. For at least six cooks did something, and the baker had nothing to do with the making. The biscuits were made very small, so that there would be enough to go round. They were a perfect success. The meringue was a failure. The little pastry-cook lost part of it in the sink when she was watching the dishwashing.

When the dishwashing time came, there was no soap. One of the little girls ran to the front window and opened the inside shutters, which were folded back. She took from behind it five pennies, and soon came back with a piece of soap. She explained that the week before some had forgotten their pennies and that they had that much left after all had paid their dues and the milk and butter had been paid for. The money was put behind the shutter for safety. Now they had all paid up. The dishwashing did not appeal to any of the cooks. Nobody wanted to wash dishes. At last two volunteered, and all the cooking utensils were washed while the biscuits were baking.

When they were done the fun began. Two tablecloths were borrowed from the kitchen-garden downstairs, and two pots of growing ferns. These were put on the table, and then the dishes. A father and mother were elected, and the family sat down. The biscuit were each about as large as a fifty-cent piece. The lemon pudding was large and delicious, but the meringue was just in little spots over the top. The little pastry-cook was very sad. The coffee was clear, and very good. The supply of dishes made the serving of the food rather queer. Some had plates, but they were very large; some had to use saucers as plates. Those who had plates had to use them as saucers on which to place their cups. Then all the saucers had to be washed for the pudding. Nobody objected to this queer division of dishes; it was like an indoor picnic, and everybody had lots of fun.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith (these were the names given to the little girls who played father and mother) attended to the wants of the nine children most carefully and politely.

I think that any teacher has reason to be proud of a class, who, when she is away, will work just as hard and carefully as when she is present.

Bootblack Honor.

A FEW weeks ago a gentleman, going through a crowded part of the city of Glasgow, Scotland, noticed a pale-faced little bootblack waiting for hire. Touched by the delicate look of the child he thought he would give him the blacking of his boots to do. Accordingly, he gave the little fellow the signal. The boy at once crept lamely toward the gentleman, and as he pulled himself along, was nimbly supplanted by another little bootblack, who was immediately at the gentleman's feet and ready to begin.

"What's this for?" said the gentleman to the intruder somewhat angrily.

"It's a' richt," said the newcomer, brightly. "Jamie's jist a wee while oot o' the hospital, and the rest o' us take turn aboot o' brushin' for him."

Jamie smiled pleasantly by way of assuring the gentleman that his comrade's story was true.

The gentleman was go gratified by this act of brotherly kindness that he gave Jamie's friend a whole shilling for his work, telling him to give sixpence to Jamie and keep the other sixpence to himself.

"Na, na, sir," quickly replied this little hero, giving the shilling to Jamie and hurrying from the spot, "na, na, sir; nane o' us ever take ony o' Jamie's siller."—Children's Record.

What the Cows Were Doing.

LITTLE Rosie, walking slowly
Past the verdant meadow, sees
Many cows, and some are standing,
Others lying 'neath the trees.

In the road stands little Rosie,
Caring not for dust or mud,
While her eyes are bent upon them
As they calmly chew their cud.

Great surprise her face expresses,
For awhile her lips are dumb;
Then she cries out, "Mamma! mamma!
All the cows are chewing gum!"

"WELL, Teddy, have you been a good boy to-day?" asked his mother, upon her return home late in the afternoon. "No, ma'am," replied the truthful Ted. "I hope you have not been a bad boy?" "No, ma'am, not a very bad boy and not a very good boy—just comfortable."

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—How I wish that I could gather you all in a real Cozy Corner and talk over some of the many things you write me about. I have a great bundle of little letters, each one representing a boy or girl who has taken the trouble to write me, and I want so much to have them all in our correspondence column that next week I think I will omit one of our usual stories and give the space to your letters. Will you like that?

I am interested in Margaret's greedy kitten that is called Tammany, and in Homer's kitty that has six toes on each foot, and I am sure that you all want to know about them, so we'll just go into a "committee of the whole" next week and have a real visit.

Lovingly yours,
AUNT MARY.

PAUL ARNOLD.

Ridgway, Pa.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I have had such a nice trip that I want to tell you about it. I went to Toronto, Canada, and had a fine time going to the parks, riding on the merry-go-round and wading in the lake. From there we went to Niagara Falls. I put on a rubber suit and went under the Falls. On our way home we stopped in Detroit and went to Belle Isle. We saw such a pretty fountain; it was a little newsboy and his dog, called "Partners," and was given to the newsboys by the Detroit News. In Cincinnati we went to the Zoo Garden and saw all the animals and birds. Lovingly,

Science Falsely So Called.

THE Standard dictionary defines science as "Knowledge gained and verified by exact observation and correct thinking." The ideal expressed in this definition is beyond criticism. The difficulties in knowing when we have attained the ideal are evident at a glance. Who is to decide when the thinking is "correct"? Very few people can be convinced that they have reached wrong conclusions, even when their errors are pointed out to them. Fewer still are capable of entertaining doubts concerning the general infallibility of their own processes of thought. It is only the rarely exceptional individual, like Newton, who revolves a subject in his thoughts for days and weeks, surveys it from every point of view, questions his own conclusions until he can discover no side left without examination, no link omitted in the chain of reasoning which leads to the result. Such an one is by common consent styled a genius. Jumping to a conclusion is not a sex peculiarity. The vast majority of people, including scientists of deservedly high reputation, habitually obtain some facts bearing upon their subject and from these facts leap to a conclusion, blissfully oblivious to the circumstance that they have omitted several steps between their premises and conclusion whose omission leaves their conclusion a non sequitur.

Even in the seemingly easier part of the process which makes knowledge "scientific," that of "exact observation," people of well developed and naturally good logical powers are often most careless. The blindness of the average individual to facts is simply astonishing, especially when a little prejudice obscures the vision. Persons whose native ability and education leave them without excuse, have argued that Moses could not have written the Pentateuch because he was a great general, and for a great general to be also a great writer was something contrary to human experience. Yet these same people were familiar with Cæsar and Xenophon. Nor were they ignorant of such versatile geniuses as Michael Angelo, whose gifts as sculptor, painter, poet and mathematician seemed about equally balanced; and Leonardo da Vinci, "philosopher, mathematician, physiologist, geologist, metallurgist, botanist, anatomist, engineer, musician, extemporizing poet, architect, sculptor and painter."

The worst feature of the case is that when once an individual, mistaking his own faulty processes of thought for the ideal, supposes himself to have reached scientific knowledge on a specified subject, he becomes encased in a coat of mail of self-conceit which no argument can penetrate, and looks down with calm superiority and contempt upon the ignorance and stupidity of any of the lower order of humanity who dare question his conclusions.

Unfortunately, very many people, utterly untrained in close analytical reasoning and incapable of detecting hidden fallacies, are given to accepting with little or no reserve everything that poses under the commanding title of scientific knowledge, especially when it is couched in sounding technical terms and quotes glibly the axioms and laws of science. Such people fall a ready prey to every new doctrine propounded by the "science falsely so called."

There is a vast amount of such "science" in the world, vastly more than of the genuine article, and every good and righteous cause is subjected to its "oppositions." It has overturned Christianity and demolished the Bible times without number. It is engaged in the same tasks to-day after the manner of General Weyler, who, it is said, having exterminated the Cubans once, enjoyed the operation so much that he was going to do it again! It will doubtless succeed in the future as brilliantly as it has in the past.

Its success in proving man a mere creature of environment should long ago have put an end to all reform and philanthropic movements. In every species, says the scientist, inherited traits alone are permanent; accidental ones are not transmitted to posterity. It therefore follows that there is no salvation for the individual who inherits from his ancestors tendencies to crime, and that the only hope for the progress of the race as a whole lies in the elimination of such individuals through the workings of the law of the survival of the fittest. We have no disposition to underrate the power of inherited traits and pre-natal influences. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union pleads, with all the earnestness of which mother-love is capable, the right of the child to be well born. But we have learned through our own experience and that of others that reform work, though often discouraging, is neither hopeless nor useless. In spite of the conclusions of science, children whose ancestors for generations have been thieves and pickpockets, are taken from the slums of New York, placed in a child's republic, and in a few weeks are transformed into law-abiding citizens. Drunkards of the most hopeless type, like Jerry McAuley and John B. Gough, are completely rescued from their drink habits, and, in turn, save multitudes of their brothers from the drunkard's fate. Thousands of other poor victims are saved from lives of vice (not eliminated), but restored by the power of Christianity to be the benefactors of the race.

We All Subscribe?

"A GOOD woman protested against electing two men as elders, on the ground that they did not take a religious paper, and were too ignorant of their church work to hold office."

The above item from the Herald and Presbyter is worth coupling with the voiced sentiment of the National W. C. T. U. Convention, to wit: It is the sense of this Convention that no one should be an officer of the white-ribbon hosts, whether of the local, county, state, National, World or solar system, unless she subscribe for and read our official organ—THE UNION SIGNAL, or words to that effect. This rational and racy view is by no means a radical one. THE UNION SIGNAL, in its formative, reformative and informative features, is an invaluable aid to our workers and should be recognized as indispensable. The woman at the fore of a W. C. T. Union or one of its department lines, must be alert to the needs, the obstacles, the outlook afield, and the possible advances, or she can not do justice to the cause.

As was intimated in the managing editor's annual report, THE UNION SIGNAL is not a soothing powder, but a food-stimulant for the work, a manual to live by.

Since the press is an acknowledged potent factor, an undeniable active influence in shaping public opinion, ergo public conscience, social creeds and political action, it becomes the province and the privilege of every lover of home and humanity, to patronize and push a paper which stands for "whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely and of good report." As such, our National mouthpiece and World's accepted medium of W. C. T. U. communication, should not appeal in vain to the white-ribbon constituency. It should command not only the sympathy and support of its half-million membership, but the coöperation of every individual member for its increase of circulation and the dissemination of its truth outside our ranks. Let this once be, and a "new era will break over the battlefield" of our strife.

The Lord complained of Ephraim: "I have written to him the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing." 'Tis a lamentable fact that with many a wearer of our badge the great things written that the members may be "thoroughly furnished unto all good works" are strange or unknown things.

It is estimated that some twenty-five million persons are gathered in the Protestant churches of our land. Two-thirds of these are women; one-thirtieth of these are white-ribboners; twenty-nine thirtieths, then, are not protesting with us against the six hundred thousand saloon-keepers whose work to decoy and destroy offsets that of the churches and missions to rescue and redeem. Why is this? One Biblical answer is, "My people do not consider!" But it is our "bounden duty" to consider, and to so reason "of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come" as to constrain others to consider. Are the one-thirtieth not responsible, as His witnesses, both for the sustenance and spread of the temperance gospel we profess? Is not THE UNION SIGNAL a fearless, faithful exponent thereof? Would that we might be blessed with an awakening in our own midst, and "beginning at Jerusalem," it might come about that such as sing, "We all belong, we all belong," could say, We all subscribe, we all subscribe. Our own people once "above reproach," it would then remain to "reach out unto Samaria and the uttermost parts of the earth" till every Christian should enjoy the benefit of this paper.

A Protest Against Library Liquor.

THE following appeal addressed to Hon. John Russell Young, The National Library, Washington, D. C., and signed by the National officers will, we are sure, express the sentiment of all white-ribboners:

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union respectfully brings to your attention the report that intoxicating liquors are to be served as a beverage in the restaurant of our public library. We have been slow to think this possible, but having received later and more authentic information looking in the same direction, we write to express our profound surprise and disappointment, and we do this not as individuals, but on behalf of the most thoughtful and earnest home people of our common country.

We represent an organized movement nearly a quarter of a century old, which is the systematic outgrowth of the women's Crusade in Ohio, that sacred uprising, which those who witnessed it declared to have been "like a second Pentecost." The work done in the years since then has resulted in the Scientific Temperance Instruction Laws now on the statute books of every state but three, and long ago enacted by the general government, whereby the most recent findings of science are brought to the knowledge of the public school children from the lowest to the highest grade, teaching them the effects of stimulants upon the human body—especially upon the human brain—and probably acting as the strongest single force in raising up a generation of total abstainers. To teach these lessons throughout the great Republic, and then in the National public library to introduce intoxicants, is to exhibit an eccentricity of action that we cannot think will occur when the circumstances are fully understood.

The wineless dinner table of the well-to-do is perhaps the most salient feature of American society, and on behalf of the American home we urge with earnest devotion that no intoxicants shall be offered as beverages in our National library, and we bring this plea and prayer to your attention with the highest esteem and good will toward all who are therewith connected, and especially to you, with the strong hope and expectation that our efforts may not prove in vain.

We are, on behalf of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union,

Yours with high regard,

Signed by the NATIONAL OFFICERS.

The Temple, Chicago, January 7, 1898.

THE New York Alumni of the Wesleyan University have been brought into unenviable notoriety through the use of wine by some of their number at a banquet held at the Savoy Hotel in New York city, December 10. About one hundred were present and among them such notables as Bishops Andrews and Goodsell, Rev. Dr. Bradford P. Raymond, president of the Wesleyan, Mayor Strong and Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley, editor of the Christian Advocate. There was no wine on the menu cards and none officially served by the committee; but the wine book of the hotel was distributed and those who wished liquors ordered them on their own account, and about ten of the guests thus indulged. It is probable that the wine list was not even distributed at the speakers' table, as its presence and the drinking of wine seems to have been unobserved by them.

Those who took wine could not have done a more discourteous thing to their Alma Mater and the other guests. The Wesleyan University at Middleton, Conn., is the mother university of all others in the M. E. church bearing that name. Its officers and those of the entire church are opposed to the use of any and all intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and while a university can not control its alumni in what they shall eat and drink, there are ways by which such offenders of etiquet and good morals can be rebuked, and we hope these may not be spared. The harm of this example to the undergraduates can hardly be overestimated, and as Dr. Buckley declares in an editorial on the subject, "wine served at its banquets or drunk is a gross impropriety, a disparagement to the university, a scandal to the denomination." We should be sorry to believe that a rebuke would not have been administered then and there had the condition of affairs been known by such men as have been named as present, and yet with our acute olfactory nerves we can hardly see how the fumes could have escaped detection. Did the banquet lack the feminine prohibition nose?

ONE of the most encouraging things which has happened for a long time was a wineless banquet given by the Philadelphia Times Midnight Club lately. Rev. Dr. S. C. Swallow, who ran for treasurer of Pennsylvania on the Prohibition ticket last November, and who blazed the way for an independent movement in state politics, was the principal guest. No wines or liquors of any kind were served. The chief of the Times staff, Col. A. K. McClure, made such an excellent temperance speech in response to a toast to his health that we reproduce it in part:

"And now I want to say how glad I am to see the journalists of the Times sit down to a dinner to enjoy themselves and have no wine or whisky or other spirituous liquors upon the table. You do not know how much it means. You do not think what the lesson implies to incorporate into your characters and into your continuous efforts and habits of life.

"Let me say to the young men of the Times that the one thing which each and all should cultivate is absolute sobriety. And I would say that wines and liquors are not prohibited at this banquet because they have the apostle of temperance in their midst, but because they wish to show him that they practice what he preaches."

Col. Clarence E. Bennett of the United States Army also emphasized the importance of temperance and sobriety and their influence upon the career of journalists.

MORE than two years ago property of American citizens in Turkey to the extent of over one hundred thousand dollars was destroyed by mobs, assisted and even led by uniformed officers of the Turkish army. These charges for indemnity have been carefully investigated by our government and the reasonableness and justice of the claims fully verified, but nothing has been paid in spite of repeated demands, and it is becoming evident that the Porte intends to pay nothing unless forced to do so. The delay on the part of our government in collecting this claim is interpreted by the Sultan and his officers as a confession of weakness and they regard it as fairly safe to destroy American property and put into jeopardy American life. Unless our government soon takes vigorous action and collects these claims, the hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of American property still left undestroyed in that country will have little value and the lives of our own citizens who are connected with it can expect little consideration. Our Minister at Constantinople is a wise and safe man in whom everybody in this country has the utmost confidence. A strong fleet at his disposal, accompanied by peremptory demands for payment, unless all precedents fail, would procure without war the money due, and what is more important secure for life and property in the future protection a nd safety.

MR. JAMES WHYTE, a trustworthy expert in reform matters, has written an essay on the longevity and health of abstainers as proved by the reports of life assurance societies. Mr. Whyte stands next to Sir Wilfrid Lawson in the United Kingdom Alliance, and is a warm friend of the women who are students of reform and workers therein. We would like to quote largely from his lengthy paper, read before the international Anti-Alcohol Congress held at Brussels last autumn, but content ourselves for the present with his closing paragraph: "It is surely a most ghastly fact that all the adult males of Great Britain—with the exception of a small minority of perhaps one-fifth or one-sixth of their number—do actually shorten their lives to the extent, on the average, of seven and three-fourths years each, by means of one expensive and apparently unnecessary habit [the use of alcohol]. And that such a state of matters should be permitted to continue to exist from year's end to year's end, and from decade to decade, without any real attempt being made by our teaching and governing classes to put an end to it is a national calamity and a national disgrace."

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

It is stated that Miss Helen Gould offers no wine at dinner.

The recent National Labor Convention kindly acknowledged the letter of the National W. C. T. U., but said that although they thought temperance reform important in the labor movement, they did not consider it essential!

Mrs. Helen Dickinson Harford, National organizer from Oregon, was a late caller at this office. She has organized twenty-three new unions in the seventh district of Kansas, fifteen of them since the National Convention, and has added 455 active and 270 honorary members by these unions.

Rev. Mr. Hanson, former candidate for governor of South Dakota on the Prohibition ticket, called lately at the National Headquarters. He goes to Europe in the interest of peace, as he is a preacher in the Friends church. Mrs. Hanson was an active worker in the W. C. T. U. of South Dakota, and is now living in Iowa.

Miss Nettie Houghton has established a home for friendless girls at 572 50th street, Chicago. She is a devoted white-ribbon woman and deserves the encouragement of every one of us. Miss Willard has written of the affection and confidence she feels for Miss Houghton, and hopes that the address of her home may be preserved and help sent by those who are especially interested in this work.

Rev. John Franklin Cowan, D. D., of Pittsburg, has become an associate editor of the Christian Endeavor World. Dr. Cowan has been for many years the successful editor of the Sunday-school and young people's papers of the Methodist Protestant church. His books for young folks are popular, and his stories and essays are gladly accepted by the leading periodicals, including THE UNION SIGNAL, to which he is a regular contributor. We congratulate Brother Cowan.

Major E. T. Scott has had splendid success in Colorado. He has had crowded houses, and his four months' labor there has largely increased the membership of the W. C. T. U. Thirty were added at Hotchkiss. He will remain and labor under the auspices of the state W. C. T. U. for months to come. The Hotchkiss Times says: Major E. T. Scott's style is inimitable and indescribable. Humor, pathos, sarcasm, anecdote, statistics, impersonation and facts follow each other in rapid succession.

A white-ribboner in making her contribution to the Northwestern Pennsylvania Humane Society had this to say, "I would not ignore or undervalue the mercy your society is showing to the suffering, but trust the day may not be far distant when the cruelty of the liquor traffic may also engage your attention. The inhumanity of licensing men to kill their brethren, to take the bread out of the mouths of poor women and children and to habitually maltreat them—and finally to lose their own souls, is worthy of consideration."

Mrs. Mary McArthur Tuttle, of Hillsboro, O., is widening her field as an art lecturer. She has introduced the stereopticon to illustrate the old masters as well as modern art. Mrs. Tuttle is herself a practical artist, and it is said that her chief theme, "color," is treated in a most attractive and practical way. Such men as Dr. James McAlister, president of the Drexel Institute, Philadelphia; President Charles F. Thwing, of the Western Reserve University, Cleveland, O.; George E. Vincent, Vice-Chancellor, Chautauqua Section of Education; and Rt. Rev. Frederic D. Huntington, Bishop of Central New York, pay her high tributes of praise.

Young Woman's Branch.

Extracts From Recommendations

Adopted by Y Conferences at National W. C. T. U. Convention.

BUFFALO, OCT. 29–NOV. 3, 1897.

THE aim of the Young Woman's Branch is to establish young women and young men in temperance principles. To this end we urge the organization of Young Woman's Christian Temperance Unions wherever practicable.

That this work may be advanced, we recommend:

That efforts be put forth to secure Y secretaries in every district, county and local union in every state.

That each Y. W. C. T. U. endeavor to organize at least one new union this year.

That Y conferences and schools of methods be held in every state, and the Y work be presented at summer meetings, Chautauqua assemblies, district and county conventions.

That state Y secretaries coöperate with state officers in securing the services of a National Y associate or Y organizer each year to revise and increase the membership.

Our society is organized upon a paying basis, and because of neglect in paying dues, or the prompt collection or forwarding of the same, the Branch, as well as the W. C. T. U., does not receive the credit for more than half the enrolled membership. We urge that each state Y secretary notify the Y unions of the time for payment of dues, the amount to be sent for each member and to whom to send it, with a further request that the treasurer be asked to keep Y dues separate from the W's that we may know the strength of our organization.

With a desire to enlist trained forces, we urge a special effort to organize Somerset Y's in schools and colleges, and ask state Y secretaries to visit all educational institutions themselves or to send an organizer who shall present the temperance work. We need the help of educated young women.

We recommend that April 14, the birthday of our World's Y secretary, be observed each year as Y Membership Crusade Day, a systematic canvass to be made during the day for members, the evening to be given to a mass-meeting of young people, or reception for them.

A Y union-at-large is recommended, whose membership shall consist of young women who live remote from any organization of the W. C. T. U. or Y. W. C. T. U., or in localities too sparsely populated to permit of an organization. The conditions of membership to be the signing of the total abstinence pledge, the wearing of the white ribbon and the payment of such dues to the state treasurer as are required by the state constitution. This Y-at-large to be called the Willard Y.

We recommend for practical evangelistic work the coöperation of the Y's with all young people's societies in evangelistic temperance effort, and the conducting of gospel temperance meetings.

Aim to secure the signatures of all Sunday-school scholars and teachers to the triple pledge, placing their names upon a roll of honor.

Urge each member to use her influence against the Sunday newspaper, Sunday travel for pleasure, the use of the postoffice on Sunday, Sunday calls and receptions, and all other forms of Sabbath desecration.

Believing that the time is not far distant when political responsibilities will be placed on woman, we urge the Y's to inform themselves on questions of civil and municipal government. We recommend co-operation with other young people's societies in holding Christian citizenship rallies, and in classes for political study.

That the children of this country may become an organized force in the temperance army, we recommend the organization of Loyal Temperance Legions, Senior and Junior grade.

We recommend that the Y's familiarize themselves with the facts taught by science in regard to the effects of alcoholics upon the human system, by means of the study of the L. T. L. Normal course, and the School Physiology Journal, published by Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, 23 Trull street, Boston, Mass.

Let a superintendent of parliamentary law be appointed in every union, and let all business proceed in a proper manner. "Roberts' Rules of Order" is the accepted authority in the W. C. T. U., and every Y union ought to own a copy.

We recommend the employment by local unions of a competent specialist for a course of lessons in physical culture. Young women are especially urged to advocate and work for the introduction of the all-around physical education in public schools as against the military drill.

Send to Mrs. C. F. Grow, The Temple, Chicago, Ill., for catalogue of the publications of our own publishing house.

To Mrs. K. L. Stevenson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill., for copies of the Annual Leaflet of National W. C. T. U. They are furnished for the postage, and very helpful.

To Miss Emma Alexander, West New Brighton, N. Y., for department leaflets; sample packages, ten cents. Annual Leaflet of Y. W. C. T. U., three cents per copy. Besides these, every Y should have National and state reports. For special department literature, address National and state superintendents, a complete list of which will be found in official papers and annual leaflets.

The secular press is the everyday educator of all classes, therefore seek prayerfully, persistently, tactfully, to have inserted in its columns the best and the latest news of all lines of our work. Appoint a press superintendent in each local Y. Make the subject one for discussion at Y conferences, with reports as to successful methods. Send to the National press superintendent for the Bulletin and other helps.

Urge all our members to subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL, with its helpful Y department, issued every week, also for their state papers, these being absolutely necessary for information and progress in our work. Have special issues of a young woman's number whenever practicable and profitable.

Let every one show disapproval of the use of cigars, cigarets and all other forms of tobacco by personal effort, the distribution of literature and the organization of Anti-Cigaret Leagues.

We deplore the extent to which gambling is carried on by telegraph, betting, lottery, card playing for prizes, nickel-in-the-slot machines, and in all other ways. We urge young women everywhere to use all influence in their power to stem the tide of this increasing evil.

We recommend to young women to stand always for an equal standard of purity for men and women; to demand of the young gentlemen of their acquaintance that same standard of purity that is demanded of young women; to familiarize themselves with the White Shield movement, full particulars of which can be obtained by writing to Miss Rose Wood-Allen, Ann Arbor, Mich.

To stimulate our own workers and educate public sentiment, it is imperative that each union should hold at least two public meetings a year, either utilizing local talent in arranging pointed and attractive programs, or securing one of our trained speakers.

We recommend these methods of coöperation with kindred societies: Distributing leaflet, "How to Coöperate," and aiding the Christian citizenship movement by presenting the work of our round-the-world missionaries to the missionary organizations; sending representatives to the conventions of all these organizations, and especially the holding of local Y conferences, in which all Young People's Christian Societies are invited to participate.

The Y organizers have been listed with the organizers of the W. C. T. U., and while any organizer or state secretary can organize a Y, still the National Y associates, Mrs. Barnes, Miss Clothier, Miss Ensign, Miss Kearney, Miss Carter, and also Miss Rhena Mosher, North East, Pa., who has just been appointed organizer, are especially interested in Y work.

Clara Parrish, in far-off Japan, is enlisting young women for temperance work, and each Y ought to feel it a privilege to have a little part in her work. Let us therefore remember her at the noontide hour. Let each Y contribute something for this mission, sending all contributions to Miss Mary E. Campbell, 315 A street, N. E. Washington, D. C.

Because work for total abstinence is pursued with so much difficulty in foreign countries, we in this country must help purchase literature and aids for the foreign work, and each union is asked to hold a World's W. C. T. U. meeting, with special program, and to divide the offering between the following missions, to be forwarded to the custodians as follows:

Isabel Gibson Fund—France. Mrs. Isabel Gibson Scott, Philadelphia, Pa.

Fund for Italy—Miss C. M. Caswell, 378 Ferry street, Malden, Mass.

We recommend that the Y's of each state appoint fellowship secretaries to correspond with distant countries, with isolated unions and individuals, sending THE UNION SIGNAL and suitable literature and reporting to the state and National secretary the work accomplished.

World's W. C. T. U.

Financial Report of Convention.

THE financial statement in connection with the World's Convention held in Toronto, shows a handsome balance of $1,100. By mutual agreement and consent of the World's union, Dominion union and Toronto district, this balance was divided into three equal parts.

It was a pleasant surprise to many that after the elaborate plans made for the Convention, so large a surplus remained. To others the surplus was the result of large planning, for withholding is not always enriching.

Before the final meeting of the Convention committee, they held a social function, which took the form of a delightful banquet in honor of the chairman of the committee, Miss Wiggins. The ladies presented Miss Wiggins with an elegant gold watch-chain, with a catch mounted with pearls and turquoise, on which was engraved, "L. E. W. from the W. C. T. U." One and all had many kind things to say about Miss Wiggins, and words of congratulation were voiced by the gentlemen to the ladies for the very able way in which they conducted the arrangements.

It was a genuine surprise to many Toronto people that women were capable of managing so large an affair successfully, and still more of a surprise to listen to the addresses of the many able women who were present at the Convention. Toronto is reaping many benefits from the Convention, not least the higher status which it has given W. C. T. U. work, and the practical gain of over two hundred new members.

The Convention committee are deeply indebted to the delegates for their kind and courteous acceptance of hospitality and arrangements, which were not all that the committee desired. At the same time the committee desire to express their deep indebtedness to the press, the city council, and in fact, every agency from which it was necessary to ask co-operation, for the hearty good-will and service rendered.

South Africa.

I BELIEVE I last wrote you from Ladysmith, where I had been holding meetings among the soldiers. The general temperance meetings were well attended and very successful, but an attempt to establish a union there was altogether a failure, so I sowed some seed by the way, hoping to reap the harvest hereafter. After lecturing in a few of the villages in Natal I left that country, satisfied that temperance is well advanced there.

Natal is favorably situated every way for temperance work. There are none of the drawbacks there that the Cape has to contend with. Compared with other South African countries, Natal is pre-eminently English, the Dutch element being conspicuous by its absence, except in the up-country districts. It is not that the Dutch are antagonistic to temperance, but as a race they are intensely conservative and advance very slowly. The Cape Colony is a wine and brandy producing country, which naturally makes temperance reform more difficult, but in Natal they have not that drawback, and there native prohibition is law, as it also is in the two Dutch Republics, the Free State and the Transvaal.

At Pretoria, the capital of the Transvaal, I was enabled to do a great deal of work among all sorts and conditions of men. Among the natives a Band of Hope and adult temperance society was established and many meetings held. At one meeting several tribes were represented, and I had to speak through two interpreters. The hymns were even sung in two or three languages, though to the same tune. As may be imagined, the effect was more edifying to the singers than to the hearers. A course of lectures was given and various temperance and other societies addressed. I am learning to put a great value on the opportunity that is occasionally given me of occupying a pulpit; the audience is ready to your hand, and is often of the class that is so difficult for the ordinary temperance speaker to reach—the respectable moderate drinkers—so I am always ready to seize the chance of addressing them. This applies more especially to European congregations; as a rule the native churches are composed solely of abstainers, as far as membership is concerned.

The union at Pretoria is flourishing and doing good, aggressive work. It is under the presidency of Mrs. Gray, who is also the president for the Transvaal W. C. T. U. The union owns a booth in the park which is open regularly twice a week for the sale of temperance refreshments at Sports, the proceeds of which go toward the support of the Salvation Army Rescue Home and the Men's Shelter in that town. The latter institution is much needed, as will be seen by the fact that 1,500 were accommodated there in two months. Scientific temperance and Band of Mercy teaching is being gradually introduced into the Bands of Hope, and it is likely the former will be taught in the Transvaal schools before long. At Johannesburg I was invited to address several schools on this subject. The Pretoria union has filled a number of wheels for the Temple and many of the members have pledged themselves to give a small sum of money regularly toward the work of the union. Mrs. Gray made a lot of little bags which she distributed among her friends, asking them to contribute threepence a month; one woman had died, and among her things was found a bag full of threepences. The hospital had been regularly visited, and flowers, literature and fans distributed.

The Raad or Transvaal Parliament was sitting when I was in Pretoria. I went to hear one of the debates and found it was on the dynamite monopoly—a burning subject among the mining communities of this country. Various companies have the monopoly of the sale of dynamite here, and the discontent caused by this and other maladministrations of justice still keeps the country in a ferment. There is peace here, but only on the surface; it would take very little to bring the undercurrent of discontent to the top.

There is a café at the Raad, but no bar. The president himself is an abstainer, also a large number of the government officials. In one of the discussions at the Raad on a new liquor bill about to be introduced, one of the members stated that brandy was a good thing; it had been a protection to the Transvaal more than once. For instance, it was at the bottom of the failure of the Jameson raid last year, he said. It has long been an open secret that it was so, but it is rather humiliating to hear our national weakness held up to contempt in this manner by those who profited by it.

World's Wave Crests.

MRS. MARGARET G. URE of Montreal, Can., sends us the following notes on the work of Mrs. Ardill and Miss Murcutt, delegates to the World's convention, who are now in Canada:

"Those who had the good fortune to meet them while in Montreal will long remember the genial, whole-souled motherliness of Mrs. Ardill and the bright, hopeful earnestness of Miss Murcutt, whose talents as a speaker and lecturer are decidedly above the average. Her Australian lectures with stereopticon views are extremely interesting, and unions throughout the Dominion may feel confident that in securing her services they are serving themselves as well as the cause to which all profits are devoted, Rescue Home work in Sydney.

"While in Montreal Mrs. Ardill and Miss Murcutt took 115 pledges, secured fifty active members for the W. C. T. U. and fourteen honorary ones. They spoke for the Western union twice, Point St. Charles four times, and once each for St. Johns, Central, the Annex, Northern and Westmount unions. Lectured twice on Australia, addressed Sunday-schools and Sunday services.

"Mrs. Ardill is now visiting several unions on her way to Toronto, where she and Miss Murcutt will remain for a month conducting a gospel temperance mission in connection with the Y. M. C. A. there. Letters to that address will always find either of these ladies.

"Miss Murcutt is billed to lecture in the city of Quebec on January 17, and will then probably go to Ottawa."

News From the Field.

[State reporters are earnestly requested to send no news over two months old. Brief and frequent reports are preferable.—EDS.]

Louisiana.

THE Central union of New Orleans has appointed a superintendent of proportionate and systematic giving. This line of work has just been taken up in the state, and Mrs. Eugenia F. Blanks, of Monroe, is the superintendent.

At the state executive meeting in New Orleans, on December 23, Shreveport was chosen as the place for the annual convention in April. Miss Belle Kearney and Miss Jessie Ackermann are expected in the state in February, and it is hoped that they can be secured for the convention.

The news has just reached me that Homer, Claiborne parish, is a prohibition town. Christmas eve over one thousand people were on the streets and not one case of intoxication was seen. Men were spending their money for the comfort and the happiness of their families, who formerly spent it for whisky. After months of hard work and many prayers the W. C. T. U. and their loyal brothers brought about this blessed transformation. Alas, there is always the too convenient saloon, and until Gibbsland joins its forces to that of her sister town, the place will not be fully redeemed from the rum power. Homer has a flourishing L. T. L., and the boys, educated, intelligent voters, will hold the field won from Satan.

"The faithful few" who agitate and educate public sentiment and hold the unions together in the small towns, need the encouragement and the prayers of the sisterhood everywhere. The union at Homer has taken up a course of study in order to keep up the general interest.

The small union at Ramos has done good work in the past but at present it is suffering from the effects of the epidemic in Southern Louisiana.

The Lake Charles union held a memorial service in honor of Gen. Neal Dow. The eulogy upon the life and work of the great prohibition leader was presented by Mrs. R. M. Dunlap, state superintendent of press work. Mrs. Davidson read a beautiful poem, and three of the clergymen of the city assisted in the service, which was held in the new Methodist church just completed.

The public library, supported by the union, contains a choice collection of books, which they expect to increase during the coming year.

A delightful reception, with refreshments, was given the W. C. T. U. after the regular meeting, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Foster.

The Patterson union is favored in having a member who is always present. She is also willing to serve in any capacity from the presiding officer to that of janitor, and one who is equally proficient in either place. Would that there were more members like her!

In the Louisiana report of Jan. 6, the population of Arcadia was given as 16,000, when it should have read 1,600.

Missouri.

FROM the way W. C. T. U. work has commenced in our state, Missouri will surely win many honors at the next National Convention. Mrs. Minnie B. Horning says: "If we blow not the horn telling of our good work no one will blow it for us," and Missouri is going to do what she can in this respect.

The Counselor has been enlarged to a six column, four page paper, and is full and overflowing each month with reports from the workers all over the state. Mrs. Maggie Bowman, of King City, the editor, is receiving congratulations from every one on the splendid paper, and with the subscription price only twenty-five cents a year, all the white-ribboners will be able to take it and keep in touch with the work.

Our beloved president, Mrs. Hoffman, was at home in Kansas City, during the holidays, to the joy of her many friends in that city. She had just returned from a two weeks' trip in Kentucky.

Mrs. Addie N. Fields has been doing good work in our state, having given a month's work in St. Louis before the holidays, and is now in the thirtieth district. Many unions are making arrangements to have her visit them. Mrs. Ellen A. Blair and Mrs. Emma A. Cranmer are expected to be in the state in February.

Bethany union entertained the fifth annual convention of the Missouri E. S. A., in December, and it was a very profitable meeting, and made many friends for "the women." The convention was welcomed by the mayor, church and press. The meetings were held in the court house, and the members of the union decorated the room in yellow and white with a large picture of Miss Willard at the front. Nearly all the business houses of the town had yellow decorations. Mrs. Laura Johns, of Kansas, was the lecturer sent from the National E. S. A. Miss Ella Harrison, of Carthage, was re-elected president of our state. Missouri will be well represented at the National E. S. A. convention in Washington in February.

Temperance Sunday was observed pretty well all over the state, and in many places grand mass-meetings were held at night, where pastors and citizens are alive to the need of the hour, and are not the least backward in letting it be known. Dexter union, the home of our Carrie Lee Carter, had a program that evening by representatives from each church, the various Sunday-schools, Christian Endeavor, Epworth League and King's Daughters.

Missouri being banner state in contests last year will endeavor to "just keep the banner." Many contests have been given since the state convention and Miss Morris, the state superintendent, states that many medals have been secured by young men, and she thinks at the next convention a diamond contest can be held, the class to be of men. Jamesport and Lamar unions have lately held matrons' contests.

Parlor socials are becoming more numerous. Pleasant Hill had a most enjoyable "button contest," followed by a musical treat and a short talk on W. C. T. U. work. New London union has lately held a Klondike social. This union has been doing a grand work in jail and prison department. One young boy on gaining his liberty was cared for by the union until placed in a good, Christian home. A reception was given by the various unions in Kansas City to their newly elected district president, Mrs. Anna M. Dunning. One hundred ladies were present and the local superintendents of parlor work served dainty refreshments. A nice program was given and a most delightful afternoon was spent. Mrs. Dunning had been president of the fifth district for many years, and she will know just how to take up the work in the seventeenth to make it a success.

Mrs. Lura Hyden Boleyn, president of the fourth district, has been visiting the various unions in her district, giving "Echoes from the World's and National Conventions." The unions presented her with an elegant couch for Christmas which she appreciates very much.

Warsaw union is having good success with its L. T. L. They lately gave the twenty-two new members a reception. A program of music, conundrums, charades and nice refreshments was enjoyed. Although a little late to report, we want to speak of the Halloween social at Arcadia, one of the main features being a pumpkin with slits cut for fifty cents, twenty-five cents, etc., for the freewill offering.

The second district voted five dollars from each union to be paid toward their president's salary. A good thing for all districts to do.

St. Joseph union is enthusiastic about the Temple and has held many socials for the benefit of same. They are very proud of their district president, Mrs. Callie Howe, and think that another like her could not be found, but Missouri is fortunate in having the very best workers in the world in her borders.

AT a mothers' meeting held by Somerset W. C. T. U., Utica, N. Y., the topics discussed were "Coöperation Between Parents and Schoolteachers" and "The Influence of Manual Training on Character."

Loyal Temperance Legion.

What shall the year 1898 mean to the Loyal Temperance Legion work and workers?

1. A more earnest and faithful observance of our daily concert of prayer at 7 P. M. Special prayer for the arousement of W. C. T. U. women to the need of organized temperance work for the children; for the coöperation of parents; for more laborers; for consecrated enthusiasm in the workers. Texts for the year, Prov. 3: 5, 6; Psa. 62: 5.

2. More earnest work along general lines, with special reference to the Juniors. Every meeting to be carefully planned in advance, and to have some special point. Make more of the singing, choosing the brightest songs and introducing motions. Magnify the juvenile offices and committees. Keep some work for others constantly before the children, remembering that expectation is a most helpful factor in maintaining interest. Special guide books, "Questions Answered," by Miss Anna Gordon, and Manual of L. T. L., by Mrs. Helen G. Rice.

3. Special attention to Senior work, as outlined in the leaflet on "The Senior Loyal Temperance Legion." Organize the Seniors by themselves wherever that seems necessary in order to keep a hold upon them.

4. Special attention to study and reading courses for both Juniors and Seniors as fully explained in the leaflet on "Diplomas and Seals."

5. Earnest effort to introduce the L. T. L. normal grade plan into all unions, Y's and Senior Legions, since these are the sources from which our L. T. L. workers must be drawn. The leaflet on "The Normal Grade of the L. T. L." comes in very cheap form (15 cents per 100 copies), and should be freely used for introducing this plan everywhere.

6. An earnest campaign for the increase of the subscription list of The Young Crusader. This paper is now to be the official organ for both the Senior and Junior Legioners. The editor has excellent plans for the development of the paper along these lines, but these can only be made successful through the earnest coöperation of all. Each state superintendent is asked to appoint (a) a reporter for the Junior work of her state; (b) a reporter for the distinctive Senior work of her state; (c) a state agent for procuring and forwarding subscriptions. To the two reporters all workers are urged to send all items of news, and especially new methods. These reporters will sift and condense the material received and forward at stated intervals for publication in The Young Crusader. The W. T. P. A. makes the following generous offer: To all clubs of ten or more subscribers sent through the state agent, the papers will be mailed to one address for twelve cents per year for each copy. No Legion in the United States need be left out of this offer. Encourage the children to read their papers carefully and return them for distribution.

7. More earnest attention than ever before to the collection of National dues (five cents per member). Let it be distinctly understood that these dues are not obligatory; but one important feature in our education of the children is teaching them to be temperance givers. Let us put before them the privilege of thus helping the great work of our "Mother National," asking them to earn or save from their candy money, the required five cents. We believe this will be no hardship to any child, but a permanent blessing. By an amendment to the National constitution adopted at Buffalo, we shall hereafter have one L. T. L. delegate-at-large for any fractional part of fifty dollars paid into the National treasury from the combined states, territories and District of Columbia.

8. The adoption by each state of a distinctive rallying cry, motto and state song, these with the National rallying cries and mottoes to be used on all suitable occasions. Let all our meetings be enthusiastic; let us shout for temperance from ocean to ocean. Many states have already their own rallying cries and mottoes; only Maine, Massachusetts, New York, and Arkansas have thus far reported a state song.

9. By vote of the L. T. L. conference at Buffalo, our objects for contributions this year are to be our L. T. L. room in the National Temperance Hospital, the Temple in Chicago, and the missionary fund for sending The Young Crusader into needy fields. Our L. T. L. room has always a claim upon us; we desire to co-operate with our National President in her special effort for the Temple, as well as to cheer the heart of Mrs. Carse; by contributing to The Young Crusader we shall accomplish the double object of aiding our own official organ, and distributing helpful literature. Let each Legion consider carefully these objects, and decide by vote which one it will aid, if it cannot work for all.

We are all familiar with the old-time couplet:

"Little drops of water, little grains of sand,
Make the mighty ocean and the beauteous land."

And we understand the practical lesson it teaches, that the littles put together give great results. The little five cent donation asked this year of every member of the W. C. T. U. for our National Hospital, is a very small sacrifice for a white-ribboner, but if every union and Y attends to it and every member of both unions responds, how much it will mean to the temperance cause. It will mean that the Hospital can meet its running expenses and make its payment on the new site. It involves the ownership of a Hospital in Chicago where disease is treated without alcohol to the saving of hundreds of lives. It will mean beds where the destitute can receive free treatment. It may mean careful treatment and sympathy for way-worn and perhaps homeless white-ribboners, for such have already been cared for there. It will mean a beacon light saying to the world disease is better cured without alcohol than with it. Mothers and friends who fear to have their loved ones treated by the old-time alcoholic method, can send them here without fear, for no boy will ever go from its doors with the fangs of the alcohol serpent in his soul and body.

Let us stand by the Hospital. Let us each one own one brick (five cents) at least, in this, one of our noblest enterprises, to uplift and save the diseased and fallen.

Good Samaritans, now is your time. "Help a little." Will not every president of a local union and every Y in the nation appoint one woman a Hospital committee immediately, to gather up the nickels (one from each member) and send as soon as possible, to your respective state treasurers plainly stated, "to be forwarded to National treasurer." Think about it, pray for its success, and give the nickel with your prayer.

Services are held in the Hospital every Sunday afternoon. The Evanston Avenue Methodist church at present have them in charge.

The outlook of the Hospital has never been more promising than at present. Both staffs have been enlarged and the Hospital has been unusually full. A number of very successful operations have been performed. An unusual amount of charity work has been done both by the Hospital and physicians.

W. C. T. U. News.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., union thanked the chief of police for closing saloons on Sunday.

THE W. C. T. U. of Greensburg, Ind., furnished the prisoners at the county jail with mittens to crack stone in during the recent cold weather.

AN "encouragement and discouragement" meeting to close the year was held by the Preston, Minn., union.

EACH of the inmates of the Union poor farm at Burlington, Vt., enjoyed a Christmas box of goodies presented by the local union.

THE pledge cards which are furnished by the W. C. T. U. for Sabbath-school scholars were presented lately to the Prohibition church, Harriman, Tenn., and were signed by nearly all of the members.

THE latest addition to the local W. C. T. U. forces in Buffalo, N. Y., is the Frances Willard union, organized by Mrs. Helen L. Bullock. At their first regular meeting they enrolled twenty-seven members. Mrs. M. Elizabeth Carrell is the president, and Mrs. Clara R. Chamberlain the corresponding secretary.

For the Little Folks.

The most serious objection to the use of coffee by young people is that they are more sensitive to the effect of the drug, or of any drug, than adults. Coffee-drinking children invariably show malnutrition and facial evidence of very serious internal disorder. The only exceptions to this rule are where the children are of such vigorous constitution and the pre-natal influences are very strong in the line of resistance to narcotics, that they are able to overcome the effects. The children of parents who are able to use tobacco and whisky to an old age, without physical disturbance, are apt to show ability to live comfortably, even when coffee is administered, but unfortunately there are but few of this sort, and the finer grade of human beings, whether children or adults, are inclined to be sensitive to the effects of narcotics, like coffee, tobacco or alcohol. Postum Cereal Food Coffee produces no narcotic effect of any sort or kind. It is simply a liquid preparation of the grains, and although it tastes and looks like coffee, it is a pure liquid food.

When boiled full fifteen minutes after boiling commences, it tastes like the better grades of Java.

The great food expert and head of the Philadelphia cooking school, Mrs. Sarah Tryon Rorer, uses it at her table, looking upon it more as a food than a beverage.

There is but one original, genuine Postum Cereal Food Coffee, with hundreds of imitations sold as "that cereal coffee."

Substitutors drug their concoctions to give them a coffee flavor. Genuine packages of Postum have red seals and the words, "It makes red blood," thereon.

TWENTY new local peace superintendents have lately been appointed by the unions of Maine.

BUFFALO Central union furnished a Christmas dinner for a large number of poor families, and gave out quantities of warm clothing.

THE Temperance Temple of the Los Angeles, Cal., W. C. T. U. is not remunerative, and the large auditorium is to be converted into stores and offices, by which the revenue and rents can be materially increased.

THE union at San Antonio, Texas, proudly reports an "L. T. L. wedding." Both bride and groom had been members of the L. T. L. for five years and their marriage was therefore an event of loving interest to local union workers.

THE members of the W. C. T. U. of Saugatuck, Mich., gave a farewell tea in honor of their president, Mrs. H. L. House, who goes East for the winter. Mrs. Lindsay, on behalf of the union, presented Mrs. House with a small purse as a slight testimonial of the regard in which she is held by her comrades.

FOR six years the Kentucky W. C. T. U. has assisted the penitentiary authorities in giving a Christmas dinner to the prisoners. Religious services are also held regularly, and a night school organized by the union. Mrs. Beauchamp attended the dinner and services and reports that the moral tone of the prison has been enlivened and heightened by the work of the W. C. T. U.

MRS. S. F. GRUBB, National superintendent of foreign work, makes a valuable contribution to the field collection of curios, and among other things is a book 274 years old, compiled by Nicholas Byfield, "one of the preachers for the city of Chester," England, and now Mrs. Baxter is looking for forty-nine other books as old or older to go with it. Then some great museum will want the collection.

Two townships in Trumbull county, Ohio, by request of the W. C. T. U. of their town, decided to vote on local option. Kinsman voted at the regular election in November; result, 260 for dry to 54 against. Bristol thought best to have a special election which was held January 4, carrying the town for dry over five to one. W. C. T. U. workers feel like taking new courage and saying, What next?

No subject on the program of the Quebec Provincial W. C. T. U. convention drew forth such spirited discussion as that of narcotics, and much determined hostility was shown to the use of tobacco. It was with genuine pleasure that Mrs. Helen M. Barker, of Chicago, on the last day of the convention was welcomed and listened to. Her lecture was considered by many to be the ablest argument to which they had ever listened in favor of prohibition and against license, high or low.

CONTEST work is moving forward in Pennsylvania; nine contests have been held since state convention, one gold series at Octoraro, Lancaster county: all report a success, especially so at Norristown, Montgomery county, where they had a fine audience, and over $20 cleared for their treasury. The county superintendent of Columbia county is preparing a preacher's and musical contest for their semi-annual convention in February. This is a new feature in contest work, and much good is hoped will be the result.

Treasurer's Corner.

As will be seen we have a goodly list of life members of the National W. C. T. U. We wish to greatly increase the list. Mrs. S. M. Bowerman, of Michigan, gave her name with the necessary twenty-five dollars, at Convention, and several of our good women assured me that they expected to send me their names. We have certificates to send to each life member and wish we might enroll one hundred names. The payment of twenty-five dollars constitutes the subscriber a life member. The payment of one hundred dollars constitutes a life patron. May we not receive a number of honored names right away?

The Minutes are now ready to send out and we are filling orders as fast as they come. Also we are sending out Miss Willard's address, each fifteen cents. The expenses for December and January are greater than for any other two months of the year, and receipts are more meager, hence the treasurer has not a very enviable time. Should any state treasurer have any surplus dues that she can spare they will be welcome at National Headquarters.

Please do not send UNION SIGNAL subscriptions to me, but send all such letters to W. T. P. A.

Annual leaflets are still in the hands of the printer. Orders will be filled as soon as possible. Annual reports have been sent to state presidents, superintendents, organizers, evangelists and lecturers and all orders filled up to date. We are all impressed at Headquarters that our Minutes are too large and too expensive and that some means must be devised to lessen size and price.

Wrappers are beginning to come in and we trust all will be diligent.

Mrs. Thurman has formed a Texas state union among the colored people and they have promptly forwarded National dues. Well done!

HELEN M. BARKER.

Girls can not graduate from the public schools of Boston unless they have taken the course in cookery. Cooking was introduced into the public schools of Boston by Mrs. Mary Hemenway, who opened the first cooking department in a vacation school, at the Starr King school house on Tennyson street, Boston. Mrs. Hemenway supported this school of cookery for three years, until the city of Boston became convinced that the work was practical and necessary.

Miss Amy Homans, daughter of Dr. Homans, was the principal of that first cooking school, connected with public school plans, and to-day the Boston Normal School of Cookery, directed by Miss Homans, carries forward, assisted by Mrs. Hemenway's magnificent endowment, the work started in the Starr King school house, where the model kitchen and dining room were used for practical lessons in housekeeping, and the same plan goes on to-day under Miss Homans' capable, firm and devoted leading.

The public school luncheon, thanks to the brave work of Dr. Caroline Hastings, is a lunch of good, nutritious food, furnished to the grammar and high schools of Boston from the New England kitchen. These lunches cost five and ten cents, and are sent by express from the kitchen to school house daily. Dr. Caroline Hastings, as a member of Boston school committee for many years, was troubled by the inferior foods provided at random by the janitors of school buildings, and brought about this reform in lunches for which every mother owes the plucky, brown-eyed doctor a debt of gratitude.

To Ellen H. Richards and Mary Hinman Abel we all owe a deep debt of gratitude for the establishment of the New England kitchen, where only nutritious foods are developed. Mrs. Richards says, "You can not tell of what the American student is capable till he is properly fed." Mothers, what are you doing about the food of your children? What do the children have for luncheon? An eminent authority says, "There is no doubt that intellectual activity is somewhat dependent upon the consumption of material which the brain has obtained from food," and "energy is developed as food is consumed in the body," also that "With every motion of the body, and with the exercise of feeling and thought as well, material is consumed and must be re-supplied by food," and "The body is more than a machine; we have not simply organs to build and keep in repair and supply with energy, we have a nervous organization; we have sensibilities and the higher intellectual and spiritual faculties, and the right exercise of these depends upon the right nutrition of the body."

In view of these facts, shall we neglect the food best suited to school children? Members of unions in every state who are interested in the subject will be furnished with a list of Food Values and Scientific Cooking Methods, by addressing with stamp for reply,

Wheat and Flour.

Popular Ignorance of their Relative Food Value.

While flour is so universal and important an article in the diet of the people, too few are sufficiently informed as to its real food value.

The present generation were born and bred into the idea that the best flour must of necessity be the whitest. Long habit and use has strengthened this notion into a deep-rooted prejudice, which has been recognized and catered to for years past by commercial usage, and the direction given to milling improvements which have chased out of flour about everything possessing the more vital food properties, because of their color.

In the popular appreciation, a kernel of wheat, in its structure and food composition, is the same all through—like a potato or chestnut, for instance—having a skin or shuck which is better to feed to animals than to throw away; and that differences in flour arise not so much from any essential difference in food value as from the skill used in milling in keeping any particles of the wheat having any color out of the flour—the greatest skill therefore producing the whitest.

This all comes from lack of knowledge, first, of the really wonderful structure of the wheat kernel; second, ignorance of the fact, established by modern chemistry, that the fifteen or more elements found in the human system are also found, and in about the same proportions, in a matured wheat kernel; third, further ignorance of the fact that these varying elements are not distributed alike throughout the kernel, but are respectively located in different parts of it, the white starchy portion being in the center, while the vital and also darker elements are between this white center and the thin outer husk; fourth, still further ignorance of the fact that these vital elements, those which specially feed the nerve structure, brain, etc., are never white in color, but are always much darker than the interior, and will not make white flour under any circumstances.

It is a fact established by modern chemistry that the fifteen or more elements found in the human system are also found, and in about the same proportion, in a matured wheat kernel. Wheat has been the main staff of life throughout all ages, and it has only been within the memory of the present generation that pure white flour has been used. Color in flour is altogether sentiment. It makes the flour no better, but, on the contrary, less nutritious. Pure white flour has been robbed of the gluten of wheat, and flour thus deprived has lost most of its blood-making materials. The vital elements of the wheat kernel which specially feed the nerve structure, the brain, etc., are never white in color, and will not make white flour under any circumstances.

Baron von Liebig predicted that this excessive starch-flour eating would result in disaster to the race, the truth of which is now being plainly seen in many directions in the changes of the types of disease from strong to weak, in the almost universal exhaustion of the nerve force (which never before in history was so taxed as by the American people), in the great prevalence of nervous diseases, and the sudden breaking down of persons apparently in the full tide of health and vigor. They find it hard to fight the battle of life on only about 25 per cent of nerve food.

The Franklin Mills, of Lockport, New York, produce a fine flour of the entire wheat. It is from the entire wheat, with the exception of the woody, innutritious outer skin or husk, which is not food. It contains all the elements necessary to the building up of the brain and nervous system, and all its blood-making qualities. It is a light golden brown, and takes its color from the whole wheat, from which it is made. It is superior to graham flour or wheat meal, in that it does not contain the coarse, irritating, indigestible, woody outer husk of the wheat kernel, or the coarse flakes of bran, which are of no food value. It is more easily digested than either of these, is perfect of assimilation, and thoroughly nourishes every part of the body.—The Outlook.

Important.

If our friends and patrons would send all business letters direct to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, it would expedite filling their orders. In many instances letters sent to editors, treasurer, secretary, etc., do not reach the business office for several days, and goods which would otherwise have been shipped at once, are delayed, much to the annoyance of the person ordering. To avoid mistakes please name also both the town or city and state to which goods are to be shipped.

Signal Notes.

THE wine crop of France for this year is estimated at 32,351,000 hectoliters or a decrease of 12,305,000 hectoliters compared with last year, and 126,000 hectoliters below the average of the last ten years. A hectoliter is nearly twenty-six and one-half gallons of wine measure.

IT is noted that of the 1,955 Baptist ministers in Great Britain and Ireland, no fewer than 1,556 are reported to be total abstainers, in addition to a large number in the mission field; while out of 2,847 Congregational ministers in England and Wales, 2,364, or eighty-three per cent, are in the same category. In some of the Methodist bodies the percentage is still larger.

Great men differ on many important subjects; but distinguished scholars all agree that the

NEW FUNK & WAGNALLS

is incomparably superior to all other dictionaries of the English language. For example, we give the views of two of America's most celebrated public men:

HON. E. J. PHELPS,
President Cleveland's most trusted diplomatic representative.

"THE work is extremely well done throughout. I have no doubt that for general and practical purposes it is the best American dictionary now available."

"I AM confident that the published statements of Funk & Wagnalls Company, respecting the value of the Standard Dictionary, are not exaggerated."

CHARLES A. DANA,
President Cleveland's most aggressive journalistic antagonist.

SCHOLARSHIP HAS NO POLITICS!

It would be useless, in the limited space at our disposal, to attempt to put before our readers the many hundreds of commendations of the STANDARD DICTIONARY that came spontaneously from all sources, upon its first appearance. To those who wish to inform themselves fully as to the merits of this great work, we will cheerfully send printed matter containing full description. The following are characteristic expressions from competent authorities:

Harvard University: PROF. N. S. SHALER: "The Standard Dictionary will remain an enduring monument to the labor of its editors. I believe that it will come into general use in this community."

Harvard University: PROF. A. PRESTON PEABODY: "Will prove of invaluable service, and will last while the English language remains essentially unchanged."

University of Michigan (Ann Arbor): PROF. THOMAS M. COOLEY: "It justifies its name—Standard. . . . It is everything that could be desired."

Oxford University (England): F. MAX MÜLLER: "It is a rich mine of information, and shows how much can be achieved by co-operation if under careful supervision."

A. Conan Doyle, the eminent English Novelist, London: "It has become quite a joke with us that we can not trip up this dictionary. We have several times been sure that we would, but have always failed."

Oxford University (England): PROF. A. H. SAYCE, the eminent Philologist: "The Standard Dictionary is truly magnificent, and worthy of the great continent which has produced it. It is more than complete. . . . It is certain to supersede all other existing dictionaries of the English language."

Henry M. Stanley, the African Explorer: "The Standard Dictionary comes nearer to my idea of a first-class dictionary than any of the kind I have seen."

The New York Herald: "We are free to pronounce it the most complete and most satisfactory dictionary yet printed. . . ."

Johns Hopkins University: PROF. WILLIAM HAND BROWNE: "In accuracy, clearness, and fulness it surpasses all similar works."

Sir Edwin Arnold: "A noble piece of work, destined to be most useful. . . . Everywhere copious, erudite, and reliable."

The Irish Times, Dublin: "It is a monument of American learning and industry. . . . From the publication of the Standard Dictionary, America may date a new period of the country's history."

Brown University: PRES. E. BENJAMIN ANDREWS: "I believe that this Dictionary essentially fulfils the high ideal of its projectors. It is an out-and-out new product, and not, like our old dictionaries, the result of patching and amendment, little by little the different pieces often added by many, many minds."

Yale University: T. R. LOUNSBURY, Professor of English: ". . . The work deserves the fullest success, and I doubt not will meet with it."

Gen. James Grant Wilson: "It should, and it would seem will, become what its title indicates, THE STANDARD. I deem it the best English Dictionary published."

Edward Everett Hale, D.D.: "It is the blessing of our breakfast table. I have been surprised at the fulness and accuracy which show themselves to anybody who uses it constantly."

REMEMBER that these Commendations were written after a comparison of the STANDARD with all other Dictionaries now in existence. The full number of words and terms in these dictionaries for the entire alphabet is as follows: Stormonth, 50,000; Worcester, 105,000; Webster (International) 125,000; Century (six volumes complete), 225,000; Standard, over 300,000. In so important a field as the spelling, pronunciation, and definition of the words that make up our vocabulary, it is not worth while to have in your library, or on your study table, a book of reference that is not up to date and authoritative. It is most desirable to be able to consult an unquestioned authority; and such is the STANDARD DICTIONARY. Sent, carriage prepaid, to any address in the United States on receipt of price, $12.00; or $12.75 with Patent Thumb Index.

There is hardly any food-product which may be so extensively used in the household in combination with other foods as cocoa and chocolate; but here again we urge the importance of purity and nutrient value, and these important points, we feel sure, may be relied upon in Baker's Cocoa and Chocolate.—Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette.

RED-LETTER DAY.

FEBRUARY 22—Washington's Birthday.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports.—George Washington.

Notes and Comments.

BY the time this meets the eye of the reader the National Prohibition Conference will have met in Cincinnati. Fraternal representatives from the W. C. T. U. will be present, and an inspiring gathering is anticipated. It will be reported for THE UNION SIGNAL by its managing editor who left on Tuesday evening to attend its sessions.

A BILL is before the Virginia legislature providing for the re-establishment of the whipping post, and has been favorably reported by the committee on courts. The object of such law, say its promoters, is the prevention rather than the punishment of crime. Since the whipping post was abolished fifteen years ago, the criminal expenses of the state have, it is said, nearly trebled. Opponents of the bill declare it to be a step backward morally and politically. We trust that if flogging ever becomes the penalty for theft or any other crime in Virginia it will be applied with discrimination; that the man who robs the state or the municipality and the man who steals a few potatoes for his starving children will each receive stripes proportioned to the value of the thing stolen and to the measure of his sphere of influence and the "mitigating circumstances" of his environment.

NO woman's name appears in the list of officers elected by the Anti-Saloon League Congress. We are wondering why. We have not at hand a copy of the constitution of that organization, and do not know whether women are eligible to full membership or not. Will somebody please enlighten us upon this point?

WE are pleased to note a victory for good government in San Francisco. The city is moving for a new charter and the political machines, Republican, Democratic and Populist, united upon a fusion ticket for the nomination of the Board of Freeholders, fifteen in number, who should formulate the same, this ticket being supported by every daily newspaper in the city except The Examiner. The opposition candidates nominated by a popular charter convention were, nevertheless, all elected by a sweeping majority. This shows what the people as opposed to the machine are able to accomplish when they pull together.

THE atrocious murder of a white woman in Indian Territory, the torture and burning of the suspected criminals (one of whom at least, it is said, was innocent) by the infuriated people of Oklahoma and the threatened uprising of the Indians, is all traceable to whisky. So say the newspaper reports. Intoxicants can not be obtained on the reservation, but a row of saloons marks the line that divides it from the territory of Oklahoma. The Seminole tribe of Indians are, it is stated, the most peaceful, prosperous and progressive people in the Territory, and every disturbance which occurs in that region may be attributed to the sale of liquor to the red men by the civilized (!) whites.

IN the launching of the Japanese battle ship, Kasagi, at Philadelphia, January 20, for the first time in American history the use of wine or whisky was omitted from the ceremony. Instead, the much more picturesque and appropriate Japanese custom was observed. Suspended from the bowsprit, above the head of Miss Long, daughter of the secretary of the navy, who is sponsor for the great cruiser, was a large wicker cage decorated with ribbons of scarlet and white, the Japanese colors. At the proper moment she opened the cage door by means of a cord which hung within reach of her hand, releasing half-a-dozen gray pigeons, and at the same time a mass of flowers, which fell in a shower upon the heads of the spectators. We trust that now this innovation in the christening and launching of ships in American waters has been introduced, there will be no return to the old "idiotic custom" —for such a noted newspaper correspondent calls it—of breaking a bottle of wine or whisky over the bow of a vessel.

THE surest indication of good work done by the Anti-Saloon League convention reaches us by way of the liquor organs. Judging from the liberal amount of space devoted by them to the proceedings of that gathering and the degree of irritation evinced in their acrimonious accounts of the same, that body must have sent some hot shot into the enemy's camp. The Columbus Wine and Spirit News especially, is profuse in its derisive denunciations. When there is such loud howling in the ranks of the antagonist it is safe to assume that somebody is hurt. The anti-saloon forces may, therefore, congratulate themselves upon a most successful convention.

FROM Portsmouth, O., comes the news that thirteen saloon-keepers have been indicted by the grand jury for violations of the law, and fined from $40 to $140 each, with costs, ten of them being given ten days in jail in addition. Bonds of $1,000 will, it is said, be required in some cases before they are allowed to resume business. If this is a sample of the results of anti-saloon activity—a liquor paper of the state calls it "wholesale persecution"—we do not wonder that King Alcohol trembles. Liquor leaders know as well as do out-and-out prohibitionists that the anti-saloon movement is a tributary of the ever-widening stream whose current is set toward the ocean of national prohibition.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., is unique as a prohibition city. No other city of equal size has ever been carried for "no-license" two years in succession; while in Cambridge that policy has prevailed at eleven successive elections. At first the usual objections were made—the city could not do without the saloon revenue, etc.,—but all have been abundantly refuted by actual experience. We are told that the valuation of Cambridge during ten years of license, dropped, in round numbers, $3,000,000; during ten years of no-license it has risen $24,000,000. In the license decade the average gain in population was 1,182; in the no-license period it has been 2,195. In the first ten years 151 houses were built annually; in the second decade the average has been 332. And—please note this point particularly—the city gets annually in taxes on the increased valuation under no-license three or four times as much as it would get from license fees. Two years ago 257 Cambridge merchants, in all departments of business, signed a public appeal declaring that no-license had benefited the material interests of the city, and expressed a hope for its continuance. The finest feature of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the city was, says the New York Independent, "the spectacle of eighty-five thousand people keeping holiday and from sunrise to sunset not a drunken man visible anywhere."

Current Events.

Cheers for Dr. Shields.

Princeton Alumni on Record in the Liquor Controversy.

THREE hundred alumni of Princeton University at their annual banquet held January 20, at Delmonico's, New York, gave three cheers for Dr. Shields, and at every mention of his name sprang to their feet and cheered again and again. About the middle of the banquet A. C. James and H. L. Bridgman arrived as a deputation from the Amherst association, dining in another room. They bore a bottle of champagne draped in Amherst colors and a greeting of good fellowship. They were cheered, and Rev. Richard S. Harion and Job E. Hedges were delegated to return the compliment.

President Francis L. Patton made a speech, and said in regard to the Princeton Inn controversy: "I wish to turn to good account the criticisms that we have received, ill-advised as many of them have been. The friends who give us advice do not know our difficulties, and I can not stop to explain them. But one thing is sure: Prohibition will not stop drinking in Princeton; it will only increase the trade in corkscrews." The whole room rose at his words, and cheer upon cheer told the president that the alumni indorsed his position.

The students of the university are rebelling against the enforcement of the rule in regard to intoxicating liquors. January 13 a demonstration took place in which 190 students left the campus with banners and transparencies. The parade song was, sung to the tune of "America." They were joined by many others, gave three cheers for the grill room as they passed, and afterward jammed the saloons.

"We want lager beer

An Impetus to Petition Work.

[Special Correspondence.]

WORKERS for the Gallinger-Ellis Bill should find great encouragement to keep up their fire and increase it, in the victorious skirmishes just achieved, namely, the banishing of all liquors, save beer and wine, from the Capitol building, for the first time in many years, and the rescinding of the permit for the sale of even beer and wine in the new library.

The District W. C. T. U. and the Reform Bureau made short work of the library fight. Superintendent Green distinctly admitted to Mrs. Platt and Mrs. Shelton, and afterwards to Rev. Crafts, that he had consented that the caterer should sell wine and beer, but the protests came so thick and strong that when the restaurant opened a few days later, not only could no liquors be had but not even a memory remained thata permit had ever been granted.

Another encouragement to work for the bill is the battle of Princeton, where a victory has been won over a fallacy precisely similar to Secretary Long's apology for the new navy "canteens," namely, that we must cure intemperance by making drinking places more respectable, in this case bribing the marine by giving him a partnership in the profits also. Let the petition work go on.

Temperance.

AT the annual session of the Maine State Grange the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That we believe in a better enforcement of the prohibition laws. This can only be secured by a right public sentiment. We believe that the only way to accomplish this is in the education of the children.

A NEW organization at Cleveland, O., is the Educational Temperance Confederation. It is a union of the Good Templars, the W. C. T. U., the Catholic Total Abstinence Union, the Non-Partisan W. C. T. U., the Royal Templars of Temperance, and the Anti-Saloon League. Its object is to make known the hygienic effects of alcohol, by means of illustrated lectures. The work is carried on by an executive committee composed of two members from each of the above organizations.

THE prohibitionists of the town of Brookhaven, N. Y., are in the field with a full town ticket, headed by Captain Henry M. Randall, of Port Jefferson. The nominating convention was the largest ever held in the town.

AN organization of total abstainers which was incorporated in 1893, called the National Christian Union of America, proposes through a National Trades committee of one hundred of its members to make a special onset against intoxicants in these last years of the century. The committee of one hundred is divided into twenty sub-committees, each dealing directly with one of the trades, such as dry goods, men's clothing, publishing, flour and mill products. Each member and each committee will do all they can to cause those who are in their branches of trade to take the following pledge and all badge wearers are asked to induce one person each month to take it, surely one each year: "With God's help, I hereby promise not to drink any more alcoholic or fermented beverages until after A. D., 1900, praying for strength to abstain the remainder of my life, and during that time I will spend money equal to what I have heretofore spent in drink for the purchase of some of the articles of useful goods named above." The badge is a blue button. Speakers and workers address Mr. A. E. Yates, secretary, 288 Lexington Ave., New York city.

NOT simply for myself alone
Would I be at my best,
Nor for the loved ones who have flown
Far from the dear home nest;
But faithfully and earnestly
For their sakes, though unknown,
My brethren in the great wide world,
I still would labor on.
The weary heart to soon relieve,
The doubting soul to help believe,
And bear the friendless the reprieve
For which they daily groan.
"What can I do?" be asking still,
To cheer mankind, to banish ill!

Michael James.

In Four Chapters.

BY MAX JOHANN, M. D.

CHAPTER IV.

"THE homesickness for Michael James is sore on me, ma'am," sighed Katie, one day, and the next afternoon the Frau piloted her and her children to Jefferson. Mamie wrote a letter to her father and carried it to him, and Katie carried the dinner-pail containing "a sup," she said, shyly, "of something he has the tooth for." What a rare afternoon it was for them all! The Berrys and their guest watched the carriage house as if a moving panorama were displaying upon its walls. Katie had talked the children out of their recent fear of their father, so that they pulled and hugged and clambered over him with their old-time abandon. And Michael James? He put on his newest blue gingham shirt for the occasion, and his homely face looked comely with its glow of pride and pleasure. What a prodigy of learning was his Mamie, "standin' straight up as aisy as the professor himsilf" and reading to him the letter she had written! How he examined it and studied it from different points of view, and finally wrapped it tenderly in newspaper and bestowed it within the capacious pocket which Katie had wrought into his new shirt as a slight token of her never-dying love and devotion! Then, too, Mamie must say the "mooltiplication." Standing straight and stiff as a ramrod, with folded arms and unwinking eyes staring straight into the blue zenith, she galloped right through from twice one to twelve times twelve, losing her breath now and then and wheezily catching it again. Michael James was overpowered! Such knowledge was too wonderful for him! He scratched his head, oppressed, and only experienced relief when she commanded him to admire her new hat with its red ribbons and pigeon's wing, all purchased with a part of his last remittance. It was "purty as her own swate face," he told her, and that satisfied her, and it was well, for Jamesie was becoming importunate. It was so "cute" for him to be jealous of his sister's popularity and to come tugging at his father's trousers for his share of attention. "Who could think that he would be that knowin'?" What elaborate preparations Michael James made for elevating him into his lap, avoiding his arms as if they were filaments of glass! And Katie? How she beamed upon them all as she sat there in the door of the carriage-house where the warm sunlight could fall upon her, diligently plying her needle in the interests of Michael James' wardrobe! Could the good-natured, genial, smiling sun go down on such an afternoon as that? Ah, yes; though the Frau to tempt him, lingered one train behind her time.

"I'm thinkin', sir," said Michael James six weeks later, "that I'll go home for the Fourt' July." He spoke deprecatingly as if asking permission.

"Do so, my man," I said, "I'll tell Katie you're coming."

He had not told me on what train he would come and three times on the afternoon of the 3d of July, Katie and her little ones passed our home on their way to the station. At last, Karl who was on watch, shouted, "They are coming"; and all four of us went to the fence to give them greeting. I think Katie McGee was the proudest wife and mother in Van Buren that night. She looked like a little drum-major in petticoats heading her company with head erect and glowing face, wheeling now and then to see that they were intact, that is, Jamesie kicking and crowing from his father's shoulder and Mamie clinging to his coat-tail in lieu of a hand. She had so many glad surprises in waiting for her returned hero! There was a little new furniture to take the place of what had been sacrificed in that almost forgotten time of their tribulation; and a garden "nate as two paze" with potatoes, beans and onions, and two pumpkin vines "tryin' to run away wid the farm entirely," and a squash already in flower.

"If good works could prolong life," I said to the Frau when they had passed on, "what you have done for that little family ought to make you, and me too, immortal." (I believe I am not the only man who would like to climb into glory on stepping-stones of his wife's virtues.)

In less than twenty-four hours Katie came for me weeping and ashamed! We dragged Michael James out of the gutter. We lifted and pushed and tugged at him till we got him into my barn, where he fell like a log upon a pile of straw and I locked him in. In the morning I took him back to Jefferson.

"I was that careful of him, sir," Katie said, explaining the sad occurrence, "that I wouldn't let him so much as look at Tim Burns'. I took him round by the back way an' pulled a bit of a boord off the chicken house an' let him into the yard that way, an' I dhrawed the curtains close, sir, to kape out the spyin' o' the cronies, an' whin they kem axin' fur him I made a lie—I did that sir, God forgive me—an' I towld 'em he'd gone back to Jefferson. But it was no use, sir. Whin I was gone out wid the male fur the pigs's dinner, they kem to him—they was that kane fur his coompany, fur Michael James is aisy and jolly like—an' they got him to the gate, an' from that on I could do no more."

After this we talked a little of trying to establish Katie at Jefferson. But it was hard to find a good tenant for her house, she was very comfortable with her live stock and her vegetable garden, and—more than all—the anti-saloonists had material for a strong ticket at the next election and they expected victory.

Michael James resumed his work at Mr. Berry's with a pathetic look of self-abasement upon his face that made one word of blame impossible. I think he would have died of shame had it not been for the blessed balm of hard work. When his day's work was done he hunted for odd jobs and caught at them as a hungry dog catches at a bone. Nothing that would add a few pennies to his hoard was too hard or too menial for him to attempt. Work, scrimp, save, were the three articles of his religion, and he lived them with the devotion of a martyr. Since he had been in Jefferson no one could remember that he had ever spent a cent for his personal gratification; though now and then a nickel for some toy or sweetmeat to be sent to the children, or a trifle to Katie that would be "moore like a burruthday prisent" than the expected and never failing stipend that I was always directed to "kape by me till the 30th." Oftenest his extra gift to her was a root of some flowering plant or vegetable which had been a wild or forbidden growth in some garden where he had worked. Sometimes his fellow-workmen ridiculed his stinginess; but he was as insensible to their chaffing as he would have been to the paper pellets from Jamesie's popgun.

They had learned a little of his story; and once, in a spirit of mischief rather than of malice, they held him while one of their number uncorked and shook a small flask of whisky in his face; and then, with much tantalizing preparation, mixed him a drink in a dipper from the well. Nobody knew how it happened, but just as the tormentor was handing over the "treat" Berry dropped from somewhere and promptly knocked him down. Afterwards, in response to an official invitation, he walked down to the justice's office and paid his fine like a man.

My wife accompanied me on one of my monthly excursions to Jefferson. We carried to Michael James a mysterious package containing trophies of Katie's culinary skill—we guessed—and a letter from Mamie besides. He asked me to "rade it" for him, and this was the fashion of it:

DIER PAPA:—we aR alL wel aND Hop you tHe Sam i got Nue SHos aND Jamsie too Jack Kilt a SNaiK i wisH me aND jamsie HaD A Rop to yue aND we wouD PuL you aLL tHe way BacK Home

MAMIE

I read it slowly for two reasons—first, because I had to, and second, because I wanted my audience to take it all in.

"Now, ma'am" (on some subjects I noticed that he always appealed to Margaret) "did iver ye see the aqual o' that, an' Mamie on'y nine year owld come cowld weather!"

He had struck an attitude with his hands on his hips; but when he saw me refolding the letter carelessly, as if it were a commonplace bit of paper, he suddenly made a scoop of his hands and held it under as if to catch the precious pieces. Margaret quickly took it from me, and, handling it as tenderly as I have seen her fold a little garment that belongs to our baby in heaven, gave it into his hands. He carried it to his seat in the carriage house door, very much as one carries a live butterfly by its wings; and we watched him unfold it and try to spell out its contents. He seemed to fail, for he took from his pocket a pair of eyeglasses that he had picked up somewhere. They had "one eye out and one eye in," Mamie had told him on the occasion of her visit, but they seemed to answer every purpose, for he shut one eye as he examined his precious document, trying to get it into focus at the end of his nose, at his arm's length and at various intermediate points. Perhaps his vision was blurred, for when, as we were about to leave he gave us the money for Katie and a shabby little package—something for Mamie or little Jamesie we supposed—his eyes were moist with mingled pride and longing.

After this visit we always spoke of the patient exile as "our child martyr."

For three months more the poor fellow fought that unequal battle with his allied foes—his dead ancestors (mysterious, awful providence!) and the royal family of living American voters.

Once, the meeting which called me to Jefferson fell upon the 30th. An unplanned professional visit compelled me to take a later train than usual, and, contrary to my custom, I deferred my call at Mr. Berry's until after the meeting.

"Doctor," said that hospitable gentleman, meeting me upon his threshold, "you must not come in. I shall not ask you to. The next train for Van Buren leaves in fifteen minutes, and you must make it; that queer little miser of yours has gone home with two hundred dollars in his pocket—the sum total of his savings since he has been here. He told me day before yesterday that he was going home with you to-day, and would want his money, and I never saw a poor fellow so cut up as he was when the 2:15 came in without bringing you. If he came to the office once to inquire for you during the next hour, he came a dozen times; and at last when he was obliged to give you up, he insisted upon having his money and going alone. I told him I'd go with him if he'd wait till to-morrow, but I might as well have talked to the wind.

" 'To-day's the 30th, sir,' he kept saying, 'to-day's the 30th. I was to go on the 30th.' First I wrote him a check for the amount, thinking his money would be safer in that form if he should stumble into one of Van Buren's devils' dens" (Berry could not be polite on the saloon question) "but do you know the little idiot wouldn't have it! 'I don't doubt ye, sir,' he said, 'I wouldn't have ye to think that, but Katie wouldn't set store by that bit of a slip; Katie can count two hundred, sir, an' ef she couldn't Mamie could. Katie must have the raal article, sir, in her own hands.' So, like the fool that I can be upon occasion, I actually counted twenty ten dollar bills into his hands, and he's gone to Van Buren with it. I can't tell what makes me feel so uneasy," cooling and smiling a little, "unless it's the solicitude your wife manifests for the fellow. You've barely time to catch the train, now go!" He almost shoved me out of his door.

Inquiry at Van Buren station assured me that Michael James had arrived two hours before. Mentally ridiculing my fears, yet unable to quiet them, I accepted an invitation to ride with a friend whose carriage was waiting for him, and we drove to Katie's. Michael James had not been home. I would not alarm the little woman by telling her more than I had to, but she stood in her door and watched me as I ran into Tim Burns'. He had not been there. As I jumped into the carriage I nodded to her, trying to telegraph to her a reassuring message. We visited the other saloons, but could not hear of Michael James until we arrived at Teddy O'Toole's. Three young fellows, bloated, profane, brutal, students well advanced in the saloon's curriculum and almost ready to graduate into the responsibilities of American citizenship, plunged into the place in advance of us, and with clownish hilarity slouched into chairs about the stove. I made my inquiries of the proprietor.

"McGee had not been there," he said, blandly. I stepped toward the door, but a suppressed horse-laugh from the group about the stove and the name of Michael James blurted between a guffaw and an oath, arrested me. Swallowing my disgust, I turned to one of them:

"Will you tell me where and under what circumstances you have seen McGee to-day?"

The young rowdy settled into the I-don't-care-for-nobody attitude in vogue among creatures of his kind. He slid himself out to the edge of his chair, stretched his ungainly legs in front of me, and rolled his tobacco from one cheek to the other. Then, becoming uneasy under my steady gaze, he clasped his hands back of his head, and stared impudently and defiantly into my face.

Beckoning to O'Toole, I stepped out upon the sidewalk, and he followed me. O'Toole is not a bad man; he plies his infamous business in accordance with the laws of a civilized nation, and in this case his sympathetic Irish heart responded instantly to my appeal. Leaving me outside, he went in to interview his customers, not closely shutting the door behind him, and I had the privilege of hearing from Michael James' tormentors a part of their miserable story.

"The little fool is scart of a bottle of soothing syrup," said one.

But the story from their own lips is coarse and disgusting; and I prefer to relate it in the modified form which O'Toole gave it when he came out to me upon the sidewalk.

"Have no fear," he said, "they wouldn't do him any kind o' harrum—they're not that bad; they're jist afther takin' a dhrop too much an' their play is rough an' that's all there is to it."

Michael James on his way home, in trying to avoid Tim Burns' had attempted to pass O'Toole's. The half-drunken fellows had intercepted him, trying to compel him to a treat and, spurred by his terror and dismay, had raced him out into a thinly settled part of the town, heading him off whenever he attempted to go in the direction of his home. They had tussled with him and tormented him until he was frantic with rage and fright, and had left him only when they had tired themselves out.

We re-entered our carriage and drove slowly about, not knowing where to look next.

"Perhaps he has taken the train back to Jefferson," some one suggested, and we drove toward the station. Near it and within a few rods of the railroad crossing, we stopped, waiting for the six o'clock train down to meet and pass one outwardbound. Only the down train stopped for passengers. It was nearly dark. There was some unusual delay and seemingly a commotion. Suddenly my name was called, and in a moment half a dozen people were at our side, shouting, importuning, helping, almost lifting me out of the carriage. A moment more and I was bending over the mangled form of our child martyr!

Ah, noble little Irish heart, loyal, loving, even in death! One hand, his only uncrushed member, was in his breast—that pocket in his shirt had served him well. He drew out and laid into my hand a little roll wrapped in a bit of soiled newspaper.

"It's the mooney fur the moorgige," he said, lifting his glazing eyes to my face, "ye'll give it to Katie the night, plaze. To-day's the 30th—its Katie's burruth"—the last syllable was a sigh, the last breath of Michael James.

The Weapon Wonderful.

BY LILIAN F. LEWIS.

PART II.

PROHIBITION.

The word of God is quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword.—Heb. 4: 12.

CONSERVATIVE BROTHER.—I have come again, but you must not expect from former success to win me to your more distasteful political views and aims which rob your sex of that "sweet womanliness" man admires and would so jealously guard.

WHITE-RIBBONER.—Do you maintain that the heart of her husband and the home sphere constitute woman's proper place?

C. B.—Though not a benedict, that's my idea.

W. R.—"It is not good that man should be alone, I will make him an helpmeet," said our Creator. "Home is where the heart is." If her heart be with her husband, her home, or "place" is where he is. Away from the constraining influences of the hearth-side particularly, it is not good that he be alone, and his life companion should act the part of helpmeet wherever manhood's responsibilities call, at the polls as rightly as elsewhere. Then you, who preferring what is not good, remain alone, independent of helpmeet, deprive woman of her heaven-ordained privilege and man-defined "place," your heresy being responsible for the heterodox [?] "new woman."

C. B.—If you intend to pursue that nonsensical strain—

W. R.—Excuse me, I was not attempting to talk sense; only to head off a stamp of sentiment as untenable and fallacious, which our opponents are prone to launch in argument, but account, advanced on same par by us, too insufferably stupid for consideration! Seriously speaking, next to our fidelity to Christ ranks our loyalty to home, woman's citadel and man's safeguard; and because cherishing its interests paramount as affecting humanity's welfare, we cannot realize that daily in our loved land fifty homes are wrecked by the drink-fiend, without lifting our voices, and desiring to render them most effective for home protection.

C. B.—Lest we engage in profitless strife of tongues, let me stipulate dependence upon the weapon before used. Besides I am curious to learn what you can offer from Biblical source to bolster up your advocated prohibition polity. I recollect one temperance crank's verdict—that the command to "do no murder" applied to the saloon, demonstrating how hard pushed he was for Scriptural authority on the subject.

W. R.—It might impress you as possessing force and fitness in that connection, would you but recognize temperance as a pre-eminently vital, moral and civic question. John, in Revelation, after saying of Babylon, "her sins reach unto heaven," mentions her merchandise of wine and of "the souls of men," prophesying, "The merchants made rich by her shall stand afar off for fear of her torment," as might be attested of the saloon; while in earlier reference, his statement, "The smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name," adapts to the mammoth liquor manufactories, pouring forth columns of smoke, whose "offence reacheth unto heaven," in operation to feed the saloon industry and multiply its victims doomed to destruction. Changing the figure, "As a fountain casteth out her waters, so she casteth out her wickedness, violence and spoil is heard in her." Those answerable for this traffic's duration should consider David's words, "Do ye judge uprightly, O ye sons of men? Ye weigh the violence of your hands in the earth"; with Jeremiah's accusation, "Also in thy skirts is found the blood of the poor innocents; yet thou sayest because I am innocent, surely His anger shall turn from me. Behold, I will plead with thee, because thou sayest, I have not sinned." Moreover, reliable estimate rates drink responsible for ten out of every eleven criminal murders committed. Victor Hugo sententiously asserts, "A man is killed in Paris; it is murder. The throats of fifty thousand are cut in the East; it is a 'question.'" Like discrimination modifies the deadly record of the liquor curse, unless not deemed even a question. Yet what truer pen-picture of your saloon than that suggested by Ezekiel, "And it came to pass after all thy wickedness [Woe, woe unto thee, saith the Lord] that thou hast built unto thee an eminent place, and thou hast made an high place at every head of the way"; for which Isaiah furnishes fitting finish, "He looked for judgment but behold oppression, for righteousness but behold a cry—therefore hath hell enlarged herself and opened her mouth without measure."

C. B.—I did not suspect you would set out to strike me dead on that do no-murder text! You actually talk as if I kept a saloon, who never so much as patronized one.

W. R.—You help keep any number in existence when your ballot fosters that nefarious institution, by insuring prosperity and protection to its proprietor. "For he that biddeth him Godspeed is partaker of his evil deeds," reasons John. Christian voters should heed the appeal, "My brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might; put on the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." Bunyan's opinion, "Religion is the best armor a man can have, but the worst cloak," is as Paul's, who writes of people so using it, "Such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ, and no marvel for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light."

C. B.—I begin to "catch on" as they say. I wondered what supporting Scripture you would find, knowing that the word "prohibition" is not in the Bible.

W. R.—Nor is the word "benediction," though the thought is wholly derived from there; so the shalt-nots of "Thus saith the Lord" and the Bible's uncompromising condemnation of strong drink, with some one hundred and thirty admonitions against it teach prohibition.

C. B.—Not prompt to illustrate, should I infer through "an embarrassment of riches" you are at a loss where to begin?

W. R.—Such inference is relevant, leading me to remind you that the unpopular term, "prohibition," simply signifies "a forbidden act." "In the beginning" God's first restriction laid upon man introduced prohibition. "Thou shalt not eat of it," to the disobedience of which command was attached a severe penalty. The arch-deceiver instituted the license permit as against prohibitory law, to the injury of the race and the suffering of woman, so naturally we antagonize that which despoils our Eden.

C. B.—And Eve-like, would beguile man to follow your advice who have yourself been misled! Ha, ha, you perceive I'm creditably familiar with that story.

W. R.—As regards his imputation may I retort in Sheridan speech, "The right honorable gentleman is indebted to his memory for his jests and to his imagination for his facts"? Accepting Christ, the seed of the woman that should bruise the serpent's head, as the Captain of our salvation, "whose we are and whom we serve," we plead as He hath taught, to lead not into temptation but to deliver from evil, when we petition for neither high nor low license but for no-license.

C. B.—Have you numerous anti-license texts in reserve?

W. R.—Answering Yankee fashion, what pertinent Scripture have you to vindicate your license policy?

C. B.—"Let not your good be evil spoken of" offers applicable and timely defense, since the taxation and limitation incident to the policy you condemn must be acknowledged "good" compared to that which allows the liquor traffic free, full right-of-way and lets in the floodtide of evil inevitably consequent.

W. R.—"Right-of-way" is conceivable only in legal sense through license-grant. We favor no such endorsement, but "limitation" to the extent of elimination, save for medicinal or mechanical purpose. Having testified that the liquor-seller produces or promotes evil proportionate to his trade, hear Moses, concerning whoever "hath wrought wickedness in the sight of the Lord, in transgressing his covenant" decree; "The hands of the witness shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hands of all the people. So thou shalt put the evil away from among you." Not the doctoring, but the driving out of his traffic by denying the liquor-seller existence, is the remedy for the saloon evil, and great importance attaches to right individual action of representative voters and legislators as witness-bearers, who could demand and enact prohibition, which all law-abiding people would help enforce.

C. B.—We could not successfully legislate spirituous beverages out of commerce if idiotic enough to so attempt, but can condition the dispenser thereof—"Thus far shalt thou go and no further."

W. R.—"It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful," not successful! We object to "Thus far shalt thou go" as permission. "Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees;" but approve the "no further" mandate as prohibition: "Thine eye shall not pity him, but thou shalt put away the guilt of innocent blood from Israel, that it may go well with thee." If you would obey Paul and be steadfast and unmovable in the work of the Lord, "forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord," rather than heed such as clamor, "Speak unto us smooth things, prophesy deceits," you would dispense with the dispenser.

C. B.—Evidently my text fails to impress you.

W. R.—It impresses me it is yours not Paul's, as appropriated, for it supplements his exhortation, "Destroy not him with thy meat for whom Christ died," associated (as before instanced) with His teaching against eating flesh, drinking wine or "anything whereby thy brother stumbleth." Therefore let not our good (which agreeing with that standard, would remove all temptation or the stones of stumbling) be evil spoken of! "But ye are turned aside out of the way, ye have caused many to stumble in the law," by legalizing what wrecks and ruins bodies and souls.

C. B.—You are both harsh and rash. Our sustained license scheme as opposed to your short-lived, anti-license experiments represents the "survival of the fittest." Professing "passion for souls" you would remove present barriers against a business you label murderous, in the chimerical hope that its direful work would cease or could be suppressed, untrammeled by tribute demands and regulations which in our judgment do good, while your plan can not, because, excuse slang, "it's no good," so I quote, "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

W. R.—Judgment that can pronounce the license and excise policy toward the liquor iniquity "good" in God's sight, we denominate scripturally unsound. Solomon contends, "In the revenues of the wicked there is trouble." "He that justifieth the wicked and he that condemneth the just, even they both are an abomination to the Lord." Isaiah alleges, "Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil" in connection with the admonition, "Woe unto them that justify the wicked for reward and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him;" and David argues, "Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by a law?" Therefore we inquire with Ezra, "O our God, what shall we say after this, and after all that is come upon us for our evil deeds? Should we again break thy commandments, and join in affinity with people of these abominations?"

Municipal Reform.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS, PH.D.

[February Theme in Topic-a-Month Course of Reform Studies.]

FIRST WEEK—HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT OF CITY PROBLEMS.

I. ORIGIN of cities. 1. Social instinct; 2. Protection; 3. Exchange.

II. Growth of cities. 1. Causes: (1) Factories; (2) transportation facilities for (a) persons, (b) food; (3) educational advantages; (4) amusements; (5) charities; (6) agricultural machinery reducing hand work on farms and sending superfluous labor to cities.

2. Statistics. Loomis' "Modern Cities" shows that the rush to cities is a world phenomenon and gives the figures for 1880.

3. Checks on the tendency cityward. (1) expense; (2) perils to health; (3) home-finding societies removing city children to farms; (4) increased facilities for reaching suburban homes from city offices by commutation tickets and trolleys; (5) establishment of social farm colonies from which the loneliness of farm life has been eliminated.

III. Strategic importance of saving the cities. Although the population of American cities is as yet only half as great as that of the rural districts, the cities already have greater commercial and intellectual, if not also greater political and religious power, because of concentration and organization. And in 1921 the cities of the United States will have an actual majority of the votes. Apply with stamp to Evangelical Alliance Charities Building, New York, for new booklet by Dr. Strong, on "The Twentieth Century City," and another by Prof. J. R. Commons, on "The Co-operative City." Send ten cents to the Reform Bureau, 210 Delaware Avenue, N. E. Washington, D. C., for the best though smallest book on this theme, "City Problems," by Prof. J. R. Commons. (Free, on request, to Bureau members paying $2.60 or more.)

SECOND WEEK—CITY PERILS AND REMEDIES.

IV. Perils of Cities. 1. Concentration of vices. (1) Liquors; (2) Sabbath-breaking; (3) impurity; (4) gambling; (5) political corruption.

2. Dangerous concentration of money power. (1) Franchises corruptly obtained. Send for pamphlet on this subject issued by the Philadelphia Municipal League, giving representative cases.

V. Remedies. In the writer's judgment, after eight years, not of theorizing but of experience in municipal reform work, the victorious program must include not physical street cleaning only, but moral street cleaning. Except in local option contests, city governments can not say, "No saloons," but they can and must say, "No saloon domination." Four planks are necessary to make a platform worth fighting for, viz., 1. Non-partisanship in city elections. 2. Civil service reform. 3. City ownership of water, light and transportation, or city referendum on franchises. 4. Enforcement of law. To omit any one of these is to build a bridge of escape from present ills with a span gone. (From Bureau leaflet, "A Municipal Program," free on request, to members.)

THIRD WEEK—CITY OWNERSHIP AND REFERENDUM.

(Sufficiently treated in two booklets by Prof. J. R. Commons above named. See also Lecture IV., sections 15 and 16, and notes of my Practical Christian Sociology.)

FOURTH WEEK—LAW ENFORCEMENT.

Seven ways to initiate law enforcement in a modern city, seven strings to the bow of sovereignty. 1. Through the mayor; 2. Through the police department; 3. Through the public prosecutor; 4. Through the judge; 5. Through the sheriff, who is in charge of the whole county and sworn to see that state laws are enforced; 6. Through the governor, who can require the sheriff, under penalty of dismissal, to enforce the laws; 7. Through the sovereign citizen of whom every court is the royal court. (From leaflet, "Our Country's Needs," free to all Bureau members, on request.) Whenever mayor and police and city prosecutor violate their oath to enforce the laws let such an "appeal to Cæsar" as the following be taken:

"To His Excellency, the Chief Executive of the State: The undersigned organizations and individuals hereby earnestly represent to you (1) that the laws of this state against Sabbath breaking, impurity, gambling and intemperance are, in common repute, so notoriously and habitually violated in our city as to convince us that this lawlessness has the connivance, if not the consent, of those city authorities whose sworn duty it is to enforce the laws; and (2) that our respectful appeals for the enforcement of these laws have been persistently disregarded; wherefore, we appeal to you to investigate this alleged lawlessness, and if it shall be found that our city officers have refused or willfully neglected to enforce said state laws, to use your powers as the chief executive of the state, by proclamation or otherwise, through the department of justice or through the sheriff or through other state officers under your direction, to secure to us and to our imperiled children the protection to which these neglected laws entitle us as citizens of this state; and we ask you to protect the future here and elsewhere by requesting the legislature to enact a law similar to one in force in Minnesota, Washington and New Hampshire, providing that any city or county officer who willfully neglects or refuses to enforce said laws may be punished with fine and deposition from office by indictment and trial in the courts."

SOMETHING TO DO.

Prepare for non-partisan municipal election in the spring. Petition state legislature for referendum on municipal civil service and city franchises. By petitions, or delegations, or both, let city officers be called on to enforce neglected laws.

Correspondence.

Mrs. Barney Reports Her World-wide Journeys.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"Will you go to Australia?" was the question which confronted the writer early in 1897. Other countries were to be taken in, but evidently that far-away land was the objective point. The same question had been presented and disposed of several times, but here it was again, very much alive and pressed with the Chieftain's usual vigor. The plea for a younger woman to be sent only brought forth, "You will never be younger than you are now," so the plans at first very vague began to take shape. "Going to Australia! well, you must want to travel, to start for the ends of the earth," said the people who did not understand the divine "needs be" which the pressure of the work can bring, and without which human orders could easily be set aside.

During my visit to lands hitherto reported, I had always before me Australia, and at last I was slowly sailing up the Yarra with Melbourne in sight. I was not going to strangers, for letters had reached me and white ribbons indicated my friends. Landing in Victoria, June 11, I am down to leave West Australia December 11, and shall have given just six months to the five Colonies. In that time I have traveled many thousand miles by costal steamers and railway, and held over two hundred and fifty services, besides much work which might be termed miscellaneous. From the first there was heartiest welcome from both Australasian and Colonial officers, with desire to arrange my time most advantageously for the work and also to give me the most favorable season for visiting the different sections of this vast island continent. I shall not attempt to divide up my report by colonies, neither do I need to enter into details regarding the general condition of our work, for THE UNION SIGNAL readers are kept posted through the able articles contributed by the Colonial press reporters; especially the comprehensive account of the triennial convention as given in THE UNION SIGNAL of June 24.

I heard warm praise from different sources concerning that important gathering under the leadership of Mrs. Nicholls, the Australasian president. She is a born general, and having led her own colony to victory on the question of adult suffrage, she will doubtless be the first woman elected to Parliament, and when there, it is admitted she will be the peer of any M. P., both in mental qualification and unquestioned integrity. Success in South Australia has given a great impetus to the movement, and there is a firm purpose throughout the colonies to work for the attainment of the franchise. Each colony seems blessed in most of its officers, and during the World's Convention I longed to annihilate space and present them to that august assembly, both for their own inspiration and the joy our sisters would have felt in meeting such noble workers.

I should like specially to name and describe the Colonial officers and superintendents of my department, most of whom are exceptional women, and the delegation would be incomplete without our World's flower mission superintendent, who, together with other friends, has sought to make my way comfortable and successful. Then the isolated workers and small unions, carrying on the work against heavy odds. Some of these I have touched en route, we having been mutually notified to look out for white ribbons, and we have put a good deal into the three or five minutes of train stopping. "God bless you, and give our love to Miss Willard," has been called after me again and again. The World's union will always mean more to them after that little experience, and the white ribbon will be more faithfully worn. Everywhere our women are loyal to our aims and methods of work and devoted to our leaders, whose names are household words. It has been good to listen to the stories connected with the visits of our former missionaries and to know that most of their work abides. I often think of the Master's words, "I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labor; others labored, and ye are entered into their labors," and with it I rejoice that others following me shall enter into like precious privilege. I have been greatly interested in finding THE UNION SIGNAL and the National publications in out-of-the-way places and to hear the earnest inquiries concerning the Temple and its founder. If I do not describe the receptions held at Colonial headquarters and the many local events of a similar nature, it is because words would fail me, and it is enough to say, such social functions were just what might be expected from white-ribboners. In some places they have been held in the city hall, with mayor and mayoress receiving and clergymen voicing the welcome.

In Queensland, South and West Australia, entrance was granted to all institutions included in my department, with privilege of holding services wherever desired; and in Queensland government authorities put a steamer at my disposal to visit their island prison, where I held five most interesting services, and in an inland town the magistrate drove me seven miles and remained to the meeting which he had previously arranged for me. In New South Wales I was greatly interested in the Industrial School for girls and the training ship where a similar work for boys is carried on. The superintendents in both places are enthusiastic over the possibilities in their work, which is of a high grade. In Victoria the Woman's Prison is under the exclusive care of a woman warden, who is one of "ours," and would be able to accomplish much in the way of reform, if only the facilities were at her disposal. Hospitals and benevolent asylums, with various other institutions, testify to the thoughtfulness for dependent and defective classes, and "our women" are well to the front in helpfulness and management. Much rescue work is carried on in various ways, but only a tithe of what is needed. The police matron question has come to the front and will be pushed to success.

Besides my regular work I have spoken for the Y. W. C. A., Endeavorers, Missionary Training College, policemen, and meetings of different societies, P. S. A. meetings and at the Geelong convention, which is the Australian Keswick. The latter was a wonderful gathering, and God greatly blessed the message, not only in removing prejudice against the W. C. T. U. and public speaking for women, but in personal help, many having given public testimony to the same.

The whole country is suffering from great business depression, arising from collapse in "booms" and banks, while some sections have had several years of drought, which means failure in many ways. Financially everything seems at a low ebb; this with the long distances and high rates of travel, together with the inevitable wear and tear of things inanimate, have made the missioner look to the pennies as never before; but the Chieftain and treasurer came to the rescue, proving the care of the World's union in things needful, and I am booked for the long pilgrimage still before me.

"Federation" is in the air, they say, and one hears a great deal of talk, but there seems much lacking even in unexpected circles; yet the time is bound to come when existing boundary lines within the ocean wall will be obliterated, and a national parliament to legislate for "one people" will be established. Meanwhile, one would like to see greater coöperation among Christian workers and different denominations, all of whom stand for the uplifting of humanity, but some practically ignore questions touching the cause of a great part of the social degradation and consequent loss.

How much must remain unsaid, but the friends I am leaving will kindly read between the lines and realize my loving appreciation and grateful thanks. Australia! How much the name means to me to-day! I am proud of our work and workers. Strong foundations have been laid and the W. C. T. U. is bound to be an ever-increasing factor, united to the "power that makes for righteousness."

Yours in hope and best of bonds,

(MRS.) J. K. BARNEY.

Local Union.

QUESTION.—Please tell us if, when the executive committee meets to do business for the union, it is the duty of the president of the union to preside, or ought the executive committee to elect another chairman? Should the secretary of the union do the secretary's work for such a meeting? And what work in particular should be done by the executive committee to the exclusion of other committees? Please define clearly the duties of an executive committee.

ANSWER.—The constitution of each local union ought to contain within itself the answers to these questions. If it does not, in any particular case, then that special union is not organized under a proper constitution. The constitutions of the various state, district, county and local unions differ in many points in different states. As a rule, however, the state issues a model constitution, which it requests all local unions to adopt.

So far as I am conversant with the constitutions of the various states, they are all modeled upon the constitution of the National union, so far as the make-up of the executive committee is concerned. The six General Officers of the National union, the presidents of the various states and territories, and the general secretaries of the Y and L. T. L. Branches make up the executive committee of the National W. C. T. U. The same rule obtains in the states with district or county presidents substituted for state presidents, and in some states the board of superintendents has a place upon the executive committee. The president always presides except when unavoidably absent, in which case her place is filled by the vice-president-at-large. The regularly elected secretary is also the secretary of the meetings of the executive committee, and performs all the duties incumbent upon her office. In the National Convention it is quite often necessary to hold a meeting of the executive committee while the Convention itself is in session. At such times the secretary keeps the minutes of one of the meetings, the assistant secretary of the other.

The president of a local union is, of necessity, the president of that part of the local union which has place in the meetings of the executive committee. Can you imagine any one other than Miss Willard presiding at the executive committee meetings of the National, or any one other than your state president at the executive committee meetings of your state? Why, then, should your local president resign the chair when she comes into a meeting of your local executive committee? If you elected her your head, she is as surely your head the executive board as of the meetings of the entire union. The secretary of the union is also the secretary of the executive committee.

As to the latter clauses of this question, what work belongs to the executive to the exclusion of all other committees, and what are its clearly defined duties, I would say that these must differ in different unions and even, at different times, in the same union. I think it will simplify the matter very much to remember that the executive committee is, in a very deep sense, the servant of the union. It exists to do the bidding of the union; to put the work of the union upon such a basis that it may be the most easily accomplished. In the National Convention the executive committee works early and late that it may systematize an almost interminable amount of business which would, otherwise, come in detail before the convention itself. At the close of a convention all unfinished business is referred to the executive committee. It stands between the convention and the work to be done. Of course, nothing that is done by the executive is valid unless ratified by the convention, hence, reports of all the meetings are read by the secretary.

The duties of an executive committee of a local union are, then, what the union chooses to have it do, and in general it systematizes the work and plans how it is to be done. If the members prefer that all business be transacted in open meeting they have only to so rule; if, on the other hand, they prefer that their regular meetings be enlivened by programs, they can remand all routine business or a part of it to the executive committee, and then act upon its reports.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee; he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved. In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength.—Psa. 55 : 22; Isa. 30 : 15.

REV. WILBUR F. ATCHISON, pastor of the Woodlawn M. E. church, Chicago, is not only an able preacher, but an ardent prohibitionist. A letter lately received from him contains the following forceful and prophetic words: "Permit me to express my sincere sympathy for you and your co-workers in your brave struggle. I would I had the money to put the beautiful building free from incumbrance into the hands of your faithful band. My conviction is, by the blessing of God honoring your efforts, in spite of a Judas-like opposition, that would long since have bankrupted any enterprise that had not in addition to its financial resources the unshrinkable asset of heroic moral purpose, and in spite of the blasphemous buffoonery of a Philistinist press retailing sacrilege at so much per line, the 'House Beautiful' will belong to the women, and its resources will sow the land knee-deep with prohibition truth, the harvest of which will mean the deliverance of America, and through America, the world from the curse of drink."

Miss Eva M. Shontz' brave effort to aid the Temple is beginning to tell. Before me lie a number of letters, the writers of which have been moved to send money by her stirring appeals for the "House Beautiful." One of these is Mrs. E. L. Stephens, Hawley, Pa., who pledged $100 to Miss Shontz at a Temple rally at Buffalo. She sends half the amount pledged. Edgewood, Ia., union took thirty of the cards after Miss Shontz' address, and sends the money for the same. They intend to keep on until they secure $100. The Harvey, Ill., union, moved by her eloquence, sends $25.

The Jamestown, O., W. C. T. U. had Miss Shontz address them last fall, and they pledged $30. A check for the above amount has been received from them. Mrs. A. F. Bush, Medina, N. Y., took twenty subscription cards at Buffalo at a rally meeting and has returned a check for the amount and a dollar over. Miss Shontz also moved the hearts of the Momence, Ill., W. C. T. U. women and they send $25, and a like sum is sent by the Pocahontas, Ill., W. C. T. U., also to be credited toward Miss Shontz' $25,000, and a similar sum has been sent by the North Baltimore, O., union, to be credited to the same. Miss Margaret Park, Newton, Kan., sends $22, $10 of which is to be credited on the above sum. She writes, "We in Newton have not done much but we hope to be able to do more, and cry, rah, rah, rah with the victors."

Mrs. T. C. Reiley, president of the fourth district Illinois W. C. T. U. is a woman of great ingenuity and persistency. Her ingenuity stands her in good stead for the Temple work. At the noted Willard Hall meeting Mrs. Reiley pledged to raise $100, and at once went to work to earn it, making all sorts of things and selling them. Her great specialty has been dolls' sunbonnets; people from all parts of the country have sent to her for them. She has raised $34 in this way. Can not we have a few more Mrs. Reileys?

If all presidents of unions would follow the example of the wife of Professor Bascom, of Williams College, Massachusetts, Miss Willard and the rest of us would soon breathe freely in regard to securing the needed $300,000. Mrs. Bascom writes: "Enclosed please find $30 for the Temple fund. It averages $2 each for the fifteen active members of our union. It is with deep regret that I send so small a sum, for it is my heart's desire that the W. C. T. U. own the Temple."

All orders for Temple Wheels, Temple bricks, mite-boxes, Baby Band lists and Temple programs should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two-cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel, mite-box or subscription card. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Our Children.

Bedtime.

THREE little girls are weary—
Weary of books and of play;
Sad is the world and dreary—
Slowly the time slips away.
Six little feet are aching,
Bowed is each little head;
Yet they are up and shaking
When there is mention of bed.

Bravely they laugh and chatter,
Just for a minute or two,
Then, when they end their clatter,
Sleep comes quickly to woo.
Slowly their eyes are closing,
Down again drops every head—
Three little maids are dozing,
Though they're not ready for bed.

That is their method ever—
Night after night they protest,
Claiming they're sleepy never—
Never in need of their rest.
Nodding and almost dreaming,
Drowsily each little head
Still is forever scheming
Merely to keep out of bed.

Edgar's Soldier Lesson.

REALLY it was too bad. Edgar was going out to play soldier. He slipped on the steps and twisted his ankle.

"My little lad must go to bed and get well," said Mamma Gates.

"Boo hoo," howled Eddy.

Uncle Caspar looked up from his paper and smiled.

"I don't want to go to bed. I want to go and be a soldier," sobbed poor Edgar.

"But if your ankle is not bathed and put to bed you will be very lame to-morrow."

"I don't care," whined Eddy. "I don't want to go to bed."

"I thought you were playing soldier," said Uncle Caspar.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, what does a soldier do?"

Edgar looked up puzzled. "He marches and he drums." Eddy looked at his drum and began to cry again.

"Is that all he does?"

"He doesn't have to go to bed," whined Eddy.

"But sometimes he gets hurt badly. He is shot in battle. Then what does he do? Does he howl and cry?"

Now, Uncle Caspar was an old soldier, whom Eddy admired very much.

"No-o-o! I guess not. I don't know," said the boy.

"No. He goes to the hospital. There he is as brave as when he drums and marches."

Edgar wiped his eyes and looked eagerly at his uncle. "Is going to bed and not crying being a good soldier?" he asked.

"Yes, my boy, that is the bravest part of it. Now let me be the ambulance—that's a wagon, you know—and take you to the hospital."

Uncle Caspar picked up Eddy in his arms and carried him gently to his chamber.

"Now, I'm going to be a good soldier," said the boy, with a smile. He did not wince when his uncle felt of the sore ankle and bound it up.

"That's a brave lad, Eddy," said his uncle. "Now play it does not hurt and go to sleep."

Half an hour later Edgar was dreaming. He looked like a brave little corporal taking his rest.

Uncle Caspar hung up Eddy's flag and gun where he could see them when he awoke. The drum with the soldier cap upon it was placed on the bed. Edgar limped down stairs the next day and went into camp on the sofa. He whined and complained no longer. He had learned a lesson, that a brave man is patient in suffering.

IS it raining, little flower?
Be glad of rain!
Too much sun would wither thee;
'Twill shine again.
The sky is very black, 'tis true;
But just behind it shines the blue.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—In accordance with my promise last week, that you should all have a word to say in this issue, you will find an extra column filled with brief sentences from the little letters that you have been so kind as to write me. It is not possible to publish them entire, for our Cozy Corner family is a large one and the white messengers come from my boys and girls all over the country. I hope that some of you will exchange letters, for that will make you better acquainted, as little cousins should be, and it will also be a means of improvement in the art of correspondence, an accomplishment that we all desire. Did you read the recipe for a good letter in a recent issue? Lovingly yours,

Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him, and makest him drunken also.—Hab. 2: 15.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes' Letter.

OUR readers will remember that last year at the annual meeting of the Wesleyan Methodists in England, that body voted down by a large majority, a resolution that all liquor sellers should be excluded from office in the church, and that this action was reported in THE UNION SIGNAL.

Last week's issue, January 13, contained a letter from Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, addressed to Miss Slack, and furnished by her to our Correspondence columns, wherein Rev. Hughes sets forth what he terms the absolute impracticability of the proposition and asserts that it is not only impracticable but unscriptural. We are sorry to take issue with so honorable and good a man as the gentleman named, and so great a church as the Wesleyan Methodists of England, but we feel it our duty to do so.

The specious argument of Dr. Hughes' letter will appear even to a casual reader. If there is no line of demarcation in the church at this late day between users and sellers of intoxicating liquors and total abstainers, we would inquire what the "temperance movement" Dr. Hughes talks about in that church has been, and what the "burden and heat of the day," borne by the promoters of the "temperance movement," has been. The Doctor wholesales the classes which would have to be excluded, which is misleading, and magnifies the difficulties. To us it would not seem hard to know who actually makes or sells intoxicating liquors, or leases property for the same, or raises hops for the same, or voluntarily remains as a stockholder in a company which engages in the business, or hard to draw the line among them at any point that might be agreed upon. It is a fundamental principle of every church and every organization that it has the right to say who shall and who shall not be members of it, and of course who shall and who shall not be officers of the same. The chief objection to the proposition in our judgment is that it did not say members instead of "officers," which would greatly simplify the difficulties in the case. If it is wicked to be in the liquor business, such people should not be members of the church, and there would then be no question about an official relation.

The Doctor's ad captandum argument about war would only apply to armies composed for the purpose of aggressive warfare and not for defensive; but granting his sweeping assertion it would not be "hypocrisy" to exclude liquor sellers and admit soldiers, it would be inconsistency. Following the reverend gentleman's argument nothing would ever be undertaken by the church until all could be done. From his reference to scriptural teachings it would appear that the brother believes in the gospel but not in the law. If he is correct in his belief that there is not a single temperance minister of experience and official responsibility in England favorable to the proposition of not having liquor sellers in official relation to the church, then the "Thou shalt" and "Thou shalt not" element must have become dim since the days of John Wesley.

The great founder of the Wesleyan Church in preparing the general rules for his societies as early as 1743 inserted one prohibiting "buying or selling spirituous liquors or drinking them, unless in cases of extreme necessity." He not only prepared this rule but enforced it, for in one year he excluded from one of his societies seventeen members for drinking and two for retailing spirituous liquors; and contrary to Dr. Hughes' assertion that "both the New Testament and Christian history proves that this is not the way in which evil trades are to be abolished in the Christian era," this was one of the rules of which John Wesley declared, "We are taught of God to observe even in his written Word." The rule stands to-day in the exact words of Wesley, in the Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Wesley was outspoken on the subject in his pulpit. In his sermon on "The Use of Money," in 1760 he used these words:

Neither may we hurt our neighbor in his body; therefore, we may not sell anything which tends to impair health. Such is, eminently, all that liquid fire commonly called drams, or spirituous liquors. It is true these may have a place in medicine . . . although there would rarely be occasion for them, were it not for the unskillfulness of the practitioner; therefore, such as prepare and sell them only for this end may keep their conscience clear. . . . But all who sell them in the common way to any that will buy are poisoners general. They murder His Majesty's subjects by wholesale, neither does their eye pity or spare. They drive them to hell like sheep; and what is their gain? Is it not the blood of these men? Who, then, would envy their large estates and sumptuous palaces? A curse is in the midst of them; the curse of God cleaves to the stones, the timber, the furniture of them. The curse of God is in their gardens, their walk, their groves, a fire that burns to the nethermost hell. Blood, blood is there; the foundation, the floor, the walls, the roof, are stained with blood! And canst thou hope, O thou man of blood! though thou art clothed in scarlet and fare sumptuously every day—canst thou hope to deliver down thy fields of blood to the third generation? Not so, for there is a God in heaven; therefore thy name shall soon be rooted out.

These are the men that Rev. Hugh Price Hughes deems it unscriptural to exclude even from official relation in the church. They are they whose business has slain more than war, famine and pestilence. Instead of bearing the "heat and burden" of pushing Christ's kingdom in this direction, has not this great church degenerated since the days of its heroic founder?

Women Wage-Earners.

REV. R. A. WHITE, of Chicago, pastor of Stewart Avenue Universalist church, is quoted in the public print as saying, "Women workers are the greatest curse that has ever come to the world of labor." Well, well, when did the men come to own the earth? It must have been since 4004 B. C., for thereabout God said, "Let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air and over the cattle, and over all the earth." The reverend gentleman also makes women wage-earners largely responsible for child labor and the "army of the unemployed loafing about the streets and stealing from the passers-by or entering the houses of the peaceful and robbing them of their hard-earned wages." His pronunciamento was at the Chicago Neighborhood House, and must have been very comforting to the slum element, if any of them heard him, and we wonder how long it would take such preaching to reclaim them.

Let us see. According to this doctrine women should not be wage-earners, so that frees all the idle, shiftless, wanton and wicked girls from any obligation to reform so far as industry is concerned. It excuses the shop girls, seamstresses and all others who are supporting themselves and helpless parents, children or husbands from their self-imposed tasks. In fact, it releases four million honest, intelligent, industrious wage-earners in the United States, and puts a large proportion of them into the pauper class, together with all who are dependent upon them, and how is this to help matters? We agree with Mr. White that the industrious woman has been one of the factors in causing the price of labor to fall, but a small one in comparison with the introduction of machinery and other causes. But we would like to inquire by what law of God or man women should be kept in idleness or their toil be unremunerative. We would like Mr. White to tell us how it came about that there are so many women wage-earners in the United States. We concede that women and girls now occupy many of the places once filled by men. Are women, then, naturally so industrious that they fought for work and so drove men out, or were they themselves driven to it by want as mankind has been from time immemorial? Did they seize these places just for fun or the love of it, or did the men drop many of them, or be dropped by their employers because of their idle, slipshod, non-attentive ways? Why do the women hold the places after they get them? Is it supposable that big money-making business houses are satisfied with women simply because they are cheap? Would they let their business suffer to save a few cents or dollars in wages? When men offer to work for the same price, why are they not employed? What does Mr. White propose to do with the surplus sixty thousand women in Massachusetts? Is he relying upon the announced discovery in Germany whereby only men are to be born into the world?

And so we might go on asking questions which Mr. White never would answer and never could answer unless he can prove that women are responsible primarily and all the way along for all the idleness, drunkenness, shiftlessness and crime of the world. We have read of a celebrated man who, when he was told that his house was on fire said, "I never meddle with household affairs, call my wife." If women only could rise to this sublime state of indifference (equal to absorption into Nirvana), they could, no doubt, feel the quicksands close about them and their families without any more emotion than the Sphinx, but they are not built that way, and thank God there are still mothers who will "work their finger nails off" for their children, and wives who will care for sick and unfortunate husbands, and will even go on sheltering and loving poor broken sots who scarcely bear a semblance to those they promised to love. When a man talks as Mr. White did he has no conception of the heroic devotion of thousands of girls toiling over the compositor's case to keep a roof over the heads of aged parents, daily dreading the announcement of a type-setting machine, which means that they go out they know not where; of the thousands of widows worn to the quick, body and soul, that their children may have wholesome food and an education, their lives such a daily crucifixion as would wring tears from a flint.

We pity unfortunate men, we pity honest poverty, we pity broken wrecks of drink and crime, but we pity women as well as men, and is there not a unity of humanity? Should not men and women have an equal chance? Or shall woman be condemned to inaction, to silence, to nonentity, that men may live and thrive? Such talk is simply bosh, and belongs over in China with the strangled girl babies, and is not of Christ or His teachings.

Our English Leader.

THE Lady Henry Somerset has again sent in her resignation as president of the British Women's Temperance Association. So far as we know the executive committee has not yet acted upon it, but we take it as a foregone conclusion that it must be accepted. Lady Henry has not been able for a number of months, on account of continued ill-health, to give personal attention to the work, but this will not reconcile a large part of her constituency to the proposed change. Her heroic life for twelve years as their leader has endeared her beyond measure to British hearts. She has spared neither time nor money nor social prestige—not even herself. The record of advance along the temperance line—of change in sentiment among all classes, the personal salvation of many, the institutional work for lifting up humanity, all these, and other lines as well, bear the impress of her activity, and that of her co-laborers. As an eloquent speaker she is unsurpassed. As a woman she is tender and true with a deep vein of piety. Her New Year's letter to her constituency was most affectionate. She spoke of her disappointment at not being able to go Duxhurst for some time past, expressed thanks for the dear letters received and for the prayers offered for her recovery, and showed her trustful resignation in the following words:

While there is much in life that seems to us a mystery that we can not solve, there is, at any rate, the growing certainty that His will is best, and that come what may of sorrow or of pain, of joy or happiness, a few years more of this mortal life or an earlier entrance into the world beyond, it matters very little, so that our wills be blended with that great Divine will of which we are a part. We look out over the horizon that lies spread before us, and it seems as though the path grew straighter, the way less devious and intricate, and, above all, as though in the strong noontide light, the footsteps of Him who went before us are more plainly seen. God grant that we may have the strength to follow that way; we do not walk alone, for by our side there is that constant Presence that seems to grow more tangible, more real, as the days go by.

Aside from these qualities, her unvarying kindness to American white-ribboners, and especially to Miss Willard after her mother passed beyond, her helpfulness to us in many ways, her generosity, her sympathy with our methods and institutions, have endeared her to thousands of her American sisters. Lady Henry will not drop out of our affections, even though she should cease to be officially connected with our great organization. We are sure that all will join with THE UNION SIGNAL in saying, God bless Lady Henry and restore her to health.

Maine Prohibition.

A GOOD deal is being said about the failure to enforce the Maine Prohibition Law. As soon as Neal Dow was dead the little dogs began to bark. Of course, the law never has been perfectly enforced, and it has never been claimed that it was. In Chicago the law against stealing isn't perfectly (!) enforced. It is claimed that there is a system of bribery underlying the liquor business in Maine, and that "saloon-keepers regularly pay hush money to somebody, presumably the police officials." In Chicago this is an everyday affair. A legislative commission is now sitting in this city to investigate official ways that are dark and elbows that are crooked. A cartoon in a Chicago paper a few days ago showed a pig standing on its hind legs and bearing a placard with the inscription, "I am blind but not dumb." This, with the expression on the face of the big policeman who was interviewing the "blind pig," told the tale that when the pig got into trouble it squealed on the protecting, profitsharing policeman. What if that had been in Maine? Why do we not repeal our laws in regard to bribery, murder, and the sale of liquor in Illinois. They are violated every day. This would be as reasonable as to repeal prohibitory liquor laws because they are violated. A crusade against corruption of the basest and most barefaced kind on the part of those sworn to enforce the laws is needed. Without it good citizenship is a vagary of the brain.

Here are some facts about Maine:

Before prohibition there were in Maine seven distilleries and two breweries. Now, not one of either in the state.

Many cargoes of West India rum were imported every year. Now, not even one puncheon is received.

Formerly, rumshops everywhere; one in every hamlet. Now, in more than three-fourths of the state, having three-fourths of the population, the grogshop is unknown. An entire generation has grown up there, never having seen a saloon or the effects of one.

The quantity of liquor now sold is not one-twentieth what it was before prohibition. In Portland the quantity is not one-hundredth part of what it used to be, and the city is twice as large.

The people used to spend every twenty years in strong drink the entire valuation of the state. Now, one million dollars will more than pay for all the liquor smuggled into the state and sold in violation of law.

Maine saves annually more than twenty million dollars, which but for prohibition would be spent, lost, wasted in drink.

Maine is now one of the most prosperous states in the Union. Before it was the poorest. There was dissipation, unthrift and decay. Now, everywhere is seen thrift, industry, prosperity.

In 1884, after an experience of prohibition for thirty-three years, that policy was put in the constitution by 77,045 majority.

CHURCH statistics for 1897 show that the forty-five different denominational bodies in the United States have a total of 25,919,027 communicants. The total net gains during the year were 630,951, the Roman Catholic church (7 bodies) heading the list with an increase of 174,516; the Methodists (17 bodies) follow with 77,616; the Lutherans (19 bodies) with 69,555; Latter Day Saints (2 bodies) 63,370; Baptists (13 bodies) 40,071; Presbyterians (12 bodies) 29,816. Of single body denominations the Disciples of Christ show an increase of 47,407; Christian Scientists 15,000; Congregationalists 14,805; and that showing the smallest gain of all (of returns obtainable) is the Church of the New Jerusalem, 147. The New York Independent, to whom we are indebted for these figures, regrets that it can not point to indications immediately favorable to Christian unity. We presume the editor really means organic unity, and may we suggest in this connection that the two are not synonymous terms? Can the measure of Christian unity be estimated by figures? Because two new denominations have been added to the list of churches during the year must we therefore conclude that there has been no "real advance" in Christian unity?

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

Miss Elizabeth Preston, president of North Dakota, was a caller at this office upon her return from the Anti-saloon convention at Columbus, O. In our next issue she will give us a newsy letter about the convention.

Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, president of Kentucky, and assistant National recording secretary, attended the Alabama state convention and rejoiced everybody by her account of the National Convention, and by her fine address the principal evening of the convention. Not only that, but she took the state out of the slough of financial depression and debt, and we know something of what that means. We wish all of our weak or discouraged states might feel Mrs. Beauchamp's strong, masterful spirit and her sweet persistency for the cause. They would rise up and go forward.

There is an editor who, in his advertisements makes bold to say that "mother and heaven" are "all goo"—good to serve up to silly women in namby-pamby women's papers, or words to that effect. We wish that white-ribboners who read these lines would think a minute about the public atmosphere that permits such utterances without giving them a second thought. This editor says he is "for home," but we know that home is the out-blossoming of the mother and the foretaste of heaven. We fancy he is "for home" "for revenue only." We wonder what sort of man he can be? We know his magazine has a circulation of hundreds of thousands among "our best people." These are "signs of the times" that fairly take one's breath away.

Adeline, Duchess of Bedford, read an important paper before the late Conference of Women Workers, in London. It was a record of actual work and actual experience. She visits Aylesbury regularly and has brought much comfort and consolation to Mrs. Maybrick. The Duchess advocated the following rules by which she has regulated her own work: "That inquiry should be made into the circumstances of each prisoner, and that aid should be extended them upon the expiration of their sentence. Visits should be made often and regularly; an accurate diary should be kept, which could be referred to when necessary; personal inquiry should be made into institutions for the reform of intemperate, destitute and unfortunate women; a close acquaintance with a few convicts was more effective than a superficial acquaintance with many; they were to be urged to sign the temperance pledge, and every pains should be taken to help them to keep it, and every promise made them should be implicitly kept."

Col. C. J. Holt, 6034 Ingleside Ave., Chicago, Ill., is giving a very humorous lecture which he illustrates with oil paintings, wherein a convention of barnyard fowls is set forth. The question is, how to get rid of rats? Inasmuch as rats figure so largely as judges, jurors and witnesses defeats are inevitable, but the hens finally rise to the occasion. It makes one laugh to look at the pictures and we can imagine the effect of the lecture. Colonel Holt has worked in several eastern states and in Illinois, and in 1892 and 1893 secured about 600 members for the W. C. T. U. In 1894 over 500 joined at his meetings in Iowa and a number of W's and Y's were organized. Since November, 1895, he has been at work in the Dakotas. In South Dakota 200 joined the Y's and 464 the W's. In North Dakota over 600 joined and a number of unions were organized in both states, and over 18,000 took the pledge. Colonel Holt always holds afternoon meetings for the W. C. T. U. and always presents the pledge at his evening meetings. He never fails to raise the money necessary for the meeting and often puts money in the local treasury. He has great faith in the W. C. T. U. and is one of our most successful brother helpers.

Young Woman's Branch.

The Y Testimonial to Mrs. Barnes.

THE readers of THE UNION SIGNAL and the Y's that were present at the Buffalo Convention will remember that the Y conference adopted resolutions of appreciation of the twenty years' service of Mrs. Barnes and ordered them engrossed and presented to her with a purse of money, which the Y's were to raise for the World's work.

It took some time to arrange matters, but it was my privilege on Friday, January 7, to take the resolutions to Mrs. Barnes' home and in the name of the Y's of the United States to present them to her.

They were the prettiest resolutions I have ever seen. The entire picture was eighteen by twenty-four inches, and was prettily framed in gilt. The resolutions were engrossed on fine paper and around them was a mat on which was painted a spray of oak and ivy leaves and lilies of the valley. The painting was done by an Ohio Y, Mrs. Grace R. Hill, of Glenville, and is a credit to her and the work. As Mrs. Barnes looked at it and read the closing words, "May the beauty of the Lord our God rest upon her and establish thou the work of her hands," tears came to her eyes and turning she kissed me and I knew that was her thanks to the Y's of America for the little token of love and confidence.

Along with the resolutions was presented twenty-five dollars in money to be used for the World's work. Mrs. J. Tyler Jobson, of Richmond, Va., has charge of raising this money, and faithfully has she done her work. There is a little more money on hand but we have decided to retain it until Easter that others who may desire to contribute to the fund may have an opportunity. It is not in large sums that the amount has been made up, but in the many littles, and we wish every Y in the United States would send its dime. Let all contributions be sent direct to state Y secretaries or to Mrs. Jobson.

May God's richest blessing attend dear Mrs. Barnes in all her work, and may the seed she has been sowing all these years bring forth abundant fruit.

ELLA A. BOOLE,
Gen. Sec. Y Branch.

The Organizer's Fund.

THE first step in the promotion of any enterprise is a public sentiment in its favor; its aims and methods must be understood before it can claim adherents who will be willing to take it up actively and promote its interests.

Temperance work does not differ in this respect from other reforms, and, as organized effort accomplishes the best results, it is most desirable that young woman's unions be formed. But how can this be attained when the subject has never been presented to the young women themselves who, perhaps, look with prejudice upon a movement which, they think, does not affect them personally and deals only with reform?

To interest, enthuse and enlist the young women in temperance work as represented by the Y Branch of the W. C. T. U., the most effective way is to send a Y organizer into unorganized localities. But unless unions already formed manifest their interest by contributing toward a fund for expenses, she can not go and much zeal is diverted into other channels for lack of knowledge. Last year the response to the appeals for this fund were so far from general, that less than seventeen dollars was contributed. Of course this sum could not accomplish much, but we are hoping for better things in 1898, and if each member of a Y union would feel a personal responsibility in the matter and send ten cents annually to spread the gospel of temperance among the young women of our land greatly increased accessions to our ranks might be reported by our organizers who were thus enabled to reach and influence many unawakened minds.

Will not state Y secretaries bring this fund prominently to the attention of the local unions and thus make a special effort to increase the membership in our own country?

Contributions should be sent to the custodian of the fund, Mrs. F. S. Evans, 161 West 84th St., New York.

Attention, Y's.

WE urge all local unions to make the five-cent per capita assessment for the benefit of the Temperance Hospital, but ask that no definite action be taken until you receive further word, as we have in preparation a more lengthy communication disclosing our plans. We will send them to you through your state secretaries, and will also publish in THE UNION SIGNAL. Reserve any moneys for the hospital fund to be sent through your custodian,

CORA W. LARIMORE,
HANNAH COLLINS, Assistant.

Notice.

CLARA PARRISH sends to the Y's an appeal for fifteen or twenty "Y Song Books." Which union will embrace the privilege of thus contributing to the usefulness of our Y missionary? Report to Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, 126 W. 103d St., New York city.

World's W. C. T. U.

Nova Scotia.

THE second annual convention of the Nova Scotia W. C. T. U. was held at Windsor, October 5–8.

A welcome meeting was held on the evening previous to the formal opening of convention, Mrs. T. B. Smith, one of the oldest workers in W. C. T. U. lines in the province, greeting the delegates. A pleasing feature of this meeting was the presentation by Mr. Young, American consul at Windsor, of a check for $25 to the Y workers of the place, thus making himself the first life member of the Y's in the Maritime provinces.

At 9:30 the next morning the convention was called to order by Mrs. Chesley, president, and the usual business proceeded with. The president's address was enthusiastically received, a rising vote of thanks being given and the Chautauqua salute. The address showed increased activity in temperance work during the year. Sixteen departments of work are carried on under the auspices of the provincial W. C. T. U. During the year an impetus to interest in temperance lines had been given in some localities by holding meetings on, or as near as possible, the birthday of Gen. Neal Dow, the honored temperance reformer, who has since passed to his eternal reward.

A petition was sent to Dominion parliament against kinetoscope pictures of prize fights, racecourses, gambling and lotteries and in favor of raising the age of protection. In our provincial legislature three bills relating to women were presented, one to confer the right of equal suffrage, one to admit women to the practice of law, and one to amend the married woman's property act. In addition, the president's address showed considerable increase in our membership during the year.

Forty-two dollars were raised in response to an appeal of the World's W. C. T. U. for their houses of refuge for fugitive Armenians.

Three departments of work have been added during the year, social purity, scientific temperance instruction and the Victorian order of nurses.

Adding largely to the interest of our annual gathering was the presence of Miss Agnes Slack, of England, corresponding secretary of the World's W. C. T. U. Miss Slack has a pleasing personality, and her addresses were listened to with much pleasure and profit both by members of convention and the general public.

The Y progress in Nova Scotia gave relatively a fine showing for the year, the Windsor Y's having been particularly active. In addition to being instrumental in the formation of societies, gaining many honorary members within their own limits, they had gone into the rescue work and adopted a little girl, saved from a life of destitution and sin.

Our session at Windsor was a very pleasant season. Hospitality seemed to be in the air and welcome beamed from all faces upon the white-ribboned women—but, alas! for these kind people. Barely had the members of convention reached their homes when this interesting and historic town was burned to the ground. Beautiful homes, lovely trees, churches, schools, places of business became things of the past. Another sad commentary on the results of the rum traffic.

And so, as to-day we recall the pleasures of our second annual gathering there comes the sad thought of these homeless ones, made so through the influence of the foe for whose extermination we of the W. C. T. U. have combined.

Let us renew the struggle more vigorously than ever, and with full consecration and untiring effort, an impression more marked will surely be made along all the lines of our work.

News from the Field.

DEAR STATE REPORTERS:—Some of you have been very faithful in sending in your monthly bulletins, notwithstanding the tardiness in publication during the past few weeks, occasioned by the press of Convention matter and the World's reports. To you we extend cordial thanks, both for THE UNION SIGNAL and the states you represent. The position of state reporter is an important one, for "according to your (reported) works are you judged" by those outside your state. Looking back over the "Field News" for the past year, we find that Louisiana has the best record for the frequency of reports, followed closely by Michigan, Minnesota, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, New York, Wisconsin, East Washington, California, North and South, both Dakotas, Kansas, Massachusetts, Oregon, Nebraska, Ohio, Texas, Oklahoma and Virginia, all of which have been represented with commendable regularity. Some states have been heard from only once or twice during the year; others not at all. This is not as it should be, for the good work that is going on in all the states should be made known through the department of Field News. Below is appended a revised list of state reporters for the present year. If there are any corrections to be made, will state presidents please notify us as to who their official representative is? With conventions and holidays over, plans of work outlined, and space for reports at your disposal, we hope to chronicle a vast forward movement among the local unions through the medium of the official reporters.

TREASURY day, December 7 (our own red-letter day, the birthday of our faithful, efficient state treasurer, Mrs. Woods) was generally observed in different ways. We hope each year to add to its interest and make it "notable" to every union.

Various plans are being formed to create new interest and give fresh impetus to the work. Echoes from state, National and World's conventions keep the memories fresh, as we recall, "it was good to have been there." May they be heard in every corner of our land. The superintendents are sending out leaflets and helps that preparation for service may find an abundant harvest at reaping time. Delaware county reports as follows:

"We hope this winter to do something in the way of serving coffee to our trolley men. We are working for the erection of a public drinking fountain. Up to date we have $60 on hand. We have secured space once a week in each of our three daily papers. The superintendent's report for November says, 882 lines, which were valued at ten cents per line, makes $88.20. The editors seem willing to publish our items, and the column is being read with interest. Hold our monthly meetings the entire year, no summer vacation, and the interest is being well sustained.

"The anniversary of the W. C. T. U. of Chester was inaugurated December 9, at the Madison Street M. E. church, and continued all day Friday, December 10. The secretary's report was read by Mrs. Neal. She said that the association has been making progress all along the line. Last spring we presented the curfew ordinance to our city council. It was ten yards long, and had 800 names upon it, but it was lost."

Luzerne county reports a most successful social held at the home of Mrs. Annabel M. Holvey, the new publisher of our state paper, The Bulletin, in West Pittston, on the evening of December 3. About one hundred and fifty of the friends of Prohibition gathered to enjoy the interesting program, which consisted of music, readings, recitations and short addresses, all bearing upon the temperance question. Refreshments were served and a generous collection for the benefit of the work was taken.

The Wilkes-Barre W. C. T. U. have held a treasury day social. An interesting and instructive program was rendered and a good collection taken.

From Westmoreland county we have the good news along an educational and financial line. In November the Scottdale union gave a matrons' medal contest in the Presbyterian church. We think this is the first contest of the kind ever held in the county, and it was successful in every detail to the extent of our highest expectations. The six contestants were all matrons belonging to the union, and the performance of each was a credit to the organization.

The silver medal was won by Mrs. L. H. Leitzell, and the second prize, a year's subscription to the American Home Magazine, given to every second prize winner in these medal contests by a gentleman in Chicago, was captured by Mrs. George Parker.

In connection with the oratorical contest a musical contest was also carried on, the contestants being six young ladies who rendered their pieces on a piano entirely hidden by screens from the audience.

The gold medal was won by Miss Lida Barnhart, the American Home Magazine by Miss Manda Hutchinson. The ladies of the union realized a neat sum from the venture, to be used in carrying forward their work. To other unions seeking something novel by which to replenish depleted treasuries, we highly recommend the matrons' medal contest.

Our faithful comrade, Miss C. M. W. Foster, Johnstown, sends the following to pass along for an uplift:

"We had a very pleasant and helpful visit from our new state president, Mrs. Chambers, December 20 and 21. Although the weather was the most inclement of the season, she had the courage to visit two of our unions, though there were but few to meet her; those who did, we may believe, caught new enthusiasm and will communicate it to their comrades. She also visited, with the county officers, the eighth ward of our city, and there organized a new union with twenty members, including a few of a neighboring union which had ceased to hold meetings. Three honoraries were also added. Our county organization is very much encouraged by this first visit we have had of a state president. Our last year vice-president, Mrs. Hill, last summer made us a similar visit, notifying us of her coming so that we had the central union in attendance. We have several points in view where we have been preparing ground for reorganization and some new unions."

The last pleasant and profitable county convention held in McKean county has not failed to give fresh impetus to the work there. The reports were such as to inspire greater diligence by the efficient work that had been accomplished. Mrs. Mabel Conklin held a school of methods and lectured. Mrs. M. E. Dauls, of Bradford, one of the oldest members of the county, gave a report of an autograph quilt which she had planned and completed and which brought more than fifty dollars into the county treasury. The members of the convention were so much pleased with the loving interest with which she had planned and followed out the delightful scheme that they made her a present of the quilt.

We always look to "loyal little Laurence" as marching on with unabated zeal and hearty good-will. The county corresponding secretary sends these cheery words: "I thought you might like to have a quarterly report" (how I wish every one would send such). "Drove sixty miles, visited four unions, assisted in two public meetings, attended two schools of methods and two county executive meetings, assisted in two public dinners, one for our Willard Hall and one given to the old ladies in the Elmira home, arranged ten meetings for Mrs. Edholm." If all the workers "keep pace" with that we shall not be found lacking in any good thing. Their last county convention was one of deep earnestness and renewed consecration.

The interest in all lines of work keeps the workers in Bradford county zealous in the cause, as noted in the following report: "Mrs. Mabel Conklin came to us early in November. She won all who heard her and gave the work a great impetus. Two Y's were organized by her, one in Troy, with upwards of fifty active and fifteen honorary members, Mrs. Mabel Mitchell, president. Members were added to the unions, much interest aroused among the people. Monthly mothers' meetings held in the homes of some mothers who are unable to leave home or who have not yet become sufficiently interested to become members, are largely attended and found most helpful. The cigaret question has been the absorbing theme with some unions of this county. On Christmas day the Y's of Troy faithfully visited all trains and passed the beautiful Christmas letter from our railroad superintendent to all trainmen."

Listen and hear the earnest words that ring out from the L. T. L's. The state secretary's circular with leaflet from state president (Wesley Burns), have such inspiration and well-planned lines of work as to keep Pennsylvania "ahead every time." Mrs. Preston suggests "what we can do in 1898," and I know all will rally to her call.

Adams county writes hopefully of the work in Gettysburg, pursuing the advanced methods, brave and loyal to the work as given them by their beloved leader, Mrs. Frances H. Walter. They are planning an entertainment for the convention fund. In one week they gave out about 170 papers for the depot reading rooms and fire engine house. Their physical culture drills are still an attractive feature of their meetings.

Berks county.—The large lecture room in the Stauffer building, Reading, was crowded with parents and friends of the graduating class at the second annual commencement of the L. T. L. The class presented a fine appearance in its colors—red, white and blue. This class of 1897 contained ten girls and five boys. The salutatory, the orations on "Loyal Temperance Legion Work" and "The Need of the Age," the valedictory, as well as the many pieces of music, were finely rendered. Great credit is due Mrs. Monyer for the excellence and fine rendering of the program throughout. This L. T. L. is one of the most active in the state under her leadership.

The Neal Dow Senior Legion of Lebanon numbers thirty active pledged members. Two sets of contestants preparing for medal contests, six young men and six young women. They have taken up all five of our departments of work, as well as parlor and contest work. Have organized an Anti-Cigaret League. Surely this L. T. L. has been anointed with the spirit of the grand man whose name it bears. Let such a record be the inspiration for every Legion in the state.

Miss Margaret Wintringer, of Illinois, has been added to the list of National L. T. L. organizers and chalk-talkers.

The new program, "Model L. T. L. Annual Meeting" is worthy of special attention. Wherever well carried out it can hardly fail to result in an increased interest in existing Legions, or in the organization of Legions where there are none. We wish it might be rendered at every coming state, county and district W. C. T. U. convention, and given under the auspices of every local W. C. T. U. during the year. It was prepared by Mrs. Addie Northam Fields; the price is five cents.

A catechism upon Political Equality, adapted to the use of young people, is soon to be prepared by one who is not only a member of the Woman Suffrage League, but also a county superintendent of the L. T. L. Further notice will be given.

Effort is being made to bring out a Senior edition of Volume I of our Lesson Manuals; the result will be announced later.

It is hoped that a revised edition of the L. T. L. catalogues will soon be ready, which will make plain the distinction between our Senior and Junior badges, and give other recent information.

Much complaint having reached us in regard to the frail nature of the clasp pins upon our Senior badges, the W. T. P. A. have been requested to order in future only stick pins, as these have proved satisfactory to those who have used them.

In response to a desire for a prize flag for the Legions of the United States, contributions and pledges have been received from a few states. It will be necessary to receive responses from others if the flag is to be purchased. Large contributions are not necessary, but we desire that each state and territory shall be an owner in the flag. Contributions should be sent to the National L. T. L. secretary.

The executive committee of the National W. C. T. U. has given its hearty endorsement to (1) the wearing of the white ribbon by all pledged Legioners, in addition to their own distinctive badge, when desired; (2) the appointment of each state L. T. L. secretary or superintendent by her own state executive committee (where there is no objection) as custodian of L. T. L. National dues, these dues to be forwarded as a whole to the state treasurer at such time as she shall designate. This measure is desired for the sake of the convenience both of the state treasurer and L. T. L. secretary, as much trouble and mistake has arisen for want of this method.

From the department of Christian citizenship of the National W. C. T. U. a call has come for our Legions everywhere to lend a hand in the effort to inaugurate a "new Fourth of July" in every town in the United States. It is suggested that Legions unite with the Junior societies of the churches in demonstrations upon that day; the Legions can take the initiative in this matter wherever it seems advisable. After the street demonstration the Legion may gather for a patriotic rally at some convenient point. We shall endeavor to have a suitable program prepared for such rallies. We speak of this matter thus early that Legions may be working towards it during the year. We also ask, in the interests of Christian citizenship, that much use be made of our Legioners in election contests, at the polls and elsewhere, through distribution of appropriate literature and in every other practical manner. We will call at the close of the year for a report of work done in this direction.

School Savings Banks.

DEAR COMRADES:—The need of teaching economy grows upon us every year. Many of you regretted, with me, that Ian Maclaren in writing his "Impressions of America" for the Outlook, after his lucrative visit to us, was constrained to pay such tribute to our improvidence. You will perhaps recall his words: "The Americans are not an economical people. If one were placed on the witness-box he would be obliged to declare they were distinctly thriftless. When an American understamps a letter it is not because he grudges the money, for he would prefer to send a telegram, and he flings his money about with a gorgeous prodigality. We can only stand aside and wonder, yet we may be allowed to shake our heads, and have some misgivings as to whether prodigality is for the good of the individual character and the firm upbuilding of the people. Does it conduce to stability and self-restraint to be quite indifferent about to-morrow and save nothing of to-day's earnings? Is there not everywhere a certain want of prudence and management that can not in the long run minister to the moral strength or even the material wealth?" Then he answers the questions with the kindest commiseration, saying, as some of us well know, that "every great empire has been built on thrift," and unless we "cultivate the homely virtue and simple habits of living," we can have no stable endurance.

This thrift training is a matter of vital importance to us. We have the excellent school savings banks system, transplanted from France and Belgium, that is thriving well where we have set it, and is already bearing fruit in some 350 public schools in the United States, several parochial, Indian training and charity schools. It is also in Girard College and the West Chester, Pa., Normal school.

This system takes root easily and, it would seem, ought to be planted in every school in the land. A little thoughtful care and fostering on the part of one or two men or women, who have the welfare of our republic and the endurance of our people at heart, in each school district, could settle this growth of thrift which would benefit the coming generation and be a telling force on the whole nation.

The advantages are so marked in localities where each child has these school opportunities for placing on interest every week the pennies he may save or earn, and at the same time gain initial business knowledge and a recognition of the value of money to accumulate and distribute, that inquiries are continually coming to me in regard to the simple forms employed.

Though this teaching is in some schools in several states it is in no school in Utah. Mrs. Gilmer read a paper on School Savings Banks before the Federation of Clubs in Salt Lake City recently which created so much interest that a committee of the club was appointed to further the work. This committee is getting testimonies from school principals already using the system to present to the school board. Meanwhile, the school board being themselves so impressed have appointed a committee to consider the introduction of the teaching. I have late letters from the school principal and a member of the board of education, and with this double team they will soon have the system established.

Prescott, Arizona, is a new field, too. We have a superintendent, Mrs. Phillips, in Arizona, but the superintendent of the Prescott public schools has been corresponding with Mrs. Ella J. Fiefield, our superintendent at Tacoma, Wash., and now writes to me that he is very desirous to institute the system, as many of the children have wealthy parents and have money which should be used as an object lesson.

Among my late letters I have one from a school director who says he wants literature and forms to establish the system in his borough; he adds, "I am the youngest school director in my state (age twenty-three) and I am the originator of this proposition. My actions are closely watched, and I wish to start this thrift teaching at once."

Mrs. G. M. Gardenier, of Oswego, N. Y., read a paper on Thrift Teaching at the annual council of grammar school principals. Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, and the diocesan superintendent of parochial schools, Father Shannon, have both spoken to me most approvingly of the system and there is outside movement all along the line. School superintendents, school directors, school principals and school teachers are ready and willing to aid in introducing this savings banks teaching.

Will not some comrade in every district, where the teaching is not in use, or fully known about, send to me for a few pennies' worth of literature explaining the system and present them to the school directors and teachers. Please do this. We must coöperate to reach the masses. Two new leaflets, one simply a complete price list of literature and supplies, and the other a pleasant little story called "Wealth Seed," by this department, are in press.

Mrs. J. T. Foote, superintendent for Ohio, has spoken before conventions and literary societies since the National Convention and has a number of engagements. She has kindly consented to respond to calls outside of the state.

I shall look for a snowstorm of letters from every hamlet and corner of the broad American domain of our dear old National, saying, "Send me five or ten stamps' worth of school savings banks literature for our school directors and teachers," because this is the very month and time it will do them the most good.

I am, with whole closets full of leaflets and lots of energy to snowball you back again,

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Do you remember that of that poor man out of whom the evil spirit was driven, only to return with seven others more evil than himself, it was said, "The last state of that man was worse than the first." That is exactly what your corresponding secretary has been experiencing with reference to a relapse of the grip. Bad as is that modern invention of the Evil One in its first visitation, it is infinitely worse when it returns after a brief season of respite. Fortunately, I have found a strong city of refuge and am on the way to a speedy and complete recovery in the Battle Creek Sanitarium. I have been here a little more than a week and expect soon to be at my desk again.

Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair would be very glad to make immediate engagements in Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas or other adjacent states. Mrs. Blair's work is too well known to the various states to need commendation or explanation. She is one of the finest experts in the world in L. T. L. work, is a chalk-talker of great ability, and in addition to her juvenile work, speaks upon nearly every line of W. C. T. U. work. Her platform addresses are most interesting, and the union securing her services will certainly have those of an all-round W. C. T. U. worker. Mrs. Blair may be addressed, as to dates and terms at Norfolk, Neb.

I am almost fearful lest the apparent simplicity of Mrs. Baxter's new financial plan may cause you to overlook its importance and its great possibilities. It seems such a little thing to send old coins or postage stamps that many of you who have them may say, "Oh, what can that amount to?" Let me assure you that it may amount to a very great deal if each one does her part. Such a collection as Mrs. Baxter has in mind sold for over $200,000 in Paris. Think what it would mean to our work if anything like such a sum could but be put into our National treasury! Why, the wheels would go round with laughter and shouting and the desert places would rejoice and blossom as the rose. Mrs. Baxter writes: "I want every foreign coin under the sun, but particularly do I want pennies, dollars, half-dollars, dimes and half-dimes of this country, from 1793 to 1856." Postage stamps of this and of foreign countries, particularly those of each first issue will be most valuable. Who knows what treasures you may have hidden away in trunk or drawer at home? Is not the end in view of sufficient importance to justify you in taking a little trouble to find out? If only this plan and the two financial plans of the National treasurer can be pushed this year we shall have abundant reason to rejoice in a full treasury when we come together next fall, and a full treasury means, oh, so much, for widening channels of beneficence.

For many years the National W. C. T. U. has passed resolutions of sympathy, endorsement and support for our National Temperance Hospital, situated at 1619 Diversey Ave., Chicago. Every intelligent woman must endorse the underlying principle for which it was brought into existence and for which it now stands, viz., "non-alcoholics in medicine." There is no question as to the good that the agitation of this subject has done. The Temperance Hospital was founded when very few housekeepers had any definite information as to the utter uselessness of alcohol in all forms of materia medica. They had been taught for generations that brandy, wine and whisky were indispensable in emergencies, and often useful and perfectly harmless on frequent occasions. The very fact that an institution had been established to illustrate the fact that alcohol was not a necessity, and that a staff of educated and reputable physicians were willing to strike this "universal panacea" from their pharmacopœia carried conviction to thousands of people who heretofore had given little or no attention to these matters. In this way the Hospital has been far-reaching in its influence for good. The Hospital has always had upon its staff of physicians honored names that were guarantees of thorough and honest dealing. To-day Dr. Sarah Hackett Stephenson stands at the head of the regular staff with thirteen others good and true, including Dr. Julia Holmes Smith. Dr. John R. Boynton leads the fourteen names of the Homeopathic staff. The officers of the Hospital and sanitarium are women whose character is above reproach, whose philanthropy is unquestioned, and whose labors have all been given for love of the cause which they represent. I would like to give a sketch of each, telling what we at Headquarters know of their self-denying labors, and their courage and perseverance under great pressure, but the space allotted me is too limited to allow of this. We will for a moment speak of the work rather than the workers.

It is estimated that one-third of the patients treated at the Hospital since its establishment have been free. Some of these have been our W.C. T. U. workers and every one of these beneficiaries have gone forth to commend in unstinted terms the wisdom of the management and the efficacy of the treatment. Many others have been treated at reduced rates; $350 endows a bed and makes it possible for the Hospital to do this philanthropic work. We wish every bed in the Hospital could be thus endowed. Just at present, however, their great need is money with which to secure the site for the new building which they hope to erect in the near future where they can have a broader field and more money for their work. There was no enterprise brought before the Buffalo Convention that received such cordial indorsement as the Temperance Hospital, and it seems to me that it was a mistake that ten cents per member was not asked instead of five, for we all know that many forget who really mean to give. Think what even five cents per member would do for this worthy object; $7,500, but will they all respond? Why not send ten cents each? so as to make up for the other half that will forget, for truly we are sure no one will refuse. Why, this would make the payment on the lots and give them something for running expenses. No single woman would be poorer, in fact, every one would be richer in the consciousness that they had helped a worthy cause and lifted a heavy burden from hearts weighed down with anxiety and financial obligations. "He gives twice, who gives at once," so, sisters, hasten your gifts to the Hospital fund, and may I suggest that the money be sent to be used at the discretion of the board, as they know better than any one else just where it is most needed.

W. C. T. U. News.

[Bright, newsy items of special interest are acceptable for this column, but all regular reports must come through the state Field reporter.]

THE Lewiston, Me., W. C. T. U. has subscribed for six copies of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt's School Physiology Journal, to be placed in the hands of the teachers of city schools in the interest of scientific temperance instruction.

THE West Side W. C. T. U. of Chicago has in charge a cure for alcoholism at its headquarters. A nominal sum is charged for the treatment. It is said many have received permanent cure, and arrangements are sufficient to care for many.

MISS BELLE KEARNEY speaks at the National Woman's Suffrage Convention in Washington, in February, on "Social Changes in the South."

OUR work in Indiana is on the "up grade." More membership dues were paid last quarter than in any similar quarter during the past four years. From all parts of the state encouraging reports are received. National and state workers are in great demand. New unions are being organized and new members secured. Miss Marie C. Brehm is at present at work in the state.

A PLEASANT experience came to our chalk-talker, Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton-Blair, on a recent visit to Upper Iowa University, where she was once preceptress. The Aonian Society of forty members gave her a little reception, and presented her with an illustrated copy of James Whitcomb Riley's, "An Old Sweetheart of Mine," tied with the society colors, blue and white. She had organized the society, and had been its first president. Mrs. Blair gave a temperance address to a crowded house, Sunday night, organizing a Y, with officers from the Aonian Society.

THE most telling talk given in the late Colorado Convention of Charities and Corrections was by a bright woman, Mrs. S. J. Atwood, who has for years kept an employment bureau for men, especially on public works. Her acquaintance with ex-prisoners, for whom she has furnished employment, was the base of a ten-minute speech, at the end of which the governor of the state, Governor Adams, and the W. C. T. U. state superintendent of penal and reformatory work, Mrs. M. H. Baker, came forward with a hundred dollars each to found a prisoners' aid society.

MRS. ADA WALLACE UNRUH commenced work in Maryland directly following National Convention under an engagement of two weeks. This time stretched to two months with more calls unanswered. But an urgent call from Mississippi came and she began an engagement for two months on January 15, at Corinth, Miss., with a large and enthusiastic audience of warm-hearted Southern people to welcome her. Monroe county has a local option campaign on hand in which Mrs. Unruh is to "lend a hand." Maryland is richer by two hundred members and three new and promising Y's for Mrs. Unruh's stay among them. A delightful meeting in Washington, D. C., and a New Year's reception are incidents of her visit there.

ON Tuesday evening, November 8, Darby, Pennsylvania, Woman's Christian Temperance Union gave a reception to the new members gained at Major Hilton's meeting which was held a few weeks previously. Mrs. McConnell, the president, gave a talk on the temperance work. Miss Ethel A. Shrigley, who was delegate to the World's and National W. C. T. U. Conventions in Toronto and Buffalo, reported from those two great meetings and showed some photographs of the work and workers. With a small sum in the treasury which was needed for our own individual work, we discussed the means whereby we might raise our help for the Temple. We decided to have a sale of home-made cake, candy and preserves, which we advertised through our local paper. We held the sale from 4 P. M. until 8 P. M., and although the evening was rainy, the nice sum of $19.42 was realized, $17 of which we were pleased to send for the Temple.

Where Our Speakers Are.

MRS. ISABEL WING LAKE and Dr. Carolyn Geisel are holding purity conferences in Colorado. They go next to Utah, and to California in February.

MRS. HELEN D. HARFORD sends the following notice: "Please rectify the mistake made in the January 31 UNION SIGNAL, where you stated my address would be Fulton, Kan. It is Holton, Kan., care of Mrs. Ella W. Brown, state president, until February 9. After that care of Mrs. L. B. Smith, Ottawa, Kan., until further notice."

UNTIL March 15 Mrs. Unruh can be addressed at Meridian, Miss., care of Miss M. L. Montgomery. She will probably come North after that time, through Tennessee, Kentucky and Indiana. Unions desiring her services in the first two states are asked to communicate with her as above. Indiana unions will please write Mrs. L. F. McWhirter, their own state president, with regard to dates.

MRS. MARION B. BAXTER plans to spend the coming spring and summer in the West. She will be accompanied by her daughter, Beatrice, who is a fine reader, and a graduate of the Columbia School of Oratory. Their plan is to stay three or four days in one place. Terms within reach of every live union. Those desiring to secure their services should address Mrs. Baxter at North Harvey, Ill., at once.

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions secured by Miss Willard or offered by those who are especially interested in the effort being put forward by our National president to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow's address is Portland, Me. She is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, and the one who was his home-maker in all his later years, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it is by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and the request of Miss Willard that she has accepted the foregoing trust.

The Home.

Bridget's Grievance.

"Much of the cry against the tyranny and impudence of servants comes from those who exercise their authority in a disagreeable way, and who do not know the first principles of successful management," argues Jane Lowry Cummings, in a thoughtful paper on "Managing the Servants," in the January Woman's Home Companion.

"Every woman has her own theory of how the housework should be done, but it is not always necessary to insist upon having it done in her way, provided it is done satisfactorily in another way. Bridget may come well recommended, and be discharged at the end of a week or a month because her method is not what her mistress considers the proper one. Wherever she goes she is likely to be confronted with new methods, and blamed for doing her work after a system which she has laboriously acquired at her last situation. She is a machine upon which each succeeding mistress imposes her own pet theories, to the exclusion of all others. Without reference to results she is compelled to change her method of handling the broom, building fires, attending to the bedchambers, etc., and because she is awkward at doing things in a new way she is probably upbraided and told that she does not know her business. If Bridget is quick-tempered she may resent this injustice, and then she is discharged without a "character," and her late mistress has another opportunity of confiding to her friends her troubles over the everlasting 'servant girl problem.'

"But Bridget is the one to be pitied. She is confronted by the more difficult problem of how to conform to the rules and whims of every new mistress under whose orders she may find herself. She knows how to do her work if let alone, and she proves this if she is fortunate enough to be employed by a housekeeper who is broad-minded and tactful enough to give her a fair chance. The woman who does not interfere unnecessarily with the work of her servants—who judges their work by results—seldom has trouble in getting faithful servants and keeping them. The display of a little tact, a little judgment, a little kindness, will often save the housekeeper much useless worry and vexation of spirit."

Those Astounding Adverbs.

One evening a gentleman came home with a budget of news. An acquaintance had failed in business. He spoke of the incident as "deliciously sad." He had ridden up town with a noted wit, whom he described as "horribly entertaining;" and, to cap the climax, he spoke of butter that had been set before him at a country hotel as "divinely rancid."

The young people stared, and the oldest daughter said, "Why, papa, I should think you were out of your head."

"Not in the least, my dear," he said pleasantly. "I'm merely trying to follow the fashion. I worked out 'divinely rancid' with a good deal of labor. It seems to me rather more effective than 'awfully sweet.' I mean to keep up with the rest of you hereafter. And now," he continued, "let me help you to a piece of this exquisitely tough beef." Adverbs, he says, are not so fashionable as they were in his family.

THE SOCIAL PROBLEM, by Rev. J. H. W. Stuckenberg, D. D., author of "The Life of Immanuel Kant," "Introduction to the Study of Philosophy," etc. 373 pages. Cloth. Social Problem Publishing Co., York, Pa. Price $1. The subjects discussed in the book are the burning social questions of the day. The material is the result of many years' study of social conditions and of other writings on the subject, and much of it is of such a nature that it is not accessible to the ordinary reader except in this volume. Each chapter closes with most valuable references to the best literature that has been published on the particular subjects treated of in the chapter; and these reference lists are of themselves of great value to the reader who may wish to make further research.

THE INVESTMENT OF INFLUENCE—A Study of Social Sympathy and Service, by Newell Dwight Hillis. The book is truly a study, a collection of fourteen essays, each a finished production, but so aligned to an objective and animated by a definite purpose that the whole becomes a treatise. Dr. Hillis' philosophy is ably set forth in his "Foreword." "By reason of the increase in gold, books, travel and personal luxuries, some now feel that selfness is beginning to degenerate into selfishness. The time, therefore, seems to have fully come when the principle of self-care should receive its complement through the principle of care for others. These chapters assert the debt of wealth to poverty, the debt of wisdom to ignorance, the debt of strength to weakness." Price $1.25. Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago, Ill.

Among the new books on the reviewing desk are four volumes just added to the Riverside Library for Young People, by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York. For serving the double purpose of entertainment and instruction to the young people, and the older ones as well, they could not be improved upon. Each is so perfect that a choice would be difficult. FOUR-HANDED FOLK, by Olive Thorne Miller, is a story of dwellers in the monkey world, told as entertainingly as the bird stories for which that author is famous. PHOTOGRAPHY INDOORS AND OUT, by Alexander Black, is a book for amateurs, and will be found exceedingly helpful, as well as interesting. FRAIL CHILDREN OF THE AIR, excursions into the world of butterflies, by Samuel Hubbard Scudder, is a beautiful study of insect life that will open the eyes of young people, especially dwellers in the country, to an interest of which they may have been unheeding. JAPANESE GIRLS AND WOMEN, by Alice Mabel Bacon, is a charmingly told tale of life and customs in the land of the Mikado that will be of special interest to girls. These books are all illustrated, excellent print and well bound. Price 75 cents each.

Publisher's Notes.

A workman in order to do good work must have suitable tools and know how to use them. A white-ribboner desiring to do good work and be really useful to the temperance cause, must have our literature, be familiar with it, understand what is adapted to various places and circumstances and use it. THE UNION SIGNAL is saw and ax, and plane and chisel, and no white-ribboner can be a competent workman without it. Through its columns our members should follow the movements of our National officers and superintendents, note their plans and suggestions, discuss them, and encompass them with an atmosphere of prayer. We should study the news from other states and countries and see which of the plans or methods therein outlined we can transfer to best advantage into our own local work. The editorials should be carefully read and pondered. Clergymen should be supplied with THE UNION SIGNAL, and their attention kindly but persistently directed to its articles. Our catalogue should be in every home and ammunition selected therefrom should be in constant use in the Sabbath-schools, the various church societies, among public school teachers, the children and elsewhere.

Our Annual Leaflet should be the familiar handbook of every woman of us, but we fear that there are some, alas! who do not even so much as know that there is an "annual leaflet." A study of this leaflet should be a part of the program of every quarterly meeting until the women "know it by heart." Our Sabbath-schools should be liberally supplied with the special leaflet provided for "Temperance Sunday." Our children, particularly those of the L. T. L's should be familiar with The Young Crusader, whereas, now we regret to say, few know that there is such a paper.

Armed and equipped with THE UNION SIGNAL, The Young Crusader, the Annual Leaflet, the annual address of Miss Willard, and our annual report, and a constant supply of our own leaflets, our women would be informed, inspired, enthusiastic and aggressive. If every one of our members would invest ten cents a quarter in our leaflets, for distribution, our cause would receive an immeasurable impetus. We suggest, too, that our literature department devise a plan by which every new member can be supplied with THE UNION SIGNAL, free for three months.

Let me urge you, my comrades, to read our literature; subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL; remember it is your own paper; if you do not support it who will? The liquor men? Nay! How gladly would they see it fail! Rally, then, for the sake of your own needs, to the support of our own paper. Let us be an educated, informed, intelligent force, for only so can we wage most successful warfare.

We wish again to call attention to the frequent loss of money in the mails, and as many complaints are reaching our office, we urgently request our patrons to forward to us checks or postoffice orders in settlements of all accounts.

BIBLE READING FOR FEBRUARY, "Christian Citizenship," by Mrs. C. H. Markham. The subject is treated under six heads, viz., (1) God's favor necessary to the power and perpetuity of any nation. (2) Good rulers necessary to good government. (3) Duties of rulers to the people. (4) Duties of the people to the rulers. (5) Duties to one another. (6) Duties to ourselves. This reading has been given with good results at Sunday evening services and at W. C. T. U. conventions. It is a live topic and one that is especially timely. Local unions can use it effectively in connection with their "red-letter day" exercises on Washington's birthday.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR FEBRUARY, "Mothers' Meetings and Their Requirements," by Mrs. Jessie Brown Hilton, state superintendent of mothers' meetings for Illinois. Mrs. Hilton has had wide experience in this line of work and is devoting her entire time to it. This Reading is designed to suggest to local unions a way to begin and a way to carry on this very necessary branch of W. C. T. U. effort. It is practical instruction all the way through, and every local society should read and carefully consider its wise suggestions. It is the next best thing to having Mrs. Hilton present in person.

What They Say of the Y Almanac.

"I think the Almanacs are lovely. One needs but see them to buy them."

Another writer says, "That one poem, 'Stillness,' is worth the price of the book."

"Last year's Almanac proved of such daily comfort to me that I can not be without its helpful notes this year. But more than all I want to add my mite to the 'Clara Parrish fund.'"

DAVID DOUGLASS AND HIS WIFE. By Mrs. O. W. Scott. (12mo, pp. 143. Chicago: Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.) A really good temperance story is so rare that it is a pleasure to find one brightly written, interesting in narrative, and strong in temperance argument. David Douglass wore the army blue when his country needed his services, and carried the soldier spirit into his ministerial life. Whether one fully agrees with all the sentiments of the writer, or not, the book is worth reading. Price, paper, 25 cents. Cloth, 50 cents.

"An aged friend" of Springfield, Mass., encloses $5 to cover her own subscription and a donation to the philanthropy fund. The dear old lady can not read the paper many years. Who can estimate the good which will come to others through her generous gift?

"Enclosed find postoffice order for one dollar to pay for one year the subscription of a widow with four children. God has promised to be a father to the fatherless and the widow's God.

"Yours for the success of THE UNION SIGNAL."

"I wish to say THE UNION SIGNAL is greatly improved in the new type. It is a blessing to all of us old Crusaders and clear and inviting to its younger readers."

Art for the People.

There are few things that go farther toward making the home attractive and pleasant to live in, than good pictures. They brighten the walls, often tell an interesting story, and always, in their selection, show something of the taste of the people who own them.

To put the work of really famous artists within the easy reach of a great number, is a praiseworthy undertaking, and this is just what the Procter & Gamble Company, the makers of Ivory Soap, are doing. Not content with the commonplace and cheap pictures that serve so many in the exploitation of their goods, this company has spared neither expense nor time to secure the best. It does not need the eye of an expert to appreciate the exceptional beauty of the copies of paintings and drawings that they are using, to keep their friends informed of their product. He who runs may read in these pictures the evidences of taste and knowledge in the selection of the artists, and appreciate the large sums that must have been expended for the original pictures they so successfully reproduce in colors. Such pictures as "Waiting for the Stage," by Percy Moran; "A Summer Girl," and "At Home," by Alice Barber Stephens; "A Pink Rose," by Leon Moran; "Ready for Battle," by Francis Day, and "Autumn Leaves," by W. Granville Smith, are the kind we are accustomed to see in the art galleries or occasionally in the pages of the leading magazines. They are not the sort usually employed for advertising purposes.

It may fairly be said that The Procter & Gamble Company are serving a double purpose. They are not only calling attention to Ivory Soap, one of the best and most favorably known articles of domestic consumption, but they are at the same time affording pleasure and better acquainting the public with first class contemporary art. In the printing of these beautiful pictures, they have spared no expense to make them as near the originals as possible, and the rare delicacy and harmony of the tints of the reproductions have only been obtained after thorough and exhaustive experiments. To better insure completely satisfactory results, they sent an expert to Europe, to study and report on the color processes of the famous European printing establishments, and they have also made many tests in a fully equipped plant with a view to perfecting the preparation of the plates and presses for this particular work.

When it is known that some of the editions of single prints include as large a number as four million copies, some idea of the mechanical resources and the cost involved is apparent. It is only in line with the governing principles of all the business of this famous house, to put the best obtainable material and work into anything they place before the public. A true idea of the real value of one of these color pictures may be readily obtained by putting one of them in a simple frame under glass. It is then very difficult for even a connoisseur to distinguish them from paintings in oil or water color with which they may be compared.

"THE UNION SIGNAL is the finest exponent of the best ideas of the brightest and most zealous Christ workers in the world."

A New Jersey subscriber who calls the official organ "The dear old, yet beautifully new UNION SIGNAL" surely has a discriminating mind.

An interested friend of The Young Crusader writes: "The terms of The Young Crusader are so cheap and the paper so good I feel sure we may largely introduce it into our state." It should be remembered that this little paper costs but 25 cents per year.

OPINIONS OF THREE COMPETENT JUDGES

FROM REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.
Editor "The Congregationalist."

"This Bible deserves the title it bears—'New Illuminated.' Sunday-School teachers will welcome its aid. All readers of the Bible will find their interest stimulated and their minds informed by these clear pages."

"I am delighted with the New Illuminated Bible. It is the finest I have ever seen. Though you have a dozen other Bibles, it will be a good investment to buy this. Such pictures! God bless those whose sacred genius produced them. They will be a continual inspiration."

FROM EDWARD W. BOK
Editor "The Ladies' Home Journal."

RED-LETTER DAY.

FEBRUARY 22—Washington's Birthday.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports.—George Washington.

Notes and Comments.

AN official call is out for a national conference of the Liberty party to be held in Columbus, O., February 23 and 24, to perfect organization and outline the policy. Delegates are to be chosen by the state convention if held previous to the national conference, otherwise by the state central committee, but if not by either of these, then by the members of the party present at the conference, meeting in caucus the evening previous to the conference and choosing one of their own number. Headquarters at the Great Southern Hotel.

AT the dinner given last week by President and Mrs. McKinley to the members of the diplomatic corps, "the foreigners," said telegraphic dispatches, "had no cause to complain of inhospitable treatment in the matter of wine, five wine-glasses being placed at each plate." The one crumb of comfort we get out of this fact is that it was sent out to the press as an item of news, thus showing that the reporters, who are quick to discern which way the wind is blowing, did not regard the serving of wine upon this occasion as the taken-for-granted hospitality which it has been heretofore.

THE world is not as civilized as we like to believe. It is well known that there is not a monarch in Europe so dissolute as Leopold II, King of Belgium. An editor in Hamburg, Germany, stating recently some facts concerning this imperial rogue, was arrested, tried and sentenced to eight months' imprisonment. Meanwhile the king goes his way as free as air and wreaks his will on the young lives about him as only an aged roué can. Where are the women of Belgium, that "trampled corner" of Europe cursed with drink and immorality? It is plain that they are not much of anywhere or the present condition of things would not be tolerated. What they need over there is a strong national branch of the W. C. T. U. with a local auxiliary in every town and village. Who would like to go to Belgium and bring this about at her own expense?

THE Lodge Immigration bill which passed the United States Senate January 17, by a vote of 45 to 28, is calling forth considerable protest, especially from the western states. The act provides that all immigrants physically capable and over sixteen years of age shall be able to read or write in some one language. This does not apply to the wife or minor child of a qualified immigrant, nor to a parent or grandparent over fifty years of age, provided the immigrant is capable of supporting such relative. We believe a restrictive immigration law is one of the urgent necessities of the hour, and this measure now pending in Congress seems to us to be as fair and just as any that could be considered at present. We do not see how the required test is going to work any great hardship either to foreigners desirous of becoming American citizens or to residents of states who would welcome such as home-seekers as integral parts of the voting population.

AFTER a nine days' session the joint conference of coal miners and operators settled their difficulties by a unanimous vote in favor of an advance in wages of ten cents a ton, an eight-hour day (both to take effect April 1), and uniform screens in all competitive fields. This is regarded as an important victory for organized labor. Intense enthusiasm prevailed when the result was announced, operators and miners alike standing upon chairs, throwing their hats in the air and cheering vociferously. Later developments disclose the fact that the mine owners, in order to recoup themselves for the increase in wages and the decrease in working hours, will advance the wholesale price of coal at least twenty-five cents per ton. Well, as THE UNION SIGNAL has declared before, consumers can better afford, both from a moral and a financial standpoint, to pay a higher price for coal than to collect and send contributions of food, clothing and money to striking miners and their starving families.

THE Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Christ church, London, has been holding a series of meetings in Chicago. The keynote of his addresses is "holiness," and the large audiences which wait eagerly upon his words consist, for the most part, of Christian men and women, who are seeking to "know God" in a deeper sense than they have yet experienced, and to realize the promise of the "life more abundant." The speaker says that he does not come as one better able to teach the people than they are to teach him, but as one who "cries to another." Mr. Meyer is best known to white-ribboners as the author of "The Shepherd Psalm," "Christian Living" and other religious classics of an intensely spiritual nature.

THE second annual meeting of the Council of Seventy was held at the University of Chicago, January 14. President Harper, reporting the work of the American Institute of Sacred Literature, said that large use had been made of its material for Bible class work, not only in colleges but in the church, the home and the mission field, and that it was proving universally adaptable. Mention was made also of the introduction of the study in woman's clubs. Statistics given indicated that, while the Bible is very poorly taught, or entirely neglected, in a large number of colleges, both the amount and quality of the Bible teaching show a most encouraging contrast with the conditions of a decade or more ago. An important topic discussed by the Council was, "How, through the Institute or otherwise, it could aid the Sunday-school," and the necessity for regular graded courses of study and for trained teachers was emphatically urged.

FOR the second time within a few weeks the mayor of Chicago has issued an order for the suppression of pool rooms and the closing of saloons at midnight. Inasmuch as there are city ordinances which make gambling and all-night saloons illegal, why these special orders? Why treat gamblers and saloon-keepers so tenderly? Other citizens, when they defy the law, do not find the way of escape so easy. If any one of the 2,500 policemen of Chicago finds a drunken man or any kind of a riotous fellow disturbing the peace does he report him to the chief and the chief to the mayor, and then when the cases become so frequent and so flagrant that the administration is charged by the public with being too "liberal," does the mayor give orders that "they musn't do it any more"? No, the policeman forthwith arrests the offender, takes him to the station house, and the judge, in default of the required fine, lodges him in jail. Periodic orders to quit, as a method of putting a stop to illegal practices, is confined in Chicago to that class of law-breakers who are willing to "pay the price" and who control the party vote.

Prohibitionists in Conference at the Grand Hotel, Cincinnati.

Many Party Leaders Present—Future of the Party Discussed.

[Special Correspondence.]

THE Conference of the leaders of the Prohibition party assembled at the Grand Hotel in Cincinnati, O., Wednesday, January 26. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss plans and arouse enthusiasm. Nearly two hundred persons were present and the different parts of the country were represented. Among those present were: Hale Johnson, Mrs. Carrie E. Grout, John G. Woolley and Mrs. S. M. D. Fry, Illinois; Prof. F. T. McWhirter and Mrs. McWhirter, Indiana; Mr. and Mrs. Beauchamp, Kentucky; Volney B. Cushing, Maine; Joshua Levering, Maryland; President Samuel Dickie and Mrs. Dickie, Michigan; Dr. I. K. Funk, W. P. F. Ferguson, Wm. T. Wardwell, New York; Rev. J. C. Holliday, George M. Hammell, L. R. Hastings, Gen. W. S. Payne, Mrs. Clark, Ohio; Homer Castle, Pennsylvania; H. B. Metcalf, Rhode Island; James A. Tate, Rev. Dr. Spence, Tennessee; T. R. Carskadon, West Virginia; Samuel D. Hastings, Wisconsin; Rev. Sam P. Jones, Georgia.

W. P. Ferguson, of The Voice, read letters from Hon. John Russell, the first candidate on the Prohibition ticket for National vice-president, and from Col. Geo. W. Bain, of Kentucky.

Hon. Hale Johnson read a paper, "Can we compromise on a lower plane?" and took the ground that the party could not, as it was organized for the one purpose of the suppression of the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

He said the legalized dramshop was making more convicts than the church was making converts, and quoted Moody as saying he could shake New York and even hell with one hundred men who would make no compromise, and added that there were plenty of men who do compromise in both these places and no shock is felt.

The discussion of this paper was the most interesting of the day. Dr. Isaac Funk, of The Voice, showed the difference between permissive and restrictive measures, and advocated joining with others so far as they sought to prohibit, though it be only sales on Sunday, but should fight all permissive measures.

Mrs. Beauchamp raised the question as to whether prohibition was retarded or defeated by working for local option.

Mr. W. T. Wardwell said all the efforts of the Raines' law were resulting in more open saloons Sunday and other days. He said breakfast in New York now began at 6 A. M. and lasted till 12. Dinner began at noon and lasted till 6 P. M., and supper from 6 P. M. till 6 A. M. There was a difference of opinion among the speakers as to the desirability of working for local option. They all opposed any compromise in principle.

Hon. H. B. Metcalf, of Rhode Island, gave a thoughtful paper on "Platform Service." He advocated good salaries for speakers and well-arranged dates, which would insure continuous work. The discussion of this paper brought out a preponderance of sentiment in favor of a salary, and the collections to be turned into the National treasury. Illinois was held up as a successful example, with Mr. Stewart in the field raising $100 a day for the central committee, and Mr. Wilson in the office making his engagements, and three times as much work being done as ever before and both too busy to come to the conference. The National committee has such a plan in hand.

Hon. James Lamont, editor of The Lever, spoke upon the question of "The Prohibition Press: How to Add to its Power." Mr. J. J. Ashenhurst had for his subject "Our Relation to the Anti-Saloon League." He read from the constitution of that organization, "To avoid alliance with any party," etc., and regarded this as a notice to the prohibition party that they are not wanted. If "parties are not to be antagonized," prohibitionists are not in it, for the fundamental reason that the prohibition party is to give men a chance to protest by vote. The Anti-Saloon League proposes to "unify sentiment." When it does that and marches to the polls and votes that sentiment against the saloon, what is that but a prohibition party? The League must move forward or die. If it goes forward, it goes into a prohibition party.

AFTERNOON.

Homer Castle, an attorney of Pittsburg, Pa., opened the afternoon session with a fifteen-minute talk on "The Certainty of Success." While confident of ultimate success, Mr. Castle showed how far we are from it just now by citing the fact that when millions of petitions had closed the bar in the national capitol, it took only one day to reopen it. He said that the liquor dealers and brewers of Pennsylvania were going to unite to elect the next governor of Pennsylvania, but that the prohibitionists were going to elect Dr. Swallow.

Hon. Hale Johnson opened the subject, "One Needful Thing," and before he got through $5,000 was pledged for campaign work for the year.

The last speech of the afternoon was made by Rev. Sam Jones on the subject of "Prohibition and the American Home." Mr. Jones never lifts his voice above the tone of ordinary conversation. He has no gestures and most of the time one hand is in the pocket of his pantaloons. He is a powerful speaker, and no printed speech or sermon could ever do him justice. In type his words would sound coarse and uncultured. He was given an ovation when he stepped to the front of the platform and at once told of a colored woman "who weighed three hundred pounds—dressed—who told him that if he 'did have a white skin he did have a black heart,' and that he preached more like a nigger than anybody she knew."

EVENING.

About one hundred and seventy people sat down to the banquet at 8 o'clock. Dr. Isaac K. Funk was toastmaster.

Rev. E. O. Buxton, of Cincinnati, gave an address of welcome for the city. Hon. Joshua Levering spoke forty-five minutes on "The Outlook;" Mrs. Beauchamp made a brave stand for suffrage from "A woman's point of view," which was enthusiastically received; Mr. Geo. W. Armistead, a southern Democrat converted to prohibition, made an impassioned speech of the most radical and progressive kind on the subject, "As the South Sees It;" T. R. Carskadon sought to find out "Where we are at;" Hon. W. T. Wardwell summed up some things about "Prohibition After Thirteen Years," and Mr. Woolley closed with scathing and logical arguments on "Personal Liberty."

Dr. Funk took occasion to say that all the praise for the Princeton victory must not be given to The Voice, for he doubted if it could have been accomplished had not the W. C. T. U. used its influence and rained down petitions and protests upon the university board, he was informed, by the bushel. He also announced that President McKinley had sent orders to his agent at Canton, not to renew the lease of his property for saloon purposes.

Hon. Mr. Wardwell said the Red Cross National and International Hospital of New York had put a clause in their constitution to the effect that alcohol is never to be used in connection with their work.

About Women.

MRS. ANNIE KLINE RIKERT, prospector, miner and capitalist, is constructing a railroad in Toulumne county, California. Mrs. Rikert has been engaged in mining for sixteen years, and has faith in her ability to develop the locality where her properties are situated, giving her personal supervision to the work. She organized the company of which she is president; Miss Maggie Brainerd is treasurer, and four of the six directors are women.

MISS S. M. BURCHE and Miss Mamie Fossett, stenographers and deputies in the office of C. H. Thompson, United States marshal, are the first women to do active field work as deputy marshals in Oklahoma. They recently made an overland trip from Guthrie to the Sac and Fox Indian reservations, where they served subpœnas on a number of persons who are wanted as witnesses in an Indian territory murder case. The young women were alone, driving their own horses and carrying an arsenal of firearms.

BARONESS HIRSCH has lately established a maternity hospital at Munich, given a large donation to a Warsaw hospital, and founded twenty-five annuities for "indigent gentlewomen."

MRS. JESSIE MULLIGAN, whose husband, a railroad conductor, was killed on the Yellowstone division of the Northern Pacific Railroad six months ago, is now working for the company as a freight train brakeman. She is reported as setting brakes, coupling cars, turning switches and performing the other duties as well as the ordinary brakeman.

Temperance.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL HANCOCK, of New York, has decided that habitual drunkards must be shut up.

A BAND of crusaders, led by the Rev. Dr. J. C. Breckenridge, Presbyterian, the Rev. J. P. Patterson, Methodist, and Harry Maxwell, evangelist, are doing effective work at Bourbon, Ind.

THE Japanese have a pretty custom of letting loose a flock of birds when they launch a vessel. It is to be hoped that advancement in civilization will not lead them to substitute for their own usage the stupid custom of spilling liquor over a ship in christening it.—Chicago Record.

THE new battleship Kentucky, which is to be launched in March, will be christened with water taken from a spring on the farm where Abraham Lincoln was born. The idea originated with Miss Christine Bradley, daughter of the governor, who is to act as sponsor. A committee is to visit the Lincoln homestead and fill a silver vessel with water, sealing it with appropriate ceremonies. Then the vessel will be delivered to Miss Bradley, who will guard it until the time for breaking the seal on board the battleship.

Educational.

AN eastern woman whose name is withheld, has given twenty-five thousand dollars to endow the chair of chemistry of Beloit College.

PROF. ELMER GATES, who has a laboratory near Washington, D. C., has invented an instrument that magnifies 300 times more than the present microscope, or 3,000,000 diameters.

THE women of Sandwich, Mass., have formed a "School Aid Club." They are devoting one afternoon a week to cutting, mounting and presenting to the schools such pictures as will aid the teachers in various kinds of school work, such as geography, language, literature, nature, study and art.

G. D. BRILL, the Cornell graduate recently appointed director of a model farm and agricultural school at Wuchang, China, by the great viceroy, Chang Chi Tung, has now been appointed special commissioner of agriculture to China by Secretary Wilson of the United States department of agriculture.

THE committee on hygiene of the board of education of Philadelphia, Pa., has decided, in accordance with a recommendation made by the board of health, to furnish each pupil in the elementary departments with a drinking cup. The health board has also recommended that the system of having the children put the lead-pencils into one box at the close of the sessions, be dispensed with as dangerous to the health of pupils.

THE German government is about to establish a commercial high school at Magdeburg, an important manufacturing city in Prussia. This is to educate young men in business methods, to help the commercial development toward which the government has bent its energies of late. Besides the languages, there will be special instruction in political economy, finance and statistics, commercial exchange and laws relating to liquidation, administration, etc,; commercial geography and history; insurance, banking, stock exchange, transportations and customs; technology, physics, chemistry and descriptive natural history; state and citizen rights; commercial intercourse and mathematics. Each department will be in charge of some person specially trained in the subject. The school is to be supported by a state grant of 375,000 marks ($89,250).

February.

DEEP lies the snow,
The rough winds blow
Adown the slippery street,
The branches bare
Break here and there
Under the ice and sleet.

The sparrows hide,
For far and wide
They've sought the scattered grain,
Hoping at last
To break their fast,
But search has been in vain.

I give my bread,
They must be fed
While food is given to me!
There is no Lent
To sparrows sent
To teach them to be free!

But we our souls,
In earthen bowls,
Press with our doubt and care,
Nor seem to know
That, 'neath the snow,
Awakes the lily fair.

"Here I am, Mother."

BY THORPE GREENLEAF.

IN 1884 I was in one of the Ohio river counties of western Kentucky, and for some weeks stopped at a hotel where a young civil engineer had headquarters. Harry Gendrin was one of those mellow, open natures who have popularity for a birthright, and was soon a favorite in the town and hotel. He liked to come into my room and sing. His voice was a deep bass; my roommate, Manis, sang a part that I was never musician enough to name; Harry's roommate, Jervis, sang a rich tenor; and I tried to carry the air. We sang "Suwanee River," "Old Kentucky Home," and such pieces occasionally, but the old hymn tunes were best adapted to our style of quartette, and I am obliged to say that we made some good music on "Old Hundred," "Sessions," "Coronation," and like pieces.

On one occasion we sang, "Where is my Boy To-night?" and at its conclusion Harry said:

"If you care to hear the story I will tell you where I first heard that song."

"Tell it by all means," said the rest of us.

"I will have to begin by saying that until recently I was a pretty reckless chap. My father has always been a railroad prospector and surveyor, and I have been with him in camp ever since I was a mere kid. He is a good man, the leader of a choir in Evettsburg, where my mother frequently sings solos. I never hope to hear anything this side the glory gates that will satisfy me as well as my mother's voice in the First Cumberland Church, at Evettsburg.

"Father was not careful enough about my companions in camp, and soon I had drifted a long way from the right. But I learned his business, and when I was about eighteen years old he put me to work on one of his jobs. The pay was not large, but it was nearly all clear money and I was too young to understand the proper disposal of so much. I got into the habit of spreeing when I went to Evettsburg, or when father was not in camp. I managed to conceal the most of my bad conduct from him, while mother never suspected my wild ways, although her pastor and three-fourths of the congregation were well acquainted with my shortcomings.

"Well, when I was about twenty, we reached a point in a job where we had been two weeks in the rain and mud, and got to the end of a section one Thursday noon. Father said that we would have to lay off until the next Monday morning because his plans for the next section were not matured. I determined then and there to put in the best part of the next three days at Evettsburg, on a great old jamboree. So I walked back to the terminus, and the two o'clock freight bumped and banged me forty miles to Evettsburg. Here I disappeared in a saloon down town, and was soon oblivious to surrounding events. The saloon-keeper was careful that my whereabouts should be kept quiet, and bundled me into his own living rooms when I became unable to care for myself.

"Father staid at his job preparing the next week's work until Saturday afternoon, when he went to Evettsburg to be present at his choir meeting at seven in the evening. His train was delayed, and he went directly from the depot to the church. By a strange destiny, it seemed, mother was selected to sing, 'Where is my Boy To-night?' for evening service.

"On the way home father asked for me, and mother replied that she had not seen me. They both became very uneasy, father with an inkling of the truth, mother with all sorts of nameless dreads. As I did not turn up that night father started a private policeman on a search for me next morning before breakfast. He unearthed me and got me to a hotel, where a servant was feed to sober me up. The policeman then went to report, but as my father was not at home, the whole miserable truth came out to my mother. He said as he was leaving:

"'Mrs. Gendrin, I would advise you not to go to Harry to-day. He will be all right to-morrow morning, and you can see him before he starts back to camp. You would only be needlessly distressed at what you would see to-day, and you can do him no good now. If possible, I will get him home to-night after supper.'"

"Mother promised that she would not try to see me until I should be sober, and went to the morning service. Father came to me early after noon, but I was sleeping heavily and he thought it best not to disturb me. When I awoke, about five o'clock in the afternoon, I was duly sober, but had a raging headache. When I learned that it was Sunday I knew that my spree was at an end, so I called for a cup of strong coffee. While drinking it I heard from the policeman that mother knew everything.

"I was terribly cut up about it, and my mother's sorrow-laden face arose before me with great distinctness as I sat on the edge of that hotel bed. What with that face and my conscience, you can easily believe that the next few hours were simply awful. Then the church bell rang, and at the sound I aroused myself and said:

"'Mason, I'm going to church.'"

"'Where at, Harry?'

"'At the First Cumberland.'

"'You are in pretty rough shape for church.'

"'Yes, but I haven't time to go home and put on more suitable clothes. I will sit under the gallery behind a column and will not be noticed. You must go with me to steer me safely past the rum shops, for it is very important that I keep straight, as I have to go to work again to-morrow.'

"Mason smiled, but answered that he would go with me.

"I had on my corduroy surveying togs and a wool shirt. The servant brushed me up, but I must have looked pretty rough when Mason and I slipped quietly into a side entrance, and took seats in a secluded corner, but near the pulpit and choir. I was greatly agitated by entirely new sensations, and felt that a critical point in my career was at hand.

"There were very few in the room when I entered, but in twenty minutes the immense auditorium was packed, for Dr. Darby was then in the height of his popularity and drew immensely.

"After the opening prayer my mother rose to sing her solo. This was my principal reason for coming, but I had no idea of what she was going to sing. She had sung it a time or two, and it was now by request of several that she was to sing it again. She would, if possible, have avoided it after the morning's developments, but she had been announced in all the papers and nothing new had been rehearsed, so she must, perforce, sing what surely lacerated her soul at every word. As I have already told you, it was the first time I had heard it.

"At the first line, 'Where is my wandering boy to-night?' the audience, who knew all the sad truth, was wonderfully affected. Mother did not dream that I was present, but supposed I was yet in the hotel. All her gentle, patient, loving nature stood revealed in the painful moan of those first words. Oh, how I hated myself for making it possible that she should sing those words from the heart. I dropped my head in my hands, and rocked like a tree shaken by the wind.

"Every word struck deeper and deeper into my soul. I began to pray. I asked God to forgive me for bruising that tender, loving mother's heart. I called myself an ingrate, a matricide, for her tones impressed my incoherent brain with the thought that she was dying. The refrain, peculiarly composed, as you know, gives the impression of a wail, and when she reached it the second time, I thought I should shriek aloud.

"Then I remembered that I had sinned, not only against mother, but against God. I asked His pardon and got it, just as she reached the last stanza:

"'Go for my wandering boy to-night;
Go search for him where you will;
But bring him to me with all his blight,
And tell him I love him still.'

"Then came the refrain:

"'O where is my boy to-night?
O where is my boy to-night?'

"When she sang that second 'where,' with all the emphasis her genius, her longing, her mother-heart could give it, the agony of her soul seemed so great that it irresistibly drew me to my feet, and I walked up the aisle toward her with my arms outstretched. Further words died on my lips, the organist ceased playing, and in wondering surprise, turned to look at my mother. For the briefest moment silence reigned, then I sobbed like any child:

"'Here I am, mother.'

"How could a carefully studied melodrama have been better acted? Mother came hastily down the choir steps and folded me in her arms. Then Dr. Darby seized one hand, and father took the other. The organist struck the chords of 'Old Hundred,' and almost as one voice, the congregation burst into the doxology, 'Praise God, from whom all blessings flow,' and I think they sang it about ten times while they were shaking hands with me.

"All that was more than two years ago. I date a different life from that night."

"But you have never heard the song under quite such dramatic circumstances, Harry."

"I am not so sure about that. I heard my own words to my mother repeated last summer under vastly different circumstances, though perhaps you will say they were as remarkable as what I have just related.

"Last summer I was making a 'horseback survey' in southeastern Kentucky. A local preacher, by the name of Logan, was guiding me, and I was to stay at his house one night.

"Several days previous he had come upon a party of gamblers in the woods. His son Thomas was one of the number, but he had impartially reported all of them to the grand jury; they had heard of it, and had been in hiding ever since. With Spartan-like determination he had resolved that his son should suffer with the rest, but his wife was deeply grieved at the circumstance, and felt indignant that a father should immolate a son in any such way.

"I knew nothing of these facts when Mr. Logan and I reached his house. I could see that all relations were not thoroughly cordial, but could not surmise the disturbing cause.

"After supper we sat in the soft, June moonlight, and Mr. Logan asked me to sing. Mrs. Logan was sitting farthest out in the yard near the 'office,' as the boys' building in some Southern front yards is called.

"After several other pieces, I thought of 'Where is my boy to-night?' My mind reverted to that blessed Sunday night in Evettsburg, and my mother's longing seemed to fill my own soul, so that the singing was particularly expressive. We were in a 'cove,' where rocky precipices hung near, and my words seemed to climb the cliffs and enter all their gloomy crevices and caverns with the wild, despairing query of the weird refrain. I don't think I was 'stuck on my own voice,' but I could not help knowing that I was singing well, and I felt a fine exhilaration in the surroundings.

"Mr. and Mrs. Logan were facing me, and did not see what I saw as I started on the last stanza. A young man walked from the shadow of the fir tree to the office. He lifted his finger in warning to me, and I proceeded with the singing as though nothing had happened, but watched him narrowly, although I could not believe that he meant harm when acting so openly. He stood still in the shadow of the office until I finished.

"There was silence for a moment, then Mrs. Logan arose in a bewildered way, tossed her arms wildly and moaned, not loud, but with searching, penetrating force, 'Oh, where is my boy to-night?'

"The figure in the shadow cried aloud the words, 'Here I am, mother!'

"She turned as Logan and I sprang to our feet. 'Tommy! Tommy!' she murmured, as the strong, young fellow folded her in a filial embrace!

"Logan said, as severely as possible: 'Young man, do you know that you are wanted by the grand jury?'

"'Yes, father, but the song I just heard and mother's heart-breaking wail determined me to stand my trial and pay the penalty like a man. I was skulking near the house in order to get provisions to keep me until after the court would adjourn. Now I will stay here to-night, and to-morrow I will go to town and plead guilty. Then I shall never gamble again, please God.'

"'Amen,' said the father, and the son added, 'Mother, you will never again have to ask in earnest, 'Where is my boy to-night?'"

The Weapon Wonderful.

BY LILIAN F. LEWIS.

PART II.—PROHIBITION.

CONSERVATIVE BROTHER:—To prove your commiseration for humanity, you proceed to disarm your opponent of every weapon text, then to mercilessly attack him!

WHITE-RIBBONER.—Your text from James closes a chapter directing the sinner to cleanse his hands and the double-minded to purify his heart, declaring "the friendship of this world is enmity to God," and urging, "Submit yourselves therefore to God, resist [not restrict] the devil and he will flee from you." As related elsewhere, "For this purpose the Son of Man was made manifest that he might destroy the works of the devil." High-license revision, 'tis said, renders the latter clause "that he might regulate the works of the devil."

C. B.—It shocks one to hear such tampering with the sacred Scripture. If the Son of Man ruled and reigned here in supremacy, we should enjoy nothing short of the millennium.

W. R.—Why not help His kingdom to come and His will to be done on the earth, and hasten the millennium? testifying, "Horror hath taken hold upon me because of the wicked that forsake thy law."

C. B.—I would destroy the devil and all his works instanter if possible, but as well undertake to reform the world and all that therein is. If unable to do as we would, the next best thing is to do as we can.

W. R.—If we would do as and all we can to oppose the devil and his works, we should do much to reform the world and all that is evil therein! "As a troubled fountain and as a corrupted spring, so is the righteous man that giveth way to the wicked." (rev. ver.) It is also written, "The whole land is made desolate because no man layeth it to heart." While in the ninth chapter of Ezekiel we read how God singles out as His identified and honored ones those "that cry and sigh for all the abominations that be done."

C. B.—There is no gainsaying but you temperance women perform that duty to the fullest and furthest extent. I'll score you one on that!

W. R.—Our Chieftain has said, "The tides of the mother's heart do not change, we count upon them always"; so the Rachels of to-day weeping for those that are not, because of the license abomination sanctioning and sustaining saloons that be, reiterate Jeremiah's plaint: "O, that my head were waters and mine eyes a fountain of tears that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people; for they be an assembly of treacherous men and they are grown strong in the land but not for the truth." (rev. ver.) "They have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace, when there is no peace. Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? Nay, they were not at all ashamed." . . "There shall be lamentation generally upon all the housetops of Moab and in the streets thereof. Woe be unto thee, O Moab, for thy sons are taken captives and thy daughters captives." What hurts humankind hurts Christ, and what hurts Christ should hurt all "who profess and call themselves Christians."

C. B.—I sympathize with reform efforts, but let me in famed political parlance remind you that "it is a condition and not a theory that confronts us."

W. R.—A very present "condition" of damaging commerce in liquors, calling for extermination, rather than your theory of amelioration! To borrow from the same source: "We champion a cause which defeat could not induce us to surrender, which no success short of complete accomplishment can tempt us to neglect." Whatever mistakes we may make or criticism we may merit, we count ourselves entitled to the eulogy, "I know thy works and thy labor and how thou canst not bear with them that are evil, and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles and are not, and for my name's sake hast labored and hast not fainted."

C. B.—I mark your emphasized point, but is it not gospel orthodoxy to love your enemies and pray for them that despitefully use you?

W. R.—God's revelation to the writer of "gospel of love" presents gospel orthodoxy and accords with the attitude of the Psalmist, "Do not I hate them, O Lord, that hate thee? And am I not grieved with them that rise up against thee? I hate them with perfect [i. e. righteous] hatred, I count them mine enemies;" explaining, "For thou, God, art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness, neither shall evil dwell with thee, thou hatest all workers of iniquity." So instructing, "Ye that love the Lord, hate evil," for according to Solomon, "The fear of the Lord is to hate evil," and "evil devices are an abomination to the Lord." The two aspects of the truth, this and the Master's instruction to which you alluded, are reconciled in its full conception, teaching us to love all souls as Christ did, not willing any should perish; and to hate all evil as He did, not willing any should exist. We hate, not the liquor seller, but his trade, and though he despitefully use us, we pray for him virtually in every temperance petition we offer. Nor do we hate those who befriend and defend his business by voice and vote, but plead with and for them, albeit they disrespectfully use us!

C. B.—You extremists measure the saloon-evil but not the political situation, nor the many bearings of the excise question.

W. R.—We recognize the political remedy as well as the political enemy. "Woe to the rebellious children, saith the Lord, that take counsel but not of me, and that cover with a covering but not of my spirit, that they may add sin to sin; that walk down into Egypt and have not asked of my mouth." With this word of the "temperance prophet," take Ezekiel's recorded denunciation, "He rebelled against him in sending his ambassadors into Egypt, that they might give him horses and much people. Shall he prosper? Shall he escape that doeth such things? Or shall he break the covenant and be delivered?" License accorded to, with revenue exacted from, the saloon carries into Egypt for its gains and adds "sin to sin," the sin of countenancing the evil to the sin which the evil creates. "Because ye have said, we have made a covenant with death and with hell are we at agreement, judgment also will I lay to the line and righteousness to the plummet, and your covenant with death shall be disannulled and your agreement with hell shall not stand. For the Lord will rise up that he may do his work."

C. B.—I wondered while you sought to relegate us into Egypt if your love of country quite equals your love of controversy!

W. R.—We are patriotic both to the core and the conscience. "He that saith to the wicked, thou art righteous, him shall the people curse. Nations shall abhor him, but to them that rebuke him shall be delight, and good blessing shall come upon them." Annotation in Bible here reads, "Piety and patriotism interlink"—Jeremiah 18:7–11, which reference please look up. Loyalty to country bespeaks loyalism to the counsel, "Say ye to the righteous that it shall be well with him, for they shall eat the fruits of their doings; woe to the wicked; it shall be ill with him, for the reward of his hands shall be given him." In our work for God and home and every land, we await the verification of Joshua's assurance: "Ye have seen all that the Lord hath done unto all these nations because of you, for the Lord your God is He that hath fought for you."

C. B.—However, you would reject all revenue receipts for the community's or the country's benefit from the enormously profitable liquor trade.

W. R.—"Benefit," derivative of "bene," good, and "facio," to do, is malapropos, nor would "profit" be a suitable substitute, for, "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" We insist, "Better is a little with righteousness than great revenues without right," yet believe such godliness would insure us gain in temporal and financial prosperity were the tremendous cost to the country of this traffic's thrift reckoned against its cash returns. You would have us own of this republic, "By thy great wisdom and by thy traffic hast thou increased thy riches." We hasten to further quote, "The terrible of the nations shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom," because "treasures of wickedness profit nothing" in the judgment of inspired wisdom.

C. B.—So you would signally favor this trade by letting it flourish without paying any price for the liberty, or as an offset, providing funds available for worthy uses?

W. R.—The "thirty pieces of silver" did not exonerate Judas, nor could pious expenditure have rendered stainless that blood money. We may presume of the betrayers of the temperance cause for sake of the liquor income, "Their silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of the wrath of the Lord, because it is the stumbling-block of their iniquity." The Psalmist attests, "Their drink offerings of blood will I not offer, nor take their name upon my lips." (rev. ver.) As sisters, but not citizens in this "land of the free," we chidingly charge, "Ye shall be ashamed of your revenues because of the fierce anger of the Lord" (margin), beseeching you, "Put away the false gods that are among you and be clean."

C. B.—Some scrupulously distinguished the pay demanded of the liquor seller as a tax, imposing a penalty for its sufferance, rather than proposing a revenue therefrom.

W. R.—A penalty may be prescribed for trespass or violation of law but not justly for what the law permits! Excluding that criticism, a tax carries with it right of representation, which the liquor potentates translate in exercise, the voice of domination. On the principle, "No taxation without representation," we're consistent in protesting both against taxing them, and against withheld representation through suffrage of woman, not exempt from taxation. It is our official declaration, "We have millions of good will for home defense, but not one mite for the tribute money that insures the saloon protection." While "Ye have made the heart of the righteous sad and strengthened the hands of the wicked that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life." Reasoning from Scriptural standpoint remember, debars from much that might contribute additional argument.

C. B.—Despite restrictions, you sandwich in generous slices of other, say between the manna portions of Scripture offered, and doubtless if tried in your case as in politics, prohibition wouldn't prohibit!

W. R.—Prohibition never fails to prohibit, though it may fail to fully prevent. The liquor traffic where forbidden legal pursuit, if it continue, as a criminal offender must have recourse to secrecy and subterfuge, and labor under disadvantages and difficulties, which the immunity of license guards from. Its open enticement is no longer justified, not its iniquity reputable. Given heroes, like the Hon. Neal Dow, of Maine, to frame the laws, and Commissioner Roosevelt, of New York, to execute them (demonstrating, "They that forsake the law praise the wicked, but such as keep the law contend with them") and this confusion of tongues would cease. "Then shalt thou say, O Lord, thou hast spoken against this place to cut it off, and it shall be that thou shalt bind a stone to it and thou shalt say, Thus shall Babylon sink and shall not rise from the evil I shall bring upon her, and they shall be weary"—prohibition should be enacted. "Though hand join in hand the wicked shall not be unpunished, but the seed of the righteous shall be delivered"—prohibition should be enforced. But a prohibition sentiment against prohibition politics prevails to prejudice people against our policy's text and "Our soul is exceedingly filled with the scorning of those that are at ease."

Willard Hall Echoes.

V. T. DAVID is speaking in Willard Hall for the eighth week, and still the audiences increase and the interest deepens. Forty or fifty came to the altar for prayer at the noon meeting to-day. Some had accepted Christ, but had not gained the victory through His indwelling presence and power. The meeting was marvelous; we could not close until 2 P. M.

Communications continue to reach Willard Hall from other cities, and other states. "I read of the meetings in THE UNION SIGNAL," writes one; "I want you to present the case of a mother of seven children. Her boy, a youth of fifteen, left home about one year ago; wrote one letter saying he was in Chicago, but was going to Blue Island. That is the last she has heard from him and her heart is breaking with its weight of woe. Will you urge all to pray that this boy may be found and returned to, or at least persuaded to write to his loving mother." (The boy's name is James Grace, has dark eyes and hair, is sixteen years of age, but large and overgrown.)

. . . . . .

"Pray for my three motherless boys." This request has come many times and many times has been taken to God in prayer. Many others are received. Each is noted, but it is impossible for me to reply personally to these, much as I would rejoice to do so. But my faith grasps each one as I go to Him in prayer.

Two years ago January 14, a man came into Willard Hall under the power of sin. He went out from that noonday meeting a new man, born of the Spirit. Scarce a noon meeting since, when he is in the city (he is a business man), but he is with us, his face illumined by the glory within. Because it was this anniversary we called him to the platform. "Two years ago to-day," he testified, "I came into this room a wicked, blasphemous man, strong drink my master. I went out a changed man with glory in my soul. Christ has given me the victory ever since."

Then he with another sang, "There is glory in my soul," and this gave the keynote for the service. Strangers were with us from Connecticut, Arkansas and other states. They will not soon forget this hour spent in Willard Hall.

The Anti-Saloon Convention.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The third national convention of the American Anti-Saloon League convened at Columbus, O., January 11, 12 and 13. Your correspondent attended in the threefold capacity of fraternal delegate from the National W. C. T. U., delegate from the W. C. T. U. of North Dakota, and from the State Enforcement League of that state.

Thinking all of "our folks" would be glad to have an account of the convention from one who was there, I send the following brief report.

The convention opened Tuesday evening in the Auditorium. Cordial words of welcome were spoken by prominent Ohioans, among them Mrs. Annie W. Clark, president of the W. C. T. U. of Ohio, Mrs. Ellen J. Phinney, Father Ross, and Rev. W. F. Whitlock. Hon. Frank S. Monnett, attorney-general, spoke for the state of Ohio, and reviewed the state laws concerning the sale of intoxicating liquor. One Ohio law which shows the great anxiety of law-makers to protect those most in need of it, provides that no intoxicating liquor shall be sold within one mile of a cemetery!

Dr. Luther B. Wilson, of Washington, responded to the welcomes, and spoke earnestly against the sale of intoxicating liquor in the National capitol and the Congressional Library.

The address of the evening was given by Col. Eli F. Ritter, of Indianapolis, whose subject was, "The Saloon Before the Court." Colonel Ritter took the position, and proved it by supreme court decisions, that the saloon is a nuisance, that no legislature has a right to license a nuisance, and therefore, that the saloon is unconstitutional, and he believes the time will come when it will be so declared by the supreme court of the United States.

Wednesday morning the convention opened with the venerable president, Hon. Hiram Price, in the chair. Mr. Price was eighty-four years old the day he started to the convention. He still holds himself erect as a young man and his excellent annual address revealed a keen and vigorous mind. He is a splendid example of temperate living; he has never used strong drink or tobacco in any form.

Mr. James L. Ewin, secretary, reported twenty-two national bodies, thirty-two state leagues and forty-two other organizations affiliated in this movement.

Rev. H. H. Russell, national superintendent, gave a report of the progress of the work by states. To the prohibition state of North Dakota he gave the credit of being the banner state for the enforcement of law. Ohio is the best organized state. In ten months 2,600 pulpits of that state were filled with anti-saloon speakers. Mr. Russell said the League worked in three departments: First and most important is agitation—the people must be awakened; second, the enforcement of laws now on the statute books; third, the securing of better laws in every state. He said if they could not get a whole loaf they take a half loaf, or a slice, or even a crumb.

The Neal Dow memorial hour was full of interest. A beautiful and eloquent address was given by a colored brother, the Rev. Walter Brooks, D. D., of Washington.

Wednesday evening the Right Rev. John A. Watterson, bishop of Columbus, presided. After a few words of greeting, he introduced Judge Chas. A. Pollock, the framer of the prohibitory law of North Dakota, who made a strong address on "The Saloon and the State." The speaker gave an interesting review of the progress of the work in North Dakota, from the first effort to secure temperance legislation up to the passage of constitutional prohibition. The minimum penalty for violating the law is ninety days in jail and a fine of $200. The maximum punishment is one year in jail and a fine not to exceed $1,000. After the first offense, the law makes it a felony, punishable by two years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. The supreme court of the state has within a few weeks handed down a decision that this penalty is not a cruel or unusual punishment, and for the first time a man has been sent to the penitentiary for selling liquor. In the course of his remarks Judge Pollock paid a high tribute to the work of the W. C. T. U. of that state.

The next speaker was Mrs. Leonora Barry Lake, whose eloquent voice has been heard in our National Conventions for many years. Her subject was "The Saloon and the Home." She urged with great earnestness the sanctity of the home, and showed how the liquor traffic was its chief enemy. She believed that the overthrow of this traffic would be accomplished at the ballot-box, although she said that for herself she had no desire to enter politics, she did not wish to wear an abbreviated costume, she loved the swish of her long skirts, and had no desire to sully them in the muddy pool of politics.

Thursday morning the old corps of officers was re-elected with some changes in the vice-presidents. Many short addresses were given showing the progress of the work in the different states.

Mrs. Clara Hoffman gave the greetings of the National W. C. T. U., and spoke of the necessity of building on the sure foundation of total abstinence. She called attention to the fact that while the churches passed resolutions that were above criticism concerning the liquor traffic, that with a few exceptions they did not enforce total abstinence in their membership, nor did they make it a test of membership.

Dr. A. J. Kynett, of Philadelphia, spoke on "The Relation of the Church to the Saloon," and strongly arraigned the church for its apathy upon this question. He said if he had the trump of Gabriel he would blow it in the ear of slumbering churches and sleeping ministers. He declared that the saloon would be outlawed if the church members would shake off their apathy.

A colored bishop, Rev. B. W. Arnett, spoke upon the interdependence of man upon man in reform, and made an earnest plea for the enfranchisement of woman, which was received with enthusiasm.

Mr. William C. Lilley, of Pittsburg, discussed the saloon from a business man's standpoint, and showed that his state of Pennsylvania would have made money by buying up at the owners' prices the entire saloon business of the state and closing it out.

Mr. S. P. Thrasher, of New Haven, Conn., gave an interesting account of the work of the Law and Order League of his state. Of the 178 persons brought before the courts last year by the League, all were convicted save one.

Resolutions were passed affirming the object of the Anti-Saloon League to be the extermination of the saloon, declaring their belief that the licensing of the sale of intoxicating liquor in every state and territory is unconstitutional, condemning the interpretation of the law by public officials, which permits wine and beer in the capitol restaurants, requesting President McKinley to refrain from using liquor at state dinners, condemning the supporting in primaries of men not in sympathy with the abolition of the saloon, and declaring in favor of a law providing that before a United States license shall be granted or tax received, a dealer must exhibit to the collector a license issued in accordance with the state law.

Such a measure, the Foss bill, is now before Congress and its passage will be of great assistance in the enforcement of the law in prohibition states and districts.

The first part of the last evening's program was a medal contest. This was followed by a most unique and instructive entertainment, "The Liquor Traffic Through a Camera," by Rev. P. A. Baker. By aid of the stereopticon, the great audience was taken into the slums of Cleveland, and the heartrending scenes so truthfully portrayed, moved the people as no spoken words could do. If the thoughtful, Christian people of every city could, by such a lecture, be made to see the sickening results of the liquor traffic in that part of their own city which the majority of them never see, I believe it would bring about a revolution in municipal government.

Prohibition in Hyde Park.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—A great many of your readers may be interested in the work against the saloon by the Hyde Park people. About 1864 the work commenced. Just before the annexation of Hyde Park to Chicago (1889), the village board passed what is called the local option law. This is now in force in a territory comprising about forty-two square miles; the prohibition districts contain about twelve square miles. By the terms of the annexation these districts are to remain unless changed by a vote of the people living in them. The year after annexation a man by the name of Morrison applied to the mayor of Chicago, Hon. DeWitt C. Cregier, for a license to keep a dramshop at 5626 Lake avenue, which place was in the prohibition district. Mayor Cregier refused to grant the license! Mr. Morrison applied to Judge McConnell for a mandamus to compel the mayor to grant the license.

Jonas Hutchinson, who was then corporation counsel (now Judge Hutchinson) and lawyers engaged by the Hyde Park people, John N. Jewett and Henry V. Freeman (now Judge Freeman), argued the case before Judge McConnell, who decided January 26, 1891, in favor of the city, and Mr. Morrison appealed to the Illinois supreme court, which court (decision written by Justice Bailey now dead) affirmed the decision of the lower court, upholding the laws. I wish every man and woman in the world could read this decision, which is found in the 138 Illinois reports (supreme court), page 401. In 1892, certain men, largely real estate men, who owned property around Jackson Park, where the World's Fair was held, tried to break down the district (as we believe) so that they could sell the real estate for saloon purposes.

They brought into the council a petition containing about 2,811 names. We found that about one-half of them were forged. The petition was withdrawn. In 1893 came the World's Fair, and I think it was providential that it was situated largely in a prohibition district, and believe if this had not been the fact there would have been about one hundred licensed saloons in the district around the World's Fair. Our association spent that year about $3,500.

I believe that every time we have been attacked we have come out of the contest better than when we went into it; for instance, when they tried to break down the district in 1890, came the magnificent supreme court decision referred to above. In 1892, when by fraudulent petition they tried again to break down the local option law, our association immediately took it up as a part of their work, and have won a number of cases. In 1896 we assisted in having license refused to "Ye Tavern," situated near Washington Park. This was a vile road-house, and in 1897 we secured, with the help of the Windsor Park and Cheltenham association, from the grand jury of Cook county, about seventy-eight indictments against persons selling liquor in the prohibition district, most of whom have been tried and conviction obtained. Lately we have secured the conviction, by a jury in Judge Chetlain's court, of an ex-lieutenant of police. For years we have known that the work was hindered, and now we know by what. The taxpayers paid this man to protect them in their legal rights, and he accepted money to protect those who were illegally selling liquor. I believe the crime of America to-day is this sneaking, underhanded, contemptible business of a man who is paid to protect the people, to enforce the laws and punish wrong-doers, pretending to do this, and then, with his hand behind him, taking money to protect the blind pig-keeper, the gambler, the what-not. If a man will take money to protect one man, why would he not to protect any one, even to a murderer? Out upon such officers, and if this American republic does not correct this business it will go down. One thing has come to me during this trial, that the heart of the people (the great bulk of them) is true, honest, and they are glad to have such a man punished. I have heard commendation for this conviction from a saloon-keeper in the northwestern part of the city, and received a letter from Miss Willard from which I quote: "Be assured you have the thanks and blessing of all the home people between the oceans, for this example has gone out far and wide," and many others. Thanks are due to our state's attorney and his assistants for their aid in this work.

Reform Legislation.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In many states this year an effort will be made to raise the age of protection for girls to eighteen. It will be well for us to study the laws that have been passed that we may be able to frame such as will prove adequate. It is advocated by some that in our laws for the protection of girls a clause should be inserted which will also protect boys. And the clause, "being eighteen years of age," or fifteen as the case may be, is inserted.

In Ohio our law reads, "Section 6816. Whoever has carnal knowledge of a female person forcibly and against her will, or, being eighteen years of age, carnally knows and abuses a female child under sixteen years of age, with her consent, is guilty of rape."

The clause, "being eighteen years of age," does not protect a boy's virtue; what does it do? It protects a bad boy in vice. It says to him, if you commit sin and are under the age of eighteen, the law will not hold you responsible. In Ohio no young girl is protected by law from bad young men under eighteen. If he can say she consented to her ruin, we have no law by which a boy under eighteen can be punished. We hope for better things at the hands of our legislators this year. We do need a law to protect a boy's virtue. The following, if passed, would protect a boy from bad women: Whoever shall solicit a boy under eighteen years of age for an immoral purpose, or who shall invite a boy under eighteen years of age to visit a house of ill-fame or assignation, or who shall arrange for illicit meeting between a boy under eighteen and disreputable women or girls shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term of years, etc. This would prove a protection to boys, and our legislators, for the first time in history, would set a value on a boy's virtue.

Local Union.

[EXPLANATORY NOTE.—Owing to the fact that Mrs. Stevenson is away from Chicago and, therefore, separated from the material necessary for the studies in early W. C. T. U. history, some slight change in the proposed order has been rendered imperative. The matter will without doubt adjust itself on her return. This week, as last, will be given to the questions formerly belonging to "Mother Experience."]

QUESTION.—Please inform me if one woman can belong to two or more unions; also if a woman can belong to the W's and Y's at the same time.

ANSWER.—The basis of membership in the W. C. T. U. is signing the total abstinence pledge and paying the annual membership fee. Each fee represents, in the local union, in the state and in the National an individuality behind it. It stands, not alone for so much money, but for the active energy and devotion of one woman. We count the membership in each state by the dues that are paid into it from the local unions. We count the membership of the National organization by the dues which come from the states. Each ten cents represents one woman and we report our membership as so much according to the number of dimes that are paid in. This being the case, it is manifestly unfair for the same woman to be counted two or more times. We could never have an accurate estimate of our membership if this were to be allowed. It may frequently happen that a woman may desire to work in two unions, either in adjoining towns or in a W and Y in the same town. This I believe she should be allowed to do, provided she be one of those rare women who can fill more than one place well. But, in such a case, she should be counted an active member in one union only; in the other she should be an honorary, giving her influence and her work, paying her dues in both, but having it distinctly understood that from one union only is a proportion of her dues to be sent up to state and National. This it seems to me is the only possible way of settling this constantly recurring question upon a fair basis. Granted that there are many active members each year whose dues are not paid in, it would still be an exceedingly poor way to offset this discrepancy if individual members were to be counted two and three times. Let us have our membership report a just one, so far as it is in our power to make it so, and this can only be brought about when each member shall be counted once, and once only.

Q.—Can a contest for "A Great Mother," or some other book be called a matrons' contest if the contestants are matrons, or must a matrons' medal be presented before it can properly be called a matrons' contest?

A.—So far as I know the term "Matrons' Contest" originated with our superintendent of W. C. T. U. medal work, Mrs. A. E. Carman. The goal set before the contestants in such a contest is the Matrons', or Silver-Gray, medal. I presume the phrase is not protected by copyright, nevertheless, in simple justice, I should feel that it ought to be left to the medal bureau originating it. No one would feel that a "Demorest Contest" could be held unless a Demorest medal were presented. Why, then, should greater liberties be taken with the W. C. T. U. Medal Contest Bureau? If it is desired to hold contests of matrons' and present some other prize than the medal, then another name should be given to such a contest.

Q.—Can you recommend any book on child culture for the study of young parents?

A.—"Studies in Home and Child Life," by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, a review of which has already appeared in THE UNION SIGNAL, is one which I most cheerfully recommend to all parents, young and old. I know no work which takes so profoundly, comprehensive and withal so philosophic a view of the relation of parents to children and of children to parents. It has been made the text-book for this branch of study in the University of Wisconsin, and is destined to wield a potent influence over a constantly widening circle in days to come. I am heartily glad the book was written by a white-ribboner, and am sure it will be a blessing to many both within and without our ranks.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Trust ye in the Lord for ever; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength. My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him.—Isa. 26:4; Psa. 62:5.

REV. O. P. GIFFORD, of Buffalo, N. Y., one of the most gifted preachers in the Baptist denomination in America, and a staunch Prohibitionist, made a stirring address at a Temple rally in Buffalo, N. Y., during the meetings of the late National W. C. T. U. convention in that city. I devote the Temple column this week to extracts from this able address, feeling assured that all friends of the Temple will read it with delight and increased zeal for the work.

"LADIES: It is a delight to stand in your presence and speak concerning the Temple. When a citizen of Chicago I often visited the building, and always with a sense of pride. It is the natural expression of woman's life, combining as it does, beauty and strength. Other office buildings in Chicago are huge cubes punctured with openings for light and air, enormous aggregations of straight lines and right angles. Most office buildings are imitations of the city of the vision, whose height and length and breadth were equal by the measuring rod of a man. Your Temple combines beauty and use; lines of beauty meet the eye and delight the artistic sense; but beauty is coupled with service; it is as sensibly planned and as thoroughly equipped for work as any building in Chicago. It is the one woman's building in the world, and as such expresses your life and belongs to you.

"The Temple is not only an expression of your organized life, it is essential to the perpetuity and permanence of your work. For unnumbered years the waters of Erie have been hurrying toward Ontario, generating mists, organizing choruses, building rainbows on the way. Not long ago science pierced the side of Niagara and is transforming force into power, mist and music into light and organized energy. First, men had to dig a deep, long, wide pit; in this they set up turbine wheels, these they geared to dynamos, the pit was the plant; it cost money, —millions of dollars—everything costs that is of worth in this world, but pit and machinery and water are defying darkness and revolutionizing manufacturing. Your building is your plant, it is your pit and turbine and dynamo, it will change the power of womanhood in this country that has been throwing itself in some ways that do not count, into fire and force that will defy darkness and transform civilization.

"Not far from the river's side, near the pit, is a great plant for changing coke, salt, sand and sawdust into carbonade or black diamonds. This mass of raw material fused by electric current, crystallizes into a commercial commodity of use and value. The great problem of the social order is to save the wastage of society, to crystallize the coke and salt and sand and sawdust into permanent forms for service. This Temple is your plant; keep it, use it, turn the mighty forces of Christian womanhood into it, generate redeeming currents through it, dispel the darkness of the saloon, furnish force for the overburdened chariot of our civilization.

"If it were for sale I doubt not money could be raised among liquor dealers to purchase it; thus the cradle would become the grave of your movement, and your enemies might get the job of watching the cause they have slain.

"The Temple is an expression of your life, essential to your work; it must not be surrendered. When the Gibeonites hung the sons of Saul on the hilltop, Rizpah took sackcloth and spread it upon the top of the rock, and from the beginning of barley harvest until water dropped out of heaven she suffered neither the birds of the air to rest upon them by day, nor the beasts of the field by night, until David, shamed by her courage, buried the bodies with those of Saul and Jonathan in the country of Benjamin. You cannot do less for the protection of your Temple from birds and beasts; spread your sackcloth, organize your defense, and the kingly men of the country will come to your relief."

Ole's Advice.

BY DOROTHEA DAVIS.

RALPH:

SAY, little boy, with a ragged coat,
What will you give for my nice new sled?
Santa Claus brought it Christmas day;
I wrote and asked him to paint it red.

OLE:

What could I do with a sled so fine?
I've never a moment to play.
I have boots to black from morn till night,
I must work for pennies all day.

RALPH:

What do you do with your pennies, boy,
What do you want that you buy?
I should think you would want a new cap for your head;
The one that you wear is a guy.

OLE:

What do I buy that I want, you ask,
Why, I guess you don't know my dad;
He takes away every cent that I earn,
If I had none, I'd wish that I had.

RALPH:

My papa gave me all this money, see?
And at home, I have coins of gold.
I'll buy you some mittens, poor little boy,
Your fingers look red, and so cold.

OLE:

Don't waste your money on me, little boy.
My father would sell them for drink.
Just work to pull down the saloons—every one—
That would fill all our pockets with chink.

The Story of Sandy Porter.

BY MRS. I. V. P.

SANDY PORTER was the last of eight children; his father had served a term in the state prison, and his mother was a broken-hearted invalid. It was reported that, when the seventh child lay dead in the house, the unnatural father, on finding his wife in tears, roughly rebuked her saying, "What are you bawling for? Anybody'd s'pose you had buried young uns enough to get used to it by this time."

Poor, little Sandy! it was a pity that he, too, had not died when he was a baby.

He was not a slum boy, as you may suppose. No, he lived in a small hamlet where the free air and sunshine were his, and he could roam at will over the green fields and through the forests.

He might have been a healthy, robust boy, instead of the dwarfed, pinched, muscleless little fellow that he was; but when he was very little some one put tobacco into his mouth; he came to like it, and then to crave it, until, at the time I first saw him, when he might have been, perhaps, twelve years old, his tongue was constantly rolling a quid, and the corners of his mouth were stained with tobacco juice; his eyes were dim and watery, and he seemed to think of nothing clean or pure. His first salutation on meeting any one whom he suspected of using tobacco was, "Give us a chaw, won't you?"

Sandy went to school, but what was the use? His mind was as dwarfed as his body; perhaps nature had done her part well; he might have been a bright pupil had it not been for the tobacco poison, but it was no unusual sight to see him lying by the roadside, or on the playground, in a stupor even in winter. I recollect one time in particular—it was a bitter, cold, blustering time—when Sandy was found on the playground, and we thought at first that he was dead; he was carried home, and came out of his stupor only to call for "another chaw."

So it went on; he seemed to care for no one but his mother, and none else cared for him. The girls all feared him, the boys jeered at him, and the old folks shook their heads and said, "There was no good in him." And yet, there might have been, if some kind spirit could have induced him to lay aside the ever present quid. But there came a time when the quid was laid aside forever.

One day late in winter Sandy started for the woods where some men and boys were at work. He had gone about half the distance when he was seized with one of his "fits," and fell by the roadside. No one was near to help him, and no one saw him till the morning, when his poor little frozen body was found from which the life had gone out. An inquest was held, and the verdict rendered—"Died from exposure." Yet all the people said, "It was tobacco fits that killed him."

A Strong Family.

"YOU just ought to feel my muscle, papa," said Johnny. "Ain't it big and hard?"

The blue blouse and flannel shirt were pushed up into wrinkles at the shoulder, and a very soft, pink arm presented itself proudly for inspection.

"Pretty good for seven years," said papa, smiling. "I hope some day to see you as strong as a family I know, who carry the world on their shoulders."

"What's their name?" asked Johnny, forgetting his muscle at this first hint of a story.

"Their name is Never," answered his father, with a queer little wrinkle at each eye corner, as if a smile was curled up there.

"Never! What a funny name!" exclaimed Johnny. "What are their other names?"

"Oh, there are a lot of them! There's Mr. Never-drink; he has such clear eyes and such a steady step you'd know him anywhere—a strong fellow is Mr. Never-drink, always ready to lift his end of the log.

"Another is Mr. Never-swear; you'd know him by the company he keeps, and I suppose he grows strong by not wasting his breath. Then there's Mr. Never-lie, everybody trusts him; and Mr. Never-be-unkind, everybody loves him, and Mr. Never-forget, who loses nothing; and Mr. Never-be-idle, who does the world's work; and Mr. Never-be-discouraged"—

Papa stopped and laughed aloud; for Johnny was in the midst of a big yawn.

"You don't seem to care much about my strong people, Jack," he said.

"I like stories about sho' 'nuff people," owned Johnny.

"All right. Once there was a little boy who wanted to be very strong—oh, as strong as Samson! So he went to the strongest man in N street and asked him how he got so strong and hardy. 'By never touching strong drink,' said the strong man on N street. He asked another steady fellow. 'Never swear,' said the man; 'it takes you into low company, where God and men are dishonored.' Another said, 'Never lie.' 'A single lie takes away a man's courage'"—

"Who was that little boy, papa?" interrupted Johnny.

"He was that little boy that I want my little boy to be," answered his father. "I want him to make friends with the Nevers, because they are the friends of God, and their family motto is, 'Thus saith the Lord, Thou shalt not.'"—Presbyterian.

The Real Good.

"WHAT is the real good?"
I asked in musing mood.
Order, said the law court;
Knowledge, said the school;
Truth, said the wise man;
Pleasure, said the fool;
Love, said the maiden;
Beauty, said the page;
Freedom, said the dreamer;
Home, said the sage;
Fame, said the soldier;
Equity, the seer.
Spake my heart full sadly:
"The answer is not here."
Then within my bosom,
Softly this I heard:
Each heart holds the secret:
Kindness is the word."

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Two of the little nieces have expressed a preference for the pansy, as the Cozy Corner flower. Alice Adams, of Prescott, Ari., says that she thinks it may help you to be modest, and while it is true that the pansy, like its little cousin, the violet, is typical of modesty, it also stands for something else. "Pansies for thoughts." What a beautiful illustration that is of our relations to each other! Each week as THE UNION SIGNAL goes out my thoughts are with the boys and girls who will read the Children's Page, for you will then be thinking of me, and finally of each other. Then there are the tender, loving thoughts for the poor, helpless children who are shut out from happiness by circumstances over which they have no control, and kind thoughts are followed by kind deeds until there is no limit to the good works that may have been inspired by a simple little flower. Who votes for the pansy? Lovingly yours,

The Decline of Country Life.

IN an article in the October Ladies' Home Journal, Mrs. Lyman Abbott writes as follows: "For the stability and righteousness of our government we are accustomed to think we must pin our faith on the country people who 'live near to nature's heart.' But how many of them seem to have learned anything noble from her? Her beauty does not refine them, her honesty does not incite them to thoroughness, her free-handedness does not inspire them to generosity—they become narrow and sordid in the midst of grandeur and liberality. They imagine there can be nothing in life but work or play, toil or rest, and they feel a contempt for those who play and rest."

A few years ago at a convention of the Association for the Advancement of Women, an eastern lady arraigned the physical life of the country in her section in substance as follows. She said that instead of the farmer's family enjoying a bountiful supply of nutritious milk, as it was popularly supposed to do, every pint must stand until all the cream had risen to be made into butter, not for the use of the family but for sale, and that the wives of truck farmers told her that they never used the peas, beans, etc., from their gardens until they were too old to be sold in the town.

The Sunday-School Times of August 7 has an editorial from which we clip: "There are few sources of suffering like that of monotony. To have day follow day in a wearisome iteration of experiences that have lost interest for us, is to have life reduced to a low level of dulled pain. Probably to this is due the excess of farmers and their wives and daughters among the insane in America. To this, no doubt, is due the flight of the farmers' sons from the uninteresting routine of country life to the stir, movement and variety of the city. One such declares that his childhood was full of an irrepressible weariness during the years he spent in an isolated farmhouse. He found himself wishing that something would happen, if only it were the house to burn down, so that he might find a break in the dull procession of events that woke no feeling in his mind." The article correctly takes the view that the fault is with the people themselves and with the conditions of life which might be altered. It continues: "If the farmers' boy were alive to all the facts of the world around him, if a wiser and more practical education than he gets at present had shown him the vistas of interest and delight that open around him on every side, he might come to sympathize with the impulse which carries the poet and the naturalist from the city to the country, instead of bending his own steps in the other direction. Certainly nothing will check this townward drift—which is as visible in England as in America, and more troublesome in Australia than in either, until we get the countryman alive to what the country offers him and thus take the lifeless monotony away." . . "It is only of late that the people of Wordsworth's own country have begun to lay to heart his message, and to discover, as John Stuart Mill did, with what perennial interest the poet's teaching invests the commonest sights, the wayside seeds, the birds and the trees, of a country side."

We are aware that these statements are sure to arouse indignation among some country people, but statistics prove beyond a doubt that the farmers furnish more than their proportion of the inmates of the insane asylums, and the movement of young people from the farms to the cities, no one will deny. These facts demand an explanation and only by honestly seeking and admitting the cause can we hope to find a remedy. It is impossible to doubt that the cause is chiefly the narrow and stunted life which prevails upon farms. There are many individual exceptions; there are modifications according to localities. Not all of the above statements apply to any one farming district, nevertheless these statements, on the whole, correctly summarize the deficiencies of country life. In the richest farming communities, during a large portion of the year, life is made up of hard, incessant toil, from the earliest streak of day until nightfall. The family thought and conversation does not venture far or long from "the crops" and their probable prices. Many farmers with hundreds and hundreds of acres of highly productive land and with thousands of dollars in the bank, take probably the cheapest daily paper published in the neighboring city, but can not be induced to subscribe for their own church paper at $1.50 per year, while the magazines and reviews which are a necessity to the intelligent man of to-day, are unthinkable extravagance. They do not own a dozen books all told. "Saving," not for some good, definite purpose, but as an end in itself, is the great virtue; or, as George Eliot expresses it, "the main object of life is to nibble off an existence without leaving any perceptible deficit." The woman considers "doing her own work" the chief end of woman, and looks with contempt upon the one who delegates any part of her household work, except under stress of ill health, to hired help. That it is done for the sake of her own intellectual culture forms no adequate excuse.

The meagerness of their gifts to church and philanthropic purposes is notorious. Where city people with the same income and the same amount of money in the bank give two hundred dollars toward the pastor's support, the farmer gives under pressure twenty-five dollars. Is it any wonder that healthy, young natures, with all of their natural craving for a free, untrammeled life, spurn with disgust this cramped life, or, when unable to do this, that so many repressed and stunted minds end in the insane asylum? Is it any wonder that those young lives which seek for change in the great, unknown city with its manifold temptations, having no development within themselves on which to rely in their hours of loneliness, fall easy prey to the enticements of the saloon, the low theater, and the ball room? It is true that Wordsworth and many other great teachers, not merely the poets but the scientists as well, are ready to show these young people beauties and wonders in the nature around them, which would hold them to their country homes and make the city seem a poor place indeed. But, alas, in the homes where books and periodicals never come, how is the young man or woman to meet these teachers?

Good Citizenship.

NEXT to the securing of good laws there is no more important duty devolving upon a good citizen than to see that the laws are executed. A legislative battle is sharp and swift; law enforcement is Indian warfare ending too often in a Braddock's defeat. Mr. Arthur Burrage Farwell's article in our Correspondence columns shows, however, that if the Hyde Park warfare in Chicago has been almost continuous and the enemy very crooked, the results have generally been favorable to law and order.

The Hyde Park Protective Association was organized in 1890 to aid in upholding the law in a prohibition district in Chicago in force in a territory comprising about twelve miles, and later it took up as a part of its work the enforcing of local option law in forty-two square miles adjoining the prohibition district. It was prompted to do this after an attempt to destroy the prohibition district by a fraudulent petition containing about fourteen hundred forged names. During these years the Association has spent in cash, fourteen thousand dollars, and more than that has been given by the officers and friends of the Association in time and labor. The secretary says: "It has been a cross, but when we look at it right, isn't the cross the lightest thing a man or woman can carry 'in His name'?"

These years have been filled with many interesting experiences and contests. An alderman who came into the meetings of the Association and professed love for the work, afterward opened a "blind pig" under the Illinois Central railroad at Sixtieth street. When the convention came for the nomination of aldermen, this Association had his record in the police court printed, signed it and scattered the bills through the convention. The man received one vote. Their latest victory is the conviction of S. C. Rank, an ex-lieutenant of police, who extorted money for the protection of a "blind pig" in the prohibition district. This is the greatest victory the Association has won since the supreme court of the state sustained the lower court and upheld the law under which the prohibition district is organized. The result of this trial will be far-reaching in its effect upon the police department which has winked at the numerous "blind pigs" doing business in Hyde Park and other prohibition districts in Cook county, and upon the inspector of that district under whose eyes these things have gone on. It is said that political pulls and all sorts of influence have been used to prevent the case from coming to trial, but that the state's attorney pulled straight ahead and is rejoiced at the result. There have been seventy-eight indictments this year alone, and over 1,200 World's Fair year.

None but those who are life soldiers in this warfare for the enforcement of law can tell what it costs to make a clean, safe place of even a few square miles. One of the active men in this Association says his heart is always warm for the work, though it has cost him much in every way, for he remembers a little son transplanted to the fields of light, who always prayed, "God bless all the little boys, God bless all the big boys, and God bless all the ladies," and the father is working to answer the boy's prayer and in his name and stead, as well as in the name of the Master. Would that there were more such Christian citizenship workers and there would be more clean spots and fewer wrecked lives. Why might we not have "Protective Associations" for all our towns and cities till our people become so educated and so patriotic in the true sense of the word that every citizen would be a Christian protector of the rights of the whole?

Corkscrews.

THE New York Sun had such a telling editorial on the Princeton alumni banquet at which Dr. Shields was so repeatedly and enthusiastically cheered that we would like to quote the whole of it. It had the caption, "Is there a Presbyterian Church?" Coming from a secular source it is interesting, as showing how the world regards the actions of the reverend professor. In closing the editorial says:

Dr. Shields did not throw up the Presbyterian church because of any declared objection to its doctrine or ecclesiastical system, but simply to be free to sign applications for liquor licenses whenever it pleased him so to do. On the same general ground any Presbyterian who finds his personal inclinations or appetites restricted by the discipline of his church is justified in quitting it, nothing in its special creed, theology, or order putting any conscientious obligation on him. That being so, and the course of Dr. Shields indicates that in his opinion it is so, what is the excuse for maintaining longer the merely nominal existence of the Presbyterian church? If it is not the custodian of any body of faith and doctrine peculiar to it, it is not a church, and the labor of centuries expended in building it up as a distinct religious organization has been wasted.

It was at the same banquet that the president of the university, Dr. Patton, gave expression to the old-time sentiment that prohibition would not prohibit, but would only increase the sale of corkscrews. It is strange that brewers and liquor-dealers who profess to agree with this, do not clamor for prohibition everywhere! According to this reasoning the ten commandments are responsible for a considerable part of the murder, theft, adultery, Sabbath-breaking, false swearing, etc., and if God's and man's prohibitory laws were repealed it ought to go far toward doing away with evil. We are wondering if Princeton proposes to issue a new system of theology with all of the "thou shalt nots" left out. Will some white-ribboner please send Dr. Patton a copy of the history of prohibition Cambridge as soon as it comes from the press, and a copy of Baxter's "Call to the Unconverted," the burden of which is "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?" that he may thereby have one more call to good old Presbyterian doctrine, illustrated by a modern instance.

Miss Willard's Tribute to Lady Henry.

THE following has been published widely by the press of this country, and while we spoke upon the same subject last week, we feel sure that white-ribboners will like to read what Miss Willard has to say:

"Lady Henry Somerset has given twelve years of constant activity to the Temperance reform. I do not believe that any other woman ever laid so many gifts upon its shrine. She is the daughter of an Earl, the inheritor of wealth, the possessor of beauty and charm. She has a voice sweet as a flute and of a compass capable of easily reaching ten thousand persons, with an enunciation that has hardly been excelled upon the stage; a gift of eloquence in speaking that has made her the foremost woman orator of her time and a gift of writing that has been characterized in terms of highest commendation by literary experts; to crown all these she has a tender faith and spirituality irradiating all her daily life, and a humor and bonhomie so rare that they are perhaps the first qualities noted on meeting her. I am more grieved than I can tell that she could not continue in the work to which she brought a devotion that knew no metes or bounds. The misfortune of losing her through overwork from the white-ribbon army in England is greater than any other that we have yet sustained. In closing her letter of resignation to the 'British Women' Lady Henry quotes the pathetic couplet:

"'My half day's work is done,
And this is all my part,
To give a patient God
My patient heart.'

"But we will not permit ourselves to think that she will be no more among us; other and better days may dawn, and meanwhile it comforts me to know that I but express the loyalty of her American comrades in writing this little characterization which they will accept as richly deserved by one whom they have learned to love so warmly."

An Echo of the Past.

THE gifted and erratic but often barbaric Rudyard Kipling, has favored the public with a poem of which the following lines contain the climax:

"For a woman is a woman,
But a good cigar's a smoke.'

We doubt if for frank brutality this utterance has been equaled in the "poetry" of the period. The worst of it is that Rudyard means just what he says. He looks upon woman as one of the comforts and luxuries pertaining to man; he seems to have no more interest in her happiness and development as a daughter of God than he has in—any other good thing. For him she is "a little nearer than his dog, a little dearer than his horse." The fact is, Rudyard is a mere echo of a time that is past, and he is so ill-timed as not to know it. He has a mental make-up resulting from his long association with the officers and soldiers of the British army in India, that would cause his concept of the intellectual and cultured, the self-supporting and aspiring young woman of America to be nothing to him save a monstrosity. On the whole, we are rather glad he wrote the lines. They will show to some half-sleepy folk that a modern man may still have his offset in that primeval concatenation of selfishness, pure, simple and absolute, which thinks of nothing but its own gratification and looks upon all good things on the face of the earth as it would upon a row of ripe oranges that had been provided for its great mouth and which it is only waiting to squeeze. However, we pity Rudyard more than we blame him; we recognize that he is "in his conditions." He had the misfortune to be born and bred in contact with an Oriental army, and the only wonder is that he survived to write the late Recessional—the most reputable poetic outcome of the recent Jubilee.

THE Terry bill is now in the hands of a subcommittee composed of Hon. G. W. Ray, of New York, Hon. R. W. Parker, New Jersey, and Hon. W. L. Torry, Arkansas. It provides for police power over cigarets in original packages, so that when imported they become subject to the laws of the state they enter. Similar legislation, it will be remembered, was necessary before state prohibition liquor laws could become effective. Petitions should be sent in. Look at the form given from time to time in THE UNION SIGNAL.

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

Mr. J. A. Nicholls, a well-known temperance lecturer, long in connection with the National Prohibition Bureau of New York, has started a little paper called the Hatchet, published monthly at Montreal, Canada. It proposes to put in strong strokes on the plebiscite question, and in general, will "aid in the work of hewing down the great upas tree of the legalized drink traffic." It will "hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may." THE UNION SIGNAL welcomes the Hatchet and believes it will neither cut the cherry tree nor lie, much as it will, no doubt, be accused of both.

The colored people are to build a Lincoln memorial in Springfield, Ill., by subscriptions of one dollar. It is to be a sort of Institutional church with a main audience room and reading room, night school, Freedman's National Historical Library and museum, and to have memorial windows to Fred Douglass, John Brown, Grant, Wendell Phillips, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Bishop Simpson, Garrison, Wilberforce, and hosts of others, including the W. C. T. U. The underground railroad is to be represented and other curious and interesting things connected with slavery. When forty thousand dollars is pledged, all becomes due. Rev. J. S. Woods will receive pledges, and Mr. Frank W. Tracy, president of the First National bank (both of Springfield, Ill.), will receive the money.

Mrs. Cynthia Westover Alden, and her father, Professor Westover, whom we shall greet again at Los Angeles, as he lives near by, will be remembered as prominent persons of the Toronto Convention. Mrs. Alden edits the Woman's Page in the New York Tribune. As women are now coming forward in every line of life, she has recently brought out her experiences as a little girl in a mining camp in the far west, where her father, owing to his expert knowledge of geology, was at the head. What "Little Bushy" went through was certainly as wonderful as anything that Captain Mayne Reid ever put before the public. If a young girl can show such a spirit of absolute fearlessness and self-possession in the midst of the most blood curdling danger, there is no reason why women should be looked upon as the fearful sex. Indeed, the fact that they still dare to marry when three thousand of them have been killed by their husbands in the last year, is a record of courage that we deem worthy of all praise. For how shall man be lifted to his best level unless he marries, and if woman is too much frightened to marry what would then become of man and the race!

It is due Librarian Young of the Congressional Library, Washington, D. C., to emphasize the fact that it was Superintendent Greene who was responsible for the permission to the caterer to serve wine and beer in the restaurant, and who now claims that it was all a misunderstanding. The National W. C. T. U. received a note from Mr. Young in answer to their protest, in which he takes strong ground against anything of the kind, and in reply to the committee who waited upon him in regard to the matter, he said: "I was out of the city when this whole subject was first discussed. My only knowledge of it came from the President, who transmitted to me a statement he had received from the ladies of your organization somewhere about December 20. In reply to both I want to say that I would very much deplore the sale of anything like beer or wine or whisky in this building, and as far as I know, nothing of the sort is sold here now. I would not think for a moment of having anything of that sort in the Congressional Library, for I think the suppression of the liquor traffic is to be the great battle of the next century. I can assure you that no intoxicating liquors are now on sale anywhere about the building." Librarian Young accompanied General Grant on his trip around the world.

Illinois.

THE Young People's Christian Temperance Union of Chicago was organized in September, 1897. We now have about two hundred members.

The first department selected was the Temperance Hospital. Miss Adelaide Jenks, 332 Webster avenue, is proving a most efficient superintendent. At the Hospital bazaar in December, our girls conducted the doll booth. Their earnest solicitations brought dolls from many states and the sales amounted to seventy dollars.

Miss Jennie Williamson, 531 W. Superior street, is giving us excellent work as superintendent of kindergarten department. She is planning in various ways to make our young people better informed as to the value and scope of kindergarten work and secure their aid in establishing kindergartens.

Our superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. Greenbaum, is a converted Hungarian Jewess. She rejoices that God has permitted her to lead many to the altar and help them into the kingdom. She has also been instrumental in securing food, shelter and work for some of the needy who have found Christ at Willard Hall.

Our superintendent of law and order, Mr. E. E. Blake, 186 Michigan street, one of the leading West Side Baptists, is giving careful consideration to all plans and suggestions. He hopes to make the department a power in the movement for the Sunday closing of saloons.

The superintendent of social purity, Miss Ada Jenks, 332 Webster avenue, is perfecting plans for this department. The Florence Crittenton Anchorage has received money and sympathetic help from our union.

Miss Patton, a teacher in the Soper School of Oratory, is planning great things in the medal contest department.

The Temple department, under the supervision of Ida Evans Haines, 502 Colorado Ave., is receiving special attention because of the exigency upon us. A series of Temple rallies in different parts of the city was held before the holidays. Another series will soon be inaugurated. The union has pledged its best efforts to raising $25,000. Over two thousand of the fifty-cent cards have been given out at our meetings, and these are coming in with the money. Some of our members have pledged to raise $100. The success of this department has been made possible by the untiring efforts of our talented president, Miss Eva M. Shontz. Her renditions of "Old Soapy" and "A Singular Life," with her own earnest appeals, have won the hearts of the people. Our monthly rally is held the third Saturday evening in each month in Willard Hall.

At our last meeting Dr. Gray, of the Forward Movement, gave us a most thoughtful, inspiring address on "The Cause and Cure of Slums." Miss Church, of Beverly Hills, related in a very effective manner some incidents of her kindergarten work in the slums. Miss Mattie Guild, of Wheaton, gave us that masterly oration which won the prize in the recent Illinois prohibition oratorical contest.

Miss Johnson, secretary of the Christian Endeavor Union of Chicago, prefaced her beautiful exhibition of Indian club swinging with a stirring appeal for the unfortunates driven to the saloon to find light and warmth and society. Said she: "What is the matter with our churches? Why don't we keep them open day and night and care for these people who come from wretched homes?"

Our young people are stirred, and we hope to help bring the glad day of Christian brotherhood. We propose to concentrate the temperance enthusiasm of the young people of Chicago in this central organization. Our members are now from all parts of the city.

We will hold a conference at Lake Bluff during the Sociological Convocation next July, and hope that hundreds of Chicago young people will take their vacation then and plan with us for thorough, effective temperance work in the city.

Information given and visitors gladly welcomed at 1119, Woman's Temple.

THE edition of the Y Almanac for last year was exhausted before January first, and orders sent at that time could not be filled. This year the edition is larger, but we only have on hand about five hundred copies, so we urge all readers of THE UNION SIGNAL to send at once, and thus help to speed our round-the-world missionary, Clara Parrish, rejoicing on the way.

For sale by Mrs. Frances B. Yarnall, 1011 Park Ave., New York, N. Y. Price 25 cents.

Notes.

AT the Y hour at the county convention of Onondaga county W. C. T. U. the work of Clara Parrish was presented, and in less than five minutes seven dollars was raised. It is a privilege that everyone, interested in temperance work ought to have, to help along the work of this brave and consecrated young woman.

THE readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will remember that the Y banner this year was won by Alabama, and that it was received by Mrs. Booker T. Washington for the Y's at Tuskegee Seminary. We all rejoice that there are two hundred other young women in the school to be added to the report given at the National Convention.

Tasmanian Notes.

AN exceedingly successful exhibition and sale of work has just been concluded in Hobart. It was held in the Temperance Hall and the object was to try and raise the sum of two hundred and fifty pounds, to assist in liquidating the existing debt on that building. A warm supporter of temperance promised to give two hundred and fifty pounds to this object provided the trustees would raise a like sum. Hence the efforts of the promoters have been gratified by the many gifts and large attendance.

The Launceston union will, in all probability, have to remove its comfortable little refreshment booth from the cricket ground, this owing to their being restricted in the sale of temperance drinks. The publican's booth on the grounds holds the sole right to sell, not only intoxicating, but non-intoxicating drinks, such as ginger beer, lemonade, etc., and so practically precludes the temperance booth from selling them, and limits their sales to that of tea, coffee and cocoa. It's the old question of money versus morals, and of course morals must go if the publican's booth is to succeed. The craftiness of the serpent is displayed in this renewed effort to keep young men in close proximity to intoxicating drinks. Much dissatisfaction is expressed at the probable retirement of our women from this field of usefulness, as their efforts have been greatly appreciated. But the exclusive and inclusive license must be maintained, even if the minds and bodies of young men are damned by it.

By the time this reaches you, 1898 will have dawned upon the world. Tender greetings will have passed from hearts to hearts, conveying loving wishes for the new year. Tasmania sends to her fellow-workers in America true, warm, white-ribbon greetings. Though sundered far by broad acres and great tracts of billowy waves, yet our hearts are close to each other. They are knit together in the interminable bonds of the Christ-love, and are pledged together for the overthrow of the accursed drink traffic. As with one voice they say, "I will sing praises unto my God while I have any being," and step bravely forward into a new year of service because, "Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God."

THE white ribbon is gaining ground in Ireland. The Sligo W. C. T. U. successfully opposed six licenses being granted at the recent Brewster sessions. The Dublin W. C. T. U. with the Catholic W. C. T. U. are securing valuable information re the sale of drink to children to lay before the royal commission. The Athy W. C. T. U. is doing capital work with its coffee van. A fine trade in badges is going on in Dublin and the white ribbon is becoming more and more known.

MRS. NICHOLLS, president of Australasia, writes as follows concerning Mrs. Barney: "On Thursday and Friday, 9th and 10th inst., I had the privilege of being present at Mrs. Barney's last meetings in Australia. You will be glad to hear that she seemed well and bright, and was hopefully starting on her journey to Colombo. She gave one of her very happiest addresses at a meeting in the Albany Town Hall on Thursday evening, a meeting which was arranged as a farewell to us both, and on Friday afternoon gave a Bible reading, full of power and pathos, to a little company of members and friends at the house of the local president, Mrs. Falkner. At the close she very eloquently and tenderly commended us all to God in prayer."

News from the Field.

Illinois.

ILLINOIS has been honored with the presence of the National president and her secretaries for a number of weeks. Miss Willard has been fêted by many clubs and societies in Chicago and vicinity and has made her forceful influence felt for great good.

Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, the state president, has been holding revival services in the M. E. church of Rockford. Of course Mrs. Rounds mixed plenty of temperance with the gospel truths she taught. Large audiences filled the house, many were converted. She was urged to remain another week, but was unable to do so owing to several engagements in Philadelphia, after which she goes to Scranton, Pa.

After legislation, enforcement. The cream of scientific temperance instruction is embodied in a good, strong temperance law, and now the unions in cities and towns are looking up county superintendents and teachers to see that the law is enforced. This is a most important work and is taking the time and attention of most unions. Superintendent Lane, of Chicago schools, has declared in favor of the law and its enforcement.

The Y Branch of the Mary Allen West union, at Chicago, is actively at the front. Socials and medal contests are bringing them in money which is being wisely expended for the distribution of temperance literature among Christian Endeavor societies, and for other wise purposes. Fifty working members begin the new year.

Woman's day in Casey and Yorkville was of great benefit to the unions. All the pastors preached in the morning on woman's work, and united in the evening for a temperance service.

Harvey union holds its meetings in the new city hall. Through the courtesy of the city council their room is furnished them free of charge. All the financial calls from state and National have already been responded to by this union, and their first quarter's dues sent to Treasurer Sanborn.

A "due-tea" is an annual feature with the Jerseyville union, giving each member a chance to perform the important du-ty of paying her yearly dues. This year the invitation was written in four verses of pretty good poetry and made a novel invite.

Chicago Y meets regularly in Willard Hall with a good evening program. Dr. W. G. Gray, of the Forward Movement, addressed them at the last meeting.

Chatsworth union held a medal contest in a school district in the country. The superintendent rode thirty-two miles in a carriage to attend it. Proceeds were seven dollars and twenty cents.

At a medal contest held in Willard Hall by a class of young men, the honor was received by Mr. Clyde Sullivan. The receipts were very satisfactory and the entertainment above par.

The state executive will be held in Chicago about the first of March.

Alabama.

THE fourteenth annual convention of the state W. C. T. U. was held in the First Baptist church of New Decatur, January 6 and 7.

The weather was warm and pleasant, but the hearts of our sisters were warmer still, and we were welcomed and entertained with that genial Southern hospitality that not only opens the doors of its houses but its homes as well, and for the time being you are not only a guest but one of the family, coming and going as you please, receiving every attention and comfort, giving nothing in return, not even your best self to your hostess, for convention duties are onerous and there is little time to rest or dress. After it is over, we appreciate the unselfishness of it all and feel thankful.

The state officers were all present, and many of the superintendents. Though the work reported showed no great progress, it was evident that the delegates had all been praying for the success of the convention; it was enthusiastic from start to finish. Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, one of our National officers, was with us during the two days, and gave us great help on all lines. The first evening she addressed a full house on "A Great Privilege, or Echoes from National Convention." It was indeed a great privilege to listen, for owing to the yellow fever scare, Alabama was not represented this year. The following night she gave the Convention address, and so stirred the hearts of the people that they put their hands deep down into their pockets to help the W. C. T. U. work of Alabama. The state debt was lifted, convention expenses raised, and money pledged by the various unions to carry forward the work this coming year.

Birmingham is doing splendid work in the support of Mercy Home. This year ninety-two women and children have found a refuge there. It is the only open door for the poor "unfortunate" in the state. About five thousand dollars has already been raised for a new building, and it is hoped that it will become a Florence Crittenton mission. Bridgeport has concentrated its efforts on the organization and work of the L. T. L., having now 100 members; a grand showing for so small a place. Huntsville has an active union with many earnest, consecrated workers carrying on the different lines of work with system and success. Florence, organized two or three years ago, entertained the district convention last spring, and every one got so interested in the work that they keep right along doing more and more. Montgomery does little as a union, but personally much aggressive work that bears directly on the saloon. Selma is much interested in the department of health and heredity. Prattville gave a new idea in a baby show successfully carried out as means of raising money; it suggested the thought, "that where there's a will there's a way." Of course, New Decatur is all alive for she keeps up her enthusiasm by entertaining conventions, having had district convention last year.

Miss Anna Brown, formerly L. T. L. superintendent of Iowa, now of this state, won all hearts by her vim, sparkle and ready tact, so we gladly trusted our L. T. L. to the guidance of this earnest western sister.

The old officers were all re-elected. Mrs. Martha L. Spencer, president; Mrs. Mary T. Jeffries, corresponding secretary, both of Birmingham. A pleasant feature of the last evening was the presentation of a certificate of life membership to our beloved president, from the different unions of the state, as a token of our appreciation for her long and faithful services (always without pay). It was prettily gotten up, tied with long white ribbons, that silken band that unites all hearts and gives us the unique name of white-ribboners. There was no memorial service this year, save mention of that "grand old man," Neal Dow, dear to all as the Father of Prohibition.

Space is too short to tell of all that was done, but the whole repertoire received attention and an impetus, that God helping us, will crown the coming year with successful effort.

New Hampshire.

IN the death of Mrs. Sarah E. Bickford, president of Carroll county, the executive board of the New Hampshire W. C. T. U. loses an earnest and loved counselor, a woman of quiet manner and gentle speech, but full of good works and loyalty to this organization which was so dear to her heart ever since she joined it in 1885. In the home union at Woltboro, she was a leader in the work of the L. T. L. and did everything in her power to advance the work in every direction. May her mantle fall upon a worthy successor.

Fine work is being done in the state in the departments of literature and hygiene and heredity. Our wideawake monthly, The Granite State Outlook, brings to our notice in its last issue the circular letters of the faithful superintendents of these departments, who have held them long enough to see the good they have accomplished. Claremont reports individual communion cups in many of the churches, and recent introduction of individual drinking cups in the schools. This is the case in many of our towns, thanks to the persistent effort of Dr. Ellen A. Wallace.

The silver tongue of Mrs. Conklin has worked great good for our cause in the eastern part of the state, adding many members to our unions and establishing a Y union in Portsmouth with twenty-six charter members. This is a crying need in our state, the interest and co-operation of the coming woman to take the place of those weary from long service.

The new unions are taking up the work bravely. South Lyndenboro has just formed an L. T. L. and holds public temperance meetings monthly. Mrs. Conklin has put new life into the Meredith union; they have sent literature and comfort bags to the lumbermen and held an enthusiastic mass-meeting temperance Sunday, addressed by all the pastors and prominent citizens. Lisbon has put literature boxes in the railroad stations, and Claremont is just doing the same. Rockingham county held its quarterly conference at Raymond last month. Nearly all the unions responded to the roll call; subjects considered were Purity, ably presented by Mrs. A. B. Jones of Manchester, The Mercy Home, and Our Shut-in Sisters. There is growing interest in two comparatively new departments, that of Mercy, and Work among Railroad Men.

The usual Christmas visitations to the almshouses of the state are reported. This work originated by the W. C. T. U., is ably seconded and sustained by the philanthropic people all through the various counties.

THE Manville union is doing well though they are not doing anything which they consider worth reporting.

The Rock Springs union has been interested in the petition for establishment of Postal Savings Banks. The petition was largely signed in Rock Springs and vicinity.

The Rawlins union has reorganized their Y.

The Evanston union had a successful contest last month, and are preparing for another. They are drilling a choir of children to sing at their contests and public meeting.

The Green River union dressed the Wyoming lady in yellow and white for the Temperance Hospital fair, which was favorably noticed in your columns and which was so much admired and written up by the local papers. This union has raised seventy cents by the five cent assessment plan for the hospital fund; also $1.50 for the Temple fund. They are doing good work for the prisoners, in distributing reading matter and furnishing them with stamps and stationary to write letters to their mothers or wives.

The Y union of Green River has grown from eighteen members to thirty-six since the Convention. Had a mock trial and social and cleared $8.80, and are now preparing an art sale and show for February 22.

The Laramie union has a faithful few. Cottage prayer-meetings have been held once or twice each week since the first of September. The jail has been visited every Sunday afternoon except four. Much good reading matter has been distributed. The penitentiary has been furnished with a course of lectures by some of the ladies of the union, pastors of the churches and professors of the university. The inmates like to see the motherly faces of the women best, but appreciate very highly the kindness of all who have tried to shed a few rays of sunshine into their prison cells. The ministers are going to preach to them now for some months and then another course of lectures is to be arranged for them. One of our daily papers publishes a part of a column for us weekly. This is generally filled mostly with the latest and most telling items of temperance news from THE UNION SIGNAL and The Voice. We have received some very flattering notices of our work in this line from pastors and prominent men, also from some whom we did not expect would read them. We have also had some very encouraging words from judges of our state. In speaking of Laramie as the most orderly city of the state Judge Bramel, of the second judicial district, whose home is in Laramie, said he thought

"Strong Man Irving."

Montgomery E. Irving, who is said to be one of the strongest men in the world, in a recent interview with the Baltimore, Md., News, said, in regard to diet, "Keep away from coffee. It should be taken off the market."

Whenever one talks with athletes nowadays, he finds the same expression in regard to coffee. It weakens the heart, shortens the wind, and unless one is very strong in the digestive apparatus, interferes seriously with that portion of the body.

If it is necessary for a strong man to avoid narcotics and drugs of this character, it would seem especially important for the brain worker or the highly sensitized and delicately organized woman to avoid them as they would any other poison, if they feel the slightest desire to maintain their health and a comfortable poise of the nervous system.

True, many people seem to use coffee without a direct harmful effect, but a little careful inquiry will nearly always develop the fact that coffee users have some disturbance of the body, which they always attribute to some other cause than coffee, but which, by a curious law, is likely to be helped if they can ever be induced to abandon coffee for ten days to a month, and take on Postum Cereal Food Coffee, which instead of narcotizing and destroying the nervous system, furnishes the food elements demanded by nature to rebuild the gray matter in the nerve centres throughout the body.

Postum is widely endorsed by athletic trainers, famous bicycle riders and boxers, as well as thousands of well-known men and women who earn their living by mental occupations.

Postum is the only Cereal Food Coffee yet discovered, with a coffee taste, that is pure and free from low grade coffee or other drugs.

the saloon power was decreasing, and gave as one of the reasons therefor the work of the W. C. T. U. Judge Groesbeck also testifies to our helpfulness in writing to an educational journal.

The Temple cards are in circulation here now and we hope to have them brought in well filled. Hope to tell you something good from each of the remaining unions in my next.

East Washington.

THE readers of THE UNION SIGNAL must not think that Eastern Washington has been doing nothing because there has been no report sent for publication. The unions are too busy preparing their forces for the suffrage campaign to take time to report.

Wenatchee union edited the issue of the Wenatchee Advance of January 22, for the purpose of raising funds to support a reading room.

Willard union of Ellensburg is meeting regularly every week, and holds a parlor meeting each month. Celebrated Madam Willard's birthday by a mothers' meeting. The union has made comfort bags for sailors, fitted them out with comb, needles, pins, thread, thimble, scissors, court plaster, roll of linen, Bible and leaflets to be given to sailors who are starting on a sea voyage. Keeps up a column of W. C. T. U. items in one and part of the time in two local papers.

Goldendale union entertained its friends with a reception at the home of the president, Mrs. Nesbitt. Mrs. Bowers introduced the subject of the pending constitutional amendment, and presented a plan of work for the coming season that was heartily endorsed by the ladies present. Though each one would not promise to follow out all the details, they agreed to take some one line of work and pursue it. All present had been voters when Washington women were citizens, and some had served on juries. Mrs. Ward stated that when one jury was sent out of the court room to decide on their verdict one of the men jurors went to the farthest end of the room, put his feet up on a chair and sulked in silence because he disdained to counsel with women, but that, nevertheless, he had at the last to render a verdict in accordance with one fact of the evidence in the case that the women jurors had noticed but none of the men had seen at all.

The women of this state are ardent suffragists. Goldendale has each week an original article on the suffrage question printed in the local paper.

Anti-Narcotics.

A statement has been going the rounds of the press to the effect that the Chicago board of health examined fourteen brands of cigarets and found them free from all injurious drugs except nicotine. Prof. Cass L. Kennicott, of Chicago, a prominent analytical and consulting chemist, has been given as authority for this statement. I wrote the gentleman, and here is his reply:

"DEAR MADAM:—Yours of January 3, in regard to cigarets, at hand. In reply would state that the interviews credited to me in the daily papers are not authorized, and are, I believe, published to advertise.

"Yours very truly,
"CASS L. KENNICOTT."

I warn all anti-narcotic workers to beware of newspaper statements. Petitions for the Terry Interstate Commerce bill are being sent in very slowly. Earnest work must be given at once or this bill will be defeated. Send to state superintendents, or to my address, for petitions and instruction.

MRS. PAK YE, the wife of the Corean minister to the United States, is desirous of embracing Christianity and has been made the subject of prayer of the District of Columbia W. C. T. U

MRS. EVA MUNSON SMITH of Springfield, Ill., has held several silver medal contests in the regular series, L. T. L., Gold and Grand Gold contests, and will hold a diamond contest at an early date.

THE Muskogee, I. T., union observed Madam Willard's birthday by holding a mothers' meeting. Selections were read from "Glimpses of Fifty Years," interspersed with some of Madam Willard's favorite songs.

ONE of the local unions of Detroit, Mich., received a letter from the mayor thanking the union for its interest in the care of good government, and for keeping him posted on affairs he otherwise might not understand.

MISS MARIE C. BREHM is greeted with crowded houses in her work in Indiana. She is awakening the voters, and many have requested that she be asked to return. Her work at Martinsville was especially worthy of note.

THE union at South Whitley, Ind., has put on new life through the faithful efforts of Mrs. R. J. Trego, who was with them seven consecutive nights. Thirty-eight members was the fruitage from the week's sowing.

A UNION has been organized at Coalgate, I. T., by Miss Mulnix, with thirty members, making this the largest union in the Territory. The town is a large mining camp and there is scope for a great work to be done by this valiant young union.

ALAMEDA county, Cal., W. C. T. U. has commenced a "bill posting crusade," with the object of doing away with immodest posters. Oil City union, Pennsylvania, was eminently successful in its crusade, the immoral lithographs being torn down or covered over.

MRS. MARION B. BAXTER held five meetings in Princeton, Ill., en route to Nebraska and the work was greatly advanced thereby, twenty-three members being added. She plans to spend the summer west, principally in Nebraska, the Dakotas and Colorado.

THE Hudson, So. Dak., W. C. T. U. has just quilted and sent to the National Temperance Hospital in Chicago, a picture-autograph quilt. The blocks were made by the Loyal Temperance Legion of Hudson, who realized about forty dollars from the autograph feature of the quilt. It was the plan of Mrs. Cecelia Winette, for many years the efficient state superintendent of L. T. L. work in South Dakota, and leader of the Hudson Legioners.

THE Albany county, New York, W. C. T. U. convention, held at one of its sessions a mock trial. The scene was in the year 2090, and the trial was under the direction of the county superintendent of legislative work. It was very amusing. The bills considered were: Married woman's damage bill, anti-flirtation bill, fishery bill, the indiscriminate slaughter of birds, and the male suffrage bill. The last was passed and sent to the governor, a woman, who vetoed it.

THE Central W. C. T. U. of Houston, Texas, has written a spirited letter to Hon. T. H. Ball, member of Congress from that state, asking him to vote for the passage of the bill, which provides that no collector of internal revenue shall issue a tax receipt to liquor dealers unless such dealer shall, at the time of making his application, register with the collector a license, or permit, issued in accordance with the laws of the state or territory in which the business is to be carried on. Such a law would free Uncle Sam from the imputation of being a law-breaker, and not without ground, and would greatly aid no-license districts in keeping out blind pigs. White-ribboners should not forget to urge this bill.

PEACE Sunday, the third Sabbath of December, was very successfully observed. Pastors of the various denominations very cheerfully complied with the requests of the W. C. T. U. peace superintendents and either prepared peace sermons for the day or alluded to the cause in their usual discourse. The new programs issued by the National W. C. T. U. peace department were widely used. Many unions had special services in honor of the day, and the general secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. were very willing to have the subject of peace made prominent at their meetings on December 19. The press letter sent by Mrs. H. J. Bailey, the National peace superintendent, resulted in much good. There were frequent calls for literature and many personal letters bespeaking interest in the cause were received.

Are you sure that you're using the right thing for washing? If the work is slow and hard, and you have to depend upon rubbing, you should get something else. And even if you have something that saves work, it may be bad for the clothes. You may be ruining them. Pearline gives the easiest, quickest, most economical washing, of anything that's safe to use. The more you investigate, and inquire and compare, the surer you'll be that Pearline is the only right thing to wash with.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 540

MISS M. L. ORR, missionary of department work among foreigners at port of New York, received the day after Christmas a large sugar barrel, also a large box from the primary class of Emery M. E. church of Jersey City, the first containing clothes, the second, candies, nuts, oranges, cakes, and almost every conceivable toy. A lady missionary assisted her in taking them to the sick immigrant children at Long Island city hospital. The children were delighted. Some little girls were too sick to have candy, but they hugged their dollies and were satisfied. Mrs. Isabella Story, of Jersey City, state superintendent of work among foreigners, was the good angel that inspired these gifts.

MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, the president of the Maine W. C. T. U., and her assistants have copied over 1,000 Maine names from the books of the collector of internal revenue at Portsmouth, as those of people who have paid special United States tax receipts, 320 of the number being residents of Portland. The names of the Portland license holders have been handed to Mayor Randall with the request that he use the evidence thus secured as a clue to lawbreakers in his jurisdiction, and it is reported that if this does not work the sheriff will be supplied with the list and—in case even this does not prove satisfactory—the governor will be called on for aid. In other parts of the state the same method of procedure will be adopted and the women expect to accomplish great things.

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions secured by Miss Willard or offered by those who are especially interested in the effort being put forward by our National president to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow's address is Portland, Me. She is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, and the one who was his home-maker in all his later years, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it is by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and the request of Miss Willard that she has accepted the foregoing trust.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

From the presidents of several of the states winning banners at Buffalo, comes a request for the bodily presence of said banners. It will, doubtless, be remembered that several were presented in pantomime as "the victors" at St. Louis had failed to bring the "spoils" to the next gathering of the clans. It is impossible for me at this writing to tell who are the delinquents, but I am sure that a word to the wise will be more than sufficient, and that the hard-won trophies will be immediately forwarded to those to whom they rightfully belong.

I trust the local unions are falling in line with the temperance hosts throughout the country, and sending thousands of petitions to Congress for the Gallinger bill. Full particulars, both as to the nature of the bill and the method of petitioning, have several times appeared in the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL. It is only necessary to apply the knowledge we already possess to genuine action and the results will soon be felt. "A long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together," will surely tell in this most important issue.

A suggestive program for February 22 has just come into my hands. It is by the superintendent of Christian citizenship for the Colorado W. C. T. U., Mrs. M. E. Wrigley. It properly belongs to the Local Union column, but as it has arrived too late for insertion there in the next issue, and as I am anxious to have it reach the unions as soon as possible, I venture to insert it here, trusting that enough of you may read the Corresponding Secretary's Notes to insure for the program a wide hearing.

Benediction.

You will be glad, I am sure, to know that I am rapidly gaining strength in this charmed life, and that I shall very shortly be at my post to fall out, I trust and believe, no more by the way. If I had known and observed some of the laws of life I am now learning, I am sure I should not have fallen so easily a victim to la grippe. We as temperance workers need a new crusade along the lines of temperance in work, and of health as a vital factor in Christianity. Of these facts I am more than ever assured.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Treasurer's Corner.

It is seldom that January is such a busy month as we have had at Headquarters this year. The orders for minutes, addresses and leaflets always add to our work about this time. Then the sending out of 20,000 circulars with reference to financial plans keeps many hands occupied. The Corresponding Secretary has been out of the office in the grip of la grippe for the past three weeks, and while we miss her cheery presence, we are rejoiced to hear that she is better and will soon be able to resume her accustomed duties. We have tried to relieve her of some of her burdensome correspondence, and if you have received replies not so long nor so good as you expected, charge it to influenza and not to us. Our financial plan has been booming from an unusual amount of attention given it by the daily papers. Letters by the score from the Atlantic to the Pacific, have poured in upon us from dealers and others asking what brand of soap we were using. We are hoping for great help from this source. One lady wrote me, "I shall do all I can, but regret that such a dignified body as the National must resort to such means to raise money for their work." I replied that to my mind a straight, clean, business deal with a reputable temperance firm, where we gave value for value, was more dignified than means often resorted to, such as grab-bags, oysterless soup, fairs where prices were anything but fair, late suppers that no one needs, etc. It is a matter of regret to a treasurer always that she can not have a treasury so full all the time that she can pay legitimate bills without anxiety and without the effort of devising ways and means for replenishing the same. But the universal experience of treasurers of missionary societies, philanthropic associations, and in fact churches, is that "external vigilance" is the price a treasurer must pay for the ability to meet financial demands, and if a woman is at all sensitive she now and then has the conviction that she will be judged as being mercenary, parsimonious and caring only for money. This is not pleasant, but it is preferable to being charged with indifference, indolence or carelessness in looking after the financial interests placed in her hands. So we go on the best we know, rustling for the wherewithal to pay rent, office supplies, appropriations, salaries, etc. That is what a treasurer is for. It is fitting that some constitutions read, "It is the duty of the treasurer to hold all moneys, paying them out upon order of president and secretary, and to devise ways and means to replenish the treasury." Some local treasurers overlook this requirement.

We are delighted with the responses that are coming in to our official appeal for $2 donations from local unions. New York is ahead as to numbers sent in, Minnesota comes next, with Illinois, Virginia, New Jersey, Kentucky, Arkansas and Indiana following closely. These responses are especially welcome at this time. Wrappers will give relief later on.

District of Columbia, Michigan and Texas have sent in dues since last report. We may not be able to complete superintendents' appropriations before the first week in February, but hope to make arrangements by that time to send each their quarterly installment. Trust all will be patient, it will come in good time.

It has always been Miss Willard's expressed desire that the Hospital should be a distinctly Christian institution and that all employés should participate in the religious services. This wish is now in a gratifying degree realized and throughout the Hospital there prevails an atmosphere of Christian courtesy and thoughtfulness, tending to greatly increase the value of our work. An instance of the interest taken by the employés in the welfare of the institution came to the notice of the Board lately. After it had been decided to establish a free dispensary the question arose as to where to find the needed space. There is in the basement a pleasant room which has always been at the disposal of the cook, the second girl and the laundress as their sitting-room. With remarkable unselfishness and in the most pleasant and graceful manner possible they consented to have this room converted into a consultation room. Each department is competently managed, and all work together with admirable harmony.

In regard to the free dispensary mentioned above, we would like to add that we aim in that way to treat worthy cases of limited means. We hope thus to reach a large class who most need non-alcoholic treatment.

We are from time to time encouraged by hearing that the five-cent pledges are being collected but as yet we have received very few nickels. We do hope that the unions will appreciate our need, and that they will not hesitate longer than necessary in doing their share to relieve it.

The graduating exercises of the National Temperance Hospital will be held on the evening of February 18, in Willard Hall. We are preparing an entertaining program for the occasion, to consist of short addresses by prominent physicians, recitations and music. The graduating class consists of five young ladies who have successfully completed their two years' course. Printed invitations will be furnished members of the class to send to their friends, but all friends of the Hospital and those who are interested in temperance work (and that should include every one), are most cordially welcome.

At last reports the Hospital had twenty-one patients, and the average for the winter has been about seventeen, thus showing an increase of interest among physicians. One physician of the homeopathic staff said recently, "I get the best service at the Temperance Hospital for the money of anywhere in the city." This means much, as his practice is extensive and is of great service in encouraging those working so hard to make our Hospital all the women of the white ribbon aim to have it. Sisters, let us work and pray that this year will bring better results in every department of our W. C. T. U. work than ever before. The Lord knows how to use a willing, faithful worker, and we may all become such in the little corner He has assigned to our particular keeping.

Yours for service,

(MRS.) MARGARET INGLEHART.

Where Our Speakers Are.

REV. FRANCES E. TOWNSLEY'S address is Vassar, Mich. She is preaching for the Baptist church there, and the length of her stay is indefinite.

MRS. ADDIE NORTHAM FIELDS is at work in Missouri. She has organized two new societies, one at Doniphan, the other at Caruthersville, and has vitalized several dying unions.

MAUDE L. GREENE, our National chalk-talker and organizer, with her associate, Hattie Lee Henderson, National organizer, are in Texas filling engagements in the eastern and central part of the state. All communications should be addressed to them at Dallas, Texas.

MRS. U. F. BRUUN, the Norwegian associate in the department of work among foreign speaking people, begins a tour next week through Wisconsin. She will give the month of April to Minnesota and plans to spend June in Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas, working westward with an eye on the Los Angeles Convention in the fall.

Why She Smiles Sweetly.

Sparkling eyes, quick beating heart, and the rosy blush of pleasure on the cheeks, makes the strong man happy when he meets his lady love. That's the kind of a man whose very touch thrills because it is full of energy, vigorous nerve power and vitality. Tobacco makes strong men impotent, weak and skinny. No-To-Bac sold by Druggists everywhere. Guaranteed to cure. Book, titled, "Don't Tobacco Spit or Smoke Your Life Away," free. Ad. Sterling Remedy Co., New York or Chicago.

The article will be fully illustrated with photographs and drawings from life.

Mr. Jacob A. Riis, who wrote "How the Other Half Lives," and other studies of tenement-house life, contributes to the February CENTURY an article on "Heroes Who Fight Fire." Healthful, Nutritious, the Best in the World.

The claim that fine flour does not make such healthful or nutritious bread as some other kinds is not new. That Graham flour is preferable for some people is no doubt true; but with others it proves irritating to the stomach. It is held that the Franklin Mills Flour, a fine flour of the entire wheat, is better than either, because it is more nutritious than fine white flour, and is not irritating to weak stomachs, like Graham. The Franklin Mills Flour is produced from the entire wheat kernel, except the woody, innutritious, indigestible outer skin or husk, which is not food. It is unlike white flour, because that is robbed of the gluten of the wheat, in order to make a white bread. There is no principle of physiology which bases qualities of food upon its whiteness. Flour deprived of the gluten of the wheat, which contains phosphates and nutritive salts, has lost the greater part of its blood making materials. Bread made from the Franklin Mills Flour, a fine flour of the entire wheat is a beautiful light golden brown. It takes its color from the elements of the wheat from which it is made. This flour is manufactured by the Franklin Mills Company, Lockport, N. Y., and sold by grocers in barrels or fractions of a barrel.

WHAT IS SAID OF IT:

Mrs. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.:
"Full of information helpful to white-ribboners, or to any who are interested in the welfare of the world."

Rev. F. E. CLARKE, D. D., Endeavor President:
"Exceedingly practical, and gives suggestions which may be carried out easily by those interested in Christian citizenship."

JAMES L. HUGHES, Esq., Inspector of Schools, Toronto:
"A very stimulating exposition of the social forces of modern life. It will make a very admirable basis for study by all practical reform clubs, and, in my opinion, would be an excellent book to be studied by advanced Sunday-school classes or by Christian Endeavor and Epworth League Societies. It should aid in making the true evolution of the race a practical element in all Christian work."

Prof. GEORGE D. HERRON, D. D., Iowa College:
"Of special value in helping my students to get hold of the definite reforms that are being undertaken."

Prof. J. R. COMMONS, Syracuse University:
"One of the best and most suggestive guides to the study of sociology—always recommend it together with same author's 'Practical Christian Sociology,' to ministers and Christian workers, who inquire for help in the sociological phases of Christianity."

QUO VADIS

COMPLETE AND UNABRIDGED

—BY—

HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ

Translated by

DR. S. A. BINION
Author of Ancient Egypt

—AND—

S. MALEVSKY

With Illustrations by

M. DE LIPMAN

QUO VADIS is the grandest historical romance of the century, depicting life in Rome, in the time of Nero. In a description, never before equalled in literature, we witness the Christians in their trials and pitiless sufferings in the Coliseum; see the gladiatorial combats; and observe the universal hollowness and selfishness pervading society, and the iniquities and rottenness of the Empire, foreshadowing its sure and certain downfall.

The ablest critics pronounce this translation as being characterized with great accuracy and a marked penetration into the spirit of the Polish author. The price brings it within the reach of all readers.

The handsome, artistic half-tone, and photogravure illustrations and large readable type, add greatly to the pleasure, instruction, and entertainment of the reader.

BIBLE READING FOR FEBRUARY, "Christian Citizenship," by Mrs. C. H. Markham. The subject is treated under six heads, viz., (1) God's favor necessary to the power and perpetuity of any nation. (2) Good rulers necessary to good government. (3) Duties of rulers to the people. (4) Duties of the people to the rulers. (5) Duties to one another. (6) Duties to ourselves. This reading has been given with good results at Sunday evening services and at W. C. T. U. conventions. It is a live topic and one that is especially timely. Local unions can use it effectively in connection with their "red-letter day" exercises on Washington's birthday.

Publisher's Notes.

The Young Crusader will henceforth be the organ of both the Senior and Junior divisions of the Loyal Temperance Legion. In its pages will be found Senior reports from the various state Legions, helpful hints in regard to Junior work, short stories, poems and articles of general interest for youthful and childish readers. In the February number Edward Everett Hale, Robert Burdette, Ex-Senator Blair, Samuel Dickie and Edward Bok will tell "How a boy can best serve his country." The patriotic sentiments expressed by these distinguished men, make this number alone worth the price of a year's subscription, and the boy who reads their words will be a better patriot. This patriotic number should be distributed in every Legion and Sunday-school. Send in your orders early. Price 25 cents per year. In clubs of ten or more, 20 cents. In clubsof fifty to one address, 12 cents.

The Young Crusader is improving all the time. I am trying to arouse our companies to work for it.

Genuine Self-Denial.

A dear Texas white-ribboner writes: "I had the one dollar last month and wanted to give it to you before the first of January, but a cold, wet 'norther' had caused my woodpile to melt away so fast, I was obliged to take the SIGNAL dollar and renew that, in order that my aged mother need not feel the cold too keenly. Now comes a letter from my daughter inclosing a new crisp bill, which I at once decided was for you, and hasten to send it on before a cold blast or the 'wolf at the door' claims it. Need I say THE UNION SIGNAL is the joy of my lonely existence in Texas? It comes like a welcome friend each week. Between the lines and back of its carefully prepared pages I see the hope, the courage, the faith that gives life to our grand sisterhood, that keeps our hearts fired with lofty endeavor and helps our lagging efforts to appear worth while."

Everybody ought to wear the beautiful Willard badge. (Button shape, with pin attached) for sale at 10 cents each, $1 a dozen or $5 a hundred. Beautiful tinted buttons 25 cents each. Order them by the hundred for your state and county conventions. Send orders to Mrs. Abbie Frankel, 4119 Westminster Place, St. Louis, Mo.

A correspondent writes: "I have been hoping, waiting and trusting that the way might open to me not only to pay my arrears, but that I might also again subscribe for the dear old UNION SIGNAL. How can I ever do without it after being a constant reader and subscriber for twelve or thirteen years? I wish to tell you how rejoiced I am to see so much of what our women are doing in other prominent papers."

We wish again to call attention to the frequent loss of money in the mails, and as many complaints are reaching our office, we urgently request our patrons to forward to us checks or postoffice orders in settlement of all accounts.

From Our Correspondents.

"On account of sickness, I have not been able to write before, but I do miss the dear UNION SIGNAL so much. I thought I would try and find out if you could send it until next spring, and I will try and pay up this harvest, if possible. It seems as though I have lost a friend, as I have had it since 1889."

"Our paper was sent to me by a friend, and it is becoming a necessity, so that both my wife and I can not well do without it. It is very helpful to me as a source of illustration, to say nothing of its value in keeping in touch with the great work it represents in several lines."

"The new dress of our dear UNION SIGNAL is so becoming, the print so clear and legible, in fact, the whole make-up so improved and attractive, I long to express my appreciation of it," writes one of our correspondents.

The opinion of a reader of THE UNION SIGNAL: "Some of the numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL are alone worth the price of a whole year's subscription, especially the issue of December 9."

"I am delighted with new dress of our paper. The type is just fine and I had been wishing for some time that it could be changed. If our women only knew what they missed in not taking THE UNION SIGNAL, I am sure you would receive many new subscribers."

"Thoughts for Mothers."

"I have read your book with a great deal of interest and profit. It is very beautiful in its expressions, very tender in its thoughts and very faithful in its warnings. If every mother could read it, absorb its spirit and apply its principles to the training of her children, the world would soon be redeemed."

GILBERT FREDERICK,
Pastor Covenant Baptist Church.
Price, 25 cents postpaid.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR FEBRUARY, "Mothers' Meetings and Their Requirements," by Mrs. Jessie Brown Hilton, state superintendent of mothers' meetings for Illinois. Mrs. Hilton has had wide experience in this line of work and is devoting her entire time to it. This Reading is designed to suggest to local unions a way to begin and a way to carry on this very necessary branch of W. C. T. U. effort. It is practical instruction all the way through, and every local society should read and carefully consider its wise suggestions. It is the next best thing to having Mrs. Hilton present in person.

We have received an inquiry as to the best method of sending money to England for the World's Minutes, and in view of the fact that recently large numbers of letters containing money have been stolen from the mails, we would suggest the advisability of sending an international postoffice order for that amount.

Great men differ on many important subjects; but distinguished scholars all agree that the

NEW FUNK & WAGNALLS
Standard Dictionary

is incomparably superior to all other dictionaries of the English language. For example, we give the views of two of America's most celebrated public men:

HON. E. J. PHELPS,
President Cleveland's most trusted diplomatic representative.

"THE work is extremely well done throughout. I have no doubt that for general and practical purposes it is the best American dictionary now available."

"I AM confident that the published statements of Funk & Wagnalls Company, respecting the value of the Standard Dictionary, are not exaggerated."

CHARLES A. DANA,
President Cleveland's most aggressive journalistic antagonist.

SCHOLARSHIP HAS NO POLITICS!

It would be useless, in the limited space at our disposal, to attempt to put before our readers the many hundreds of commendations of the STANDARD DICTIONARY that came spontaneously from all sources, upon its first appearance. To those who wish to inform themselves fully as to the merits of this great work, we will cheerfully send printed matter containing full description. The following are characteristic expressions from competent authorities:

Harvard University: PROF. N. S. SHALER: "The Standard Dictionary will remain an enduring monument to the labor of its editors. I believe that it will come into general use in this community."

Harvard University: PROF. A. PRESTON PEABODY: "Will prove of invaluable service, and will last while the English language remains essentially unchanged."

University of Michigan (Ann Arbor): PROF. THOMAS M. COOLEY: "It justifies its name—Standard. . . . It is everything that could be desired."

Oxford University (England): F. MAX MÜLLER: "It is a rich mine of information, and shows how much can be achieved by co-operation if under careful supervision."

A. Conan Doyle, the eminent English Novelist, London: "It has become quite a joke with us that we can not trip up this dictionary. We have several times been sure that we would, but have always failed."

Oxford University (England): PROF. A. H. SAYCE, the eminent Philologist: "The Standard Dictionary is truly magnificent, and worthy of the great continent which has produced it. It is more than complete. . . . It is certain to supersede all other existing dictionaries of the English language."

Henry M. Stanley, the African Explorer: "The Standard Dictionary comes nearer to my idea of a first-class dictionary than any of the kind I have seen."

The New York Herald: "We are free to pronounce it the most complete and most satisfactory dictionary yet printed. . . ."

Johns Hopkins University: PROF. WILLIAM HAND BROWNE: "In accuracy, clearness, and fulness it surpasses all similar works."

Sir Edwin Arnold: "A noble piece of work, destined to be most useful. . . . Everywhere copious, erudite, and reliable."

The Irish Times, Dublin: "It is a monument of American learning and industry. . . . From the publication of the Standard Dictionary, America may date a new period of the country's history."

Brown University: PRES. E. BENJAMIN ANDREWS: "I believe that this Dictionary essentially fulfils the high ideal of its projectors. It is an out-and-out new product, and not, like our old dictionaries, the result of patching and amendment, little by little the different pieces often added by many, many minds."

Yale University: T. R. LOUNSBURY, Professor of English: ". . . The work deserves the fullest success, and I doubt not will meet with it."

Gen. James Grant Wilson: "It should, and it would seem will, become what its title indicates, THE STANDARD. I deem it the best English Dictionary published."

Edward Everett Hale, D.D.: "It is the blessing of our breakfast table. I have been surprised at the fulness and accuracy which show themselves to anybody who uses it constantly."

REMEMBER that these Commendations were written after a comparison of the STANDARD with all other Dictionaries now in existence. The full number of words and terms in these dictionaries for the entire alphabet is as follows: Stormonth, 50,000; Worcester, 105,000; Webster (International) 125,000; Century (six volumes complete), 225,000; Standard, over 300,000. In so important a field as the spelling, pronunciation, and definition of the words that make up our vocabulary, it is not worth while to have in your library, or on your study table, a book of reference that is not up to date and authoritative. It is most desirable to be able to consult an unquestioned authority; and such is the STANDARD DICTIONARY. Sent, carriage prepaid, to any address in the United States on receipt of price, $12.00; or $12.75 with Patent Thumb Index.

RED-LETTER DAY.

FEBRUARY 22—Washington's Birthday.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports.—George Washington.

Notes and Comments.

AN international congress of press women will convene in Washington, February 18 and 19, under the auspices of the Woman's National Press Association. The W. C. T. U. and THE UNION SIGNAL will be represented in that body by Mrs. Minnie B. Horning, the energetic and efficient superintendent of our national press department.

AT the convention of the World's Student Christian Federation held in this country last July, the officers of the general committee were authorized to fix the date and to issue a call for a special day of prayer for students. In accordance with this action they recommend that Sunday, February 13, be thus set apart. In urging such observance the committee calls attention to the fact that this is the first time that Christian students of all continents have been called to unite in prayer for a great object; that the world has not yet begun to realize the marvelous possibilities of united prayer, and asks, what may we not expect from this practical and spiritual union of Christian students of all nations and races for the purpose of wielding the unseen yet irresistible forces of the Prayer Kingdom? Truly it is a significant movement and one worthy the closing years of the nineteenth century.

THE report of the grand jury of Cook county, Illinois, given on page 2, is worthy of careful reading. The jurors do not hesitate to attribute 75 per cent of the crime of the county to the drink traffic, and to place the responsibility of "pernicious saloon influence" upon the "officials." We rejoice in the fearless utterances of the January grand jury, but would like to ask who are to blame for corrupt officials?

DR. MARY WOOD-ALLEN, of Ann Arbor, Mich., for some years superintendent of the purity work in the National W. C. T. U., whose devoted loyalty to principle combined with Christian suavity and charity have not been overlooked by white-ribboners in the present controvery, has been chosen to succeed Mrs. Josephine Butler as superintendent of the department for the promotion of social purity in the international organization. Her letter of acceptance will be given in our next issue.

THE thirtieth annual convention of the National American Woman Suffrage Association to be held in Washington, D. C., February 14 to 19, will be a jubilee celebration. It is the fiftieth anniversary of the first "woman's rights" convention ever held. A general call has been sent out inviting citizens of the United States and friends from other countries to unite in celebrating the semi-centennial of the birth of this great reform. The program has been arranged with a view to demonstrating the advance of popular thought regarding the status of woman—in education, in business, in church and in state, and leading women inside and outside the suffrage organization will present their special lines of work. It will be a notable gathering.

NO one knows better than white-ribboners the good which can be accomplished by keeping up a persistent agitation. For instance, an encouraging indication of the spread of the "white-life-for-two" idea is the comment of a Chicago daily newspaper (and metropolitan newspapers are not noted for the promulgation of moral ideas) upon the confession of the Rev. C. O. Brown, who has gained much unenviable notoriety as a bone of contention among the Congregational churches of San Francisco and Chicago. "Mr. Brown," it says editorially, "will receive sympathy and forgiveness. There are a thousand chances to one that the woman will receive neither. Public confession of her sin would be no help. To every thinking person the incident must bring home with telling force a conviction of the injustice of a system which, of two equally guilty, chooses one to forgive and the other to pursue with shame and reproach for all time."

JUST as we were going to press Miss Willard telegraphed the following important communication. We believe that this letter of Lady Henry Somerset to Lord George Hamilton will rejoice the hearts of white-ribboners in all lands:

EASTNOR CASTLE, LEDBURY, ENG.

DEAR LORD GEORGE HAMILTON:—Your lordship invited me two months ago to give you my view of the dispatch that had been addressed to the government of India on the health of the army, and in a letter in which I did so I ventured to suggest some methods, moral and disciplinary, which seemed to me the only ones likely to succeed, because they had at least the merit of being logical.* I was led to do so by two considerations. First, the dispatch in question seemed to imply that the government would give encouragement to any form of elevating agency, and so emphasize the altered spirit in which the subject was approached, and that such suggested supervision would only affect an incorrigible minimum; and second, that the system I had in mind would be so drastic and penal in its nature as to make state interference odious and finally impossible.

That was ten months ago, and in that time nothing has been done of which the public has heard to strengthen the forces that make for moral improvement. What has been done—namely, the repeal of the Indian acts of 1895, which prohibited inspection—has been in a direction exactly opposite. It seems to have been the object of the government to obtain the maximum of impunity with the minimum of protest from those who desire to see the state shape its actions according to Christian views of ethics.

I need not tell your lordship I am not writing to say how strongly I am still opposed to the course which the government has taken, but I find that my letter to your lordship of last year has been taken by many to mean that I am on the side of the accepted view of state regulation, and I am from time to time quoted as a sympathizer with such views.

I am therefore writing to withdraw any proposals made in that letter, for the reason that the events of the past year have convinced me of the inadvisability and extreme danger of the system that in April last I thought might be instituted. The absence of any serious effort by the government to bring about a higher standard in the army is a final proof to me that as long as regulation of any kind can be resorted to as a remedy it will always be regarded as the one and only panacea. My view was that it would be instituted as an odious, but possibly effective auxiliary to moral efforts. I find it will always be accepted as a convenient substitute.

I take the liberty of addressing this explicit withdrawal of an indorsement, of whatever form, of the principle of regulation, because it was in a letter to your lordship that I originally incurred the responsibility. I trust, therefore, to your lordship's indulgence to forgive me troubling you further with the matter.

I remain, my lord,
Yours very truly,
ISABEL SOMERSET.

*This refers to the position taken by Lady Henry Somerset that if regulations were introduced, there should be no discrimination in the examination of the sexes.

"Pernicious Influence of Saloons."

How it is Viewed by the Grand Jury From a Moral and Financial Standpoint.

THE grand jury of Cook country, Ill., for January, which has just closed an exhaustive inquiry, makes a report of its work to Judge Waterman on which it comments as follows:

"We call attention to the growing pernicious influence of saloons. Repeatedly witnesses before us have testified to the fact that in saloons, which are the resort of thieves, hold-up men and dissolute women, robberies and burglaries are planned, criminals with well known records issuing from these vile dens to waylay men, women and children. In many cases, saloonkeepers and saloon employés serve as receivers of stolen property. In no less than six cases before this jury it was shown that murders were committed, either in saloons or as the result of saloon influence. The police, when striving to detect criminals, at once visit the saloons, proving that these officers are aware of the character of the men who habitually fill them. The fact that, in the opinion of competent men, whose duties call them to the consideration of crime in Cook county, 75 per cent of the criminal offenses committed within the county are traceable directly or indirectly to the saloon, and the further fact that the greater portion of the expense for the administration of justice and the regulation and punishment of crime is caused by the evils of drink, are ample evidence that there should be immediate and stringent measures adopted for the suppression of this frighful evil, the influences of open saloons, which in far too many instances are allowed to carry on their nefarious traffic in defiance of police regulations, city ordinances and state laws. The regulation, not to say the obliteration, of the saloons, would cause an enormous saving in county expense and the lessening of public taxes."

Y., has decided to have the portraits of four women carved among the heads of distinguished personages ornamenting the caps of the columns of the grand stairway of the state capitol. These women are "Captain" Molly Pitcher, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Clara Barton and Susan B. Anthony. In connection with this fact the editor of the Northern Christian Advocate says: "We have no fault to find with his selections so far as they go; but it seems to us that he might appropriately have found place for the portrait of Miss Frances E. Willard, who has done at least as much for humanity as either Miss Anthony or Miss Barton, is regarded by millions as being the foremost American woman now living, and is a native of the Empire state."

Temperance.

HON. JOHN D. LONG, secretary of the navy, has been unanimously re-elected president of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society.

ONE of the most ingenious of recent inventions is a device known as the arithmachine, which has just been patented by Henry Goldman, of Chicago. By its wonderful mechanism it adds any desired number of columns simultaneously, substracts one or more items, and multiplies and divides accurately, or goes through manipulations of figures involving all of these and registers the final result. It can be readily adjusted to record computations in dollars and cents, feet and inches, pounds, shilling and pence, with fractions of any denomination.

The Winter Trees.

BY ELTWEED POMEROY.

AGAINST the faint sunrise,
Athwart the sunset skies,
The winter trees uplift their clear-cut tracery.
Amid the whirl of flakes,
When snow its wild dance takes,
Each branch shows dark in winter's barren livery.

For now bereft of dress,
Fresh leaves which summer bless,
The trees stand out in native strength peculiar.
Not drooping, lush and green,
With wavy, summer sheen,
But plume erect, reticulate and angular.

Like web of fairy lace
Across the blue sky's face,
Or unknown screed in runic rhyme unreadable;
Like strands of tangled wire,
Or flames of forked fire
From earth forced up and frozen dark, immovable.

Though icy storms may beat
With wind and rain and sleet,
Their lines still upward lift the eye in quenchless hope.
Strong hands outstretched in prayer,
Worn gaunt from long despair,
Yet see! Each branchlet points to heaven's blue copse.

Love's Little Sister.

BY FRANCES BENNETT CALLAWAY.

EARLY in the morning there descended to earth what appeared to be a rosy cloud. It was Love leading her little sister, Joy.

"Where shall I go?" questioned Joy as they parted.

"To those who have not known you," returned Love.

Fluttering down the first road Joy came to a countryman flinging seed in the brown furrows of a rough and stony field. His face, burned with sun and wind and seamed with wrinkles, looked sullen and unhappy. He was thinking of how long he must toil before the seed would grow and ripen and how little it would bring him in return. His life looked to him toilsome and miserable in the chill, gray dawn.

Joy whispered a word in his breast, and looking up, the poor man saw the heavens shining with wings of red morning light, stretching from the east even into the far west. It was a glorious sight, and as he looked the man's thoughts became shining.

"It's good to be always out of doors in sight of God's handwriting. Yes, I'm rich—I'm happy. What a fool never to think of it before!"

Joy next entered a house where an overworked and fretful mother was preparing breakfast for her children. Everything went wrong; the children were provoking; the mother was cross.

"How can I live through another day?" the mother was saying, with harsh discontent, when a stir of soft air and flush of light entered the room. The youngest child, the first to see the radiant vision, clapped her hands for glee; the other children dimpled with pleased surprise and the mother turned in time to catch the flutter of Joy's wings.

"Joy," she cried, holding the heavenly visitor fast, "Love has sent you. Why did we not think of Love before?"

In a moment every hard burden slipped from the mother's shoulders and the room was filled with mirth and sunshine.

Going her way, Joy next came to a business man shut in a dingy office, reckoning over his accounts with knitted brows. It seemed to him as if he were nothing but a machine counting up figures all day long, and the sum of it all was nothing—nothing but vanity and vexation of spirit. The tired man leaned back wearily and sighed. His life was to him as hard as the stone wall outside his window. He could not remember when he had had a day's happiness.

"Is it not happiness," Joy whispered softly, "to be such a power for good as you can be to-day and to-morrow and every day?"

For awhile the man sat with his face hid in his clasped hands.

"If money means bread for the hungry, and shelter for the homeless, and care for the sick, and a helping hand for the unfortunate, if it means that, the figures may count up to happiness. The Lord knows."

With a strange sensation of new life through his whole being, as when the sap begins to stir through an oak tree in the spring, the man went to his work.

Once as Joy traveled on she came to a little child crying by the roadside, and the child ran after her a long way but could never overtake her until Joy turned smiling and caught him up in her arms. Tenderly she dried the child's tears and kissed him and told him sweet stories along the way of how God made the sun to shine, the birds to sing and the perfumed blossoms to spread their soft colors for the gladness of little children. When she put him down at last on his own doorstep, she filled his lap with flower-uds and left him murmuring with delight, "God made these buds for me."

Late in the afternoon, Joy flitting through a grove of trees came upon two friends sitting upon a shaded bench with their backs turned toward each other—the very picture of misery and despair. Full of bitterness, their thoughts dwelt upon vexations and wrongs, and cruel, stinging words which could never be unsaid. Joy paused a moment wondering, and then put her arms around them.

"Foolish children!" she whispered, "this golden moment holds the surety of your happiness for a lifetime in its bosom. Do not let it pass!"

The last rays of the setting sun fell over them like a shower of gold, as Joy gently turned their faces towards each other, and the friends only knew they were in each other's arms, forgetting all the world in a rapture of tenderness.

Here Love appeared, and taking Joy by the hand said entreatingly:

"Come with me, little sister, to one more heart and then we will go home."

After a long flight, they entered an old tenement house, so old that it was a mere shell into which the storm and bitter cold pierced in winter and the sun burned in summer. Joy fainted and sickened as they entered the foul place, but Love held her in her arms saying, "It is for Love's sake, little sister."

Near the top of the house they came to a door standing ajar and saw a dark veiled figure gliding out. It was Sorrow and she was weeping.

"Why do you weep for this woman?" questioned Love, touching Sorrow's veil.

At Love's touch, Sorrow lifted her veil, revealing a face tearful, but radiant.

"We have lived together for years—now, we are parted forever. Hasten, Love—she waits for you!"

Entering the room, they found on a straw bed in a corner of the poor, bare place an aged woman whose silvered hair, white, shrunken face, and dimmed eyes told their own story of privation and suffering. Her worn hands were lifted in prayer to the Father who holds unspeakable things in His heart for those who love Him, but the prayer was never finished.

Seeing her heavenly visitants shining in the moonlight, the poor woman stretched out her arms to them with a glad cry, "O Love! O Joy!" and straightway she rose from her bed, young and strong and beautiful, and the three went home together.

The Weapon Wonderful.

BY LILIAN F. LEWIS.

PART II.—PROHIBITION.

(Concluded.)

CONSERVATIVE BROTHER.—You discredit, presumably, the saying, that prohibition kills a town.

WHITE RIBBONER.—Assuredly, though if it did, we should quote with Colonel Bain, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." Surely it may be predicted of a community as of an individual observing "to do according to all that is written" in the book of God's law, "Then shalt thou make thy way prosperous and then shalt thou have good success." On the contrary, of the saloon-ridden, not saloon-rid city, we hear prophecy cry, "Woe to the bloody city, it is full of lies and robbery, the prey departeth not." "Woe unto the inhabitants, they have deeply corrupted themselves." Woe unto thee, O Jerusalem! Wilt thou not be made clean? When shall it once be?

C. B.—You hold our dealing with the saloon accountable for its results, while in your dealing with temperence you evade all responsibility as to results!

W. R.—Avoid, not "evade." "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him and makest him drunken." To follow John G. Woolley's exposition-thought, since neither by consent of silence or action on my part is drink given my neighbor, or the bottle of woe put to any lip, no one is made drunken by my bottle, though many may be because of your bottle. It has been pithily said, "The saloon votes as it preys." If, like the liquor-confederacy, faithful to subserve the liquor interests, the Christian citizen, true to his Master's cause and calling, would ever vote as he prays, the world's woe would be wondrously lessened, through compliance with the moral requirement, "Then shalt thou break the bottles in the sight of the men that go with thee."

C. B.—You persist in discussing but the one side.

W. R.—Certainly; God's side—that was the understanding. "I am purposed that my mouth shall not transgress concerning the works of men, by the word of thy lips [this word of God] have I kept me from the paths of the destroyer."

C. B.—You have a knack of making your weapon serve you as I haven't mine.

W. R.—Because "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds" of sin, not to their building up or strengthening! Study Jeremiah 5th chapter from 25th verse, and apply to "the wonderful and horrible thing committed in the land" in the rule and let-rule of the liquor power, then the teaching of Christ, "Woe unto the world, because of offences" ("occasions of stumbling" (rev. ver.); also, "Woe unto the man by whom the offence cometh." We are familiar with the Bible query, "Who hath woe? Who hath sorrow?" and its answer, "They that tarry long at the wine, they that go to seek mixed wine"—pointing to the devotee of the cup, the habitue of the saloon. "From whom cometh this offence?" You accuse drink's debauchees and say, "The shew of their countenance doth witness against them, and they declare their sin as Sodom, they hide it not. Woe unto their soul, for they have rewarded evil unto themselves." But others the Lord will not hold guiltless. "I have seen also in the prophets of Jerusalem an horrible thing, they walk in lies, they strengthen also the hands of the evil-doers that none doth return from his wickedness; they are all as Sodom" (rev. ver.) Where the drunkard-making business is privileged to a livelihood, liberal patronage becomes its stimulated emulation. What else runs it, or enriches [?] municipal and federal coffers? "Woe unto you, for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against man, neither suffer them that are entering to go in."

C. B.—Enthusiasts are generally more energetic than judicious. Is there not a warning in the saying, "The kingdom of heaven suffereth by violence"?

W. R.—Thanks for the text, which reads, "suffereth violence" not "by" violence, the verb here denoting enjoined earnest effort rather than endured injury, as indicated by the Master's concluding statement, "The violent take it by force." Enthusiasm, signifying in Greek, "God in us," is to be coveted. "It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing"—to be an enthusiast, or "ardent of zeal" in a good cause even as our Lord "was clad with zeal as with a cloak."

C. B.—You do not appear to realize the stratagem or foothold of the liquor forces.

W. R.—"Yea, moreover, wine is a treacherous dealer that keepeth not at home, who enlargeth his desire as hell and he is as death and cannot be satisfied, but gathereth unto him all nations and heapeth to him all peoples" (rev. ver.) Habakkuk informs. We used the tenth Psalm in the Crusade or outset of our alliance, and know both our foe and our deliverer as portrayed by Isaiah: "They judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them. Therefore thus saith the Lord, the Lord of hosts, the Mighty One of Israel, I will ease me of my mine adversaries."

C. B.—Then you will admit the temperance hosts are as nothing compared to this giant antagonist.

W. R.—Too many professedly temperance folks are as nothing because passive when they should be active, else timorous or yielding instead of valorous and relentless in warfare. David slew Goliath because God guided, and faith used the pebble. Asa cried, "Lord, it is nothing with thee to help whether with many or with them that have no power, help us, O Lord, our God, for we rest on Thee and [trust inspiring to action] in Thy name we go against this multitude." It is written, "Curse ye Meroz, said the angel of the Lord, curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, because they came not up to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Would all soldiers of the cross or of the temperance cause advance unitedly against the enemy the armies of the aliens could be put to flight. But others such as you are not singing "Surely the Captain may depend on me," nor obeying the command, "Buy the truth and sell it not."

C. B.—There are pros and cons to this temperance question.

W. R.—Pro-hibition, representing the "pro," and license-consent the con side! To the adherents of which side can the conscientious say, in language of Zechariah, "We will go with you, for we have heard that the Lord is with you"? We regret that the Baraks refuse to listen to the Deborahs, and that the "mothers in Israel" are denied privileges of power whereby they might witness to the full extent capable for the right against the wrong.

C. B.—We might ask, "Is it thou, thou troubler of Israel?"

W. R.—I answer as Elijah did Ahab who "sold himself to work wickedness": "I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord." Jeremiah's pen might inscribe across every ballot cast for license, "Thus saith the Lord, Wherefore commit ye this great evil against your souls? Ye may know that my words shall surely stand against you for evil."

C. B.—I venture the remark, it would thwart your end in view and assist what you assail, to throw away my vote on a hopeless temperance issue, thereby strengthening corruption in this and other lines; for, speaking more plainly than politely, every prohibition ballot is worse than wasted, because practically counting in the interests of the liquor confederacy.

W. R.—And the vote for license does not so count? Strange, the shrewd-sighted policy of this ever alert constituency should not favor rather than fight the prohibition ballot so sure to serve the liquor interests! "There are many devices in a man's heart, nevertheless the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand." Since your expedient polity fails to attempt what our obedient piety may fail to attain, may not your questioning of the prohibitionist at the polls, "Why this waste?" elicit the Master's defense as a "good work"? "If ye will not lay it to heart to give glory unto my name, saith the Lord of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you."

C. B.—As you say, would all temperance believers unite, their endeavor might accomplish its end.

W. R.—"Every one of us shall give account of himself to God," therefore He appeals, "Arise, for this work belongeth to thee; we also will be with thee; be of good courage and do it." Christ declared, "He that is not with me is against me." Would you have recorded afresh, "He was wounded in the house of his friends," rather than "waste" your vote? But never sacrifice made nor action performed as a Christian duty, is "thrown away," having His assurance of recognition and reward.

C. B.—To see the question in the light you put it would constrain to the course you commend.

W. R.—"He that hideth his eyes shall have many a curse." If the saloon-keeper be not can his keeper be on the Lord's side? Listen to Obadiah: "All the men of thy confederacy have brought thee even to the border, the men that were at peace with thee have deceived thee. In the day that thou standest on the other side, even thou wast as one of them."

C. B.—Horrors! Don't class me the saloon-keeper's keeper, because I happen not to belong to your favored political party.

W. R.—I have not talked party, merely the principle which would not have you party to the saloon evil. Take whatever political route will carry that principle to its divinely appointed destination, but do not sidetrack it at the polls! An independent politician of principle helps to purify unscrupulous partisan politics. Daniel describes a king of fierce countenance who shall stand up "when transgressions are come to the full," as we might king alcohol in politics. "His power shall be mighty, he shall destroy wonderfully and shall prosper and practice and destroy the mighty and the holy people. And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and by prosperity shall destroy many; he shall also stand up against the Prince of princes, but he shall be broken without hand." If unresponsive to Joab's appeal, "Let us play the men for our people and for the cities of our God and the Lord do that which seemeth him good." It were well to ponder God's message, "When ye make many prayers I will not hear, your hands are full of blood. Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before my eyes; cease to do evil; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow." How? By the vote that stands in any way for the saloon or that does not stand in some way uncompromisingly against it. "Say thou, Thus saith the Lord, God, shall it prosper? Shall he not pull up the roots thereof and cut off the fruits thereof?" Your serious look leads me to inquire, "What is the thing that the Lord hath said unto thee?"

C. B.—"To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not to him it is sin," my text again offered but your version, compelled by "the sword of the Spirit."

W. R.—God bless you, my prohibition brother! I can only pray, "Strengthen, O God, that which thou hast wrought through us," and praise Him that "My word that goeth forth out of my mouth shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it," has been "tried and proven."

A Woman's View.

BY FRANCES E. BEAUCHAMP.

[Address at the Prohibition banquet in Cincinnati, O.]

"Despise not the day of small things.'

WOMAN is not so loud or so strong as man, but I am not so sure that she is any less a factor in social forces. The admonition of the old minister to the young, "Brother, you must learn that it is not thunder but lightning that kills," is, to say the least, suggestive. God when he would build a continent does not cause a convulsion of nature by which the foundations of the deep are broken up and submerged, mountains wrested from their habitations and tossed one upon another until they pierce the water and lift their heads once more to the sun. No; that rapid work will do for a glacier which is to last for a day but not for a continent which is to abide for all time.

When the Builder of the universe would make a continent He despises not the small things, the very nothings. He enlists the tiny insect not to move the dead, inert matter, but to build its own little life into the foundation, and to so order its posterity that they, too, will build their lives into the same mighty structure, toiling on slowly but surely, century after century, making such slight progress that a generation discerns no change. But one day a coral reef lifts its head above the peaceful wave. The sunlight kisses it. All nature smiles. Surely, says the little insect, prosperity will abide with us from this day forward.

But, alas, clouds gather, storms break above its head. The very waves that yesterday kissed and fondled it so lovingly, are to-day a rod that smites and breaks its beautiful crest. The storm subsides, the crest, broken and crushed, lies beneath to crumble and disintegrate. But steadily the little builders toil on. Again the reef is lifted. The tide recedes one day and caught in the recesses are fish and marine lives innumerable, the slippery eel among the number. He squirms his way back to the slimy ooze of the deep sea, but other and possibly lower forms of life remain and offer up a sacrifice to evolution as in the scorching, tropical sun they die, and rot and fertilize the sterile reef. Fish of the sea, fowl of the air, tide and wave, each bring their contribution. A millennium is passed. The eye of man rests upon the tropical land, and his heart is gladdened. He makes it his habitation, because the divine Architect has not despised the day of small things.

Is all this a prophecy? A great civic continent is to be constructed in the realm of government. Man, the leviathan of society, will reconstruct social conditions. Oh, no; "It is not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord." The need is discerned alike by civic leviathan and civic insect. Slowly the insect begins to build her life into the mighty structure. The waves of the deep sea of public opinion break over her, but steadily she builds. One day she lifts her head and the reef of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union appears. The sunshine of prosperity smiles upon her; popularity beckons to her and whispers, "compromise." Flattering prospects are set before her; friends strong and tried threaten one moment and persuade and entreat the next. It is a crucial hour, will she stand the test? Will she make compromise at the behest of strong allies, or will she make haste slowly, not despising the day of small things?

The National Convention is to meet for the first time in the great southwest. Strong women with bated breath ask, will she be true? A ringing resolution is passed indorsing the stalwart young party that lacks assistance. Right is chosen, expediency is cast to the wind. The storm, fierce and wild, breaks over her head. Some of the showiest tips of the crest of the reef are broken, but the foundation of the continent of principle is securely laid in God's adamant of truth, that nothing can shake. The severest test is yet to come. During the storm the Prohibition party, like the friendly tropical tide, is playing about her foundation, creeping up into her bosom and kissing her cheek like a great, fond young brother, who loves and appreciates the sacrifices of the sister tried and true. Her testing time was not in the storm but in the hour when this young brother, in the pride of his youth, forgot his devotion and slipped away and left her, and when in the scorching hour of adversity former friends pointing at her, said, "Aha, aha! we would have stood by you, but you cast us off for that young adventurer." When she sees bleeding and dying upon the reef some of her most valiant laborers whose lives have been wrought into the foundation—her only comfort being that this too, is part of the cost—still is she true to principle. The star of hope is upon her brow, the light of faith is in her eye. Hark, she catches a key-note! In tones unmistakable comes the revelation for freedom: "I have made you free." Standing with the apostle of faith upon the mount of privilege she hears him proclaim in thunder tones, "There is neither Jew nor Greek." What? can this man rise above the mountain of prejudice of his day, and be inspired with a faith that blots out time and space and say not there will be, but there is neither Jew nor Greek?

But hist! he rises to yet loftier heights; he says there is "neither bond nor free." Eighteen centuries or more are overleaped at a single stride of his giant faith. But he does not pause. His rapt gaze is fixed still further down the ages, and, triumph of triumphs, his faith proclaims there is "neither male nor female, but all one in Christ Jesus." The climax is reached. The redemption is complete. Many have come to the Mount, but have, as Paul, when he first saw the light, been smitten with blindness. A few sturdy souls, thank God, have stood and are able to bear the full light of revelation.

Meanwhile, the W. C. T. U. can only fight and hope and pray. She stands with the right hand, the hand of civic power, chained behind her back, but the left, the hand of womanly influence, is extended to her young but fickle brother. He, casting a glance back over his shoulder, half of pride, half of regret, says, "Oh, well, I have not the power; I can not strike off the shackles if I would. You cumber me, you are an added weight. It is true you nourished and cherished me, you almost laid down your life for me, but now, well, now, I really believe you will do better without me. Go to my powerful antagonist whose everlasting enmity you have won by your loyalty to me. Ask him to break your shackles, and then come and use your newly-acquired power to enthrone me." One day he taunts her and points to Colorado and says, "Look, where you are free you are not using your power for home protection." A sad smile flits over her face as she gently whispers, "Ingratitude is worse than witchcraft." Think you, woman could so soon forget the party who broke her shackles? or even if she could and did, would it be wise? Would ever another blow be given if the party that dealt the first knew that the newly conferred power would be used immediately for its overthrow? No, brother, we know only too well that your young arm will not be nerved in time to strike off our shackles, but that it must be done by the democratic party of the South and the republican party of the North.

But your sisters plead with you to be true. Build with us slowly but surely your lives into the solid foundation of this reform. Stand true to principle. Look not to expediency, and when the day of power for the home forces comes, as come it will and that soon, too, and after a payment on the debt of gratitude, we will call to our sisters of the North and the South, the East and the West, and say it was agitation, it was education that set you free, and while not able to strike the blow for freedom on your behalf, this party that stands for the protection of your kingdom, the home, has with little variation assisted in the education that culminated in your freedom. And women by the hundreds and by the thousands will see the sweet reasonableness of our plea and will consecrate their powers and crown you king.

This is not the voice of expediency but the pleading of reason. Will you heed, and "despise not the day of small things"?

Willard Hall Echoes.

ON reaching the Temple one morning, I found, as usual, several letters waiting for me. All spoke the language of burdened hearts. On my way into Willard Hall another letter was thrust into my hand. It was signed "An unfortunate girl," and ran thus: "Trouble tempted me. Please pray at once for a girl who was one night, for the first time, arrested for drunkenness. Ask your friends in the blessed Willard Hall to pray at once for me. I wish to serve Jesus. God bless and reward you in heaven."

. . . . . .

Extract from another letter: "I am the young man that sent in a request a few months ago. I secured work shortly after, but am out of work at present, and greatly in need of help. You know what a life of crime I have been saved from! I could have had a position singing in a bar-room, but I would not take it. My case is desperate. I appeal to the Christians in Willard Hall."

. . . . . .

Another: "I read the Willard Hall Echoes with thankful heart for what God is accomplishing there. Pray for one who has been sorely tried, who has fallen again and again, and is now leaving home to go among strangers in a strange city. Please spread this letter before the Lord! He knows the anxious heart that sends it to you. I will be with you in spirit."

. . . . . .

Other letters and postal cards were in my hand that morning. All were spread out before Him, and opportunity given for requests from the audience. Ten answered by standing and making known their need of Christ in the soul.

Then Brother David spoke of "the awful curse in the world—unbelief." At the close of the service about thirty came to kneel before the altar.

Rev. A. H. Hager, of Mitchell, S. D., was present that day. He said: "I shall go from this place to spread abroad how marvelously God manifests Himself in Willard Hall, filling the very air with divine power. This hour has been an inspiration to my soul."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It is with a glad feeling of a precious privilege that I send forth my New Year's greetings to my sisters across the sea. I had hoped ere this to have clasped hands with many of them in their own grand country, America, the land of freedom, and I am hoping still, God willing, that the year 1898 will partly be spent over there. It was only work for women that kept me away from Toronto and Buffalo Conventions in the autumn. It is difficult to estimate the debt of gratitude we women of the mother country owe to our sisters of the new world. We owe the beginning of each movement for the welfare of womanhood, to those brave pioneers in that country where the goddess of liberty stands at the entrance gates, and I for one think not more of any woman who can read of the convention held at Seneca Falls—when all the men rushed by every train to rescue their women relatives, believing them mad for daring to hold a convention; or of Mother Thompson's first prayer by the saloon—without feeling a lump in the throat and a tightening of the heart strings. God bless those that are left of the pioneers in the evening of their days, and the country that gave them birth. I feel glad that I am alive, and allowed to travel in their steps, however falteringly, over those paths which are often stony, often slippery, with many a prickly bramble alongside their hedges; but the paths are here, and what must have been the labors of those that cut them out? Noble women! How glad some of them must have been when they reached the heavenly harbor to find that there was no "sphere" there.

You will have heard that at last the Liberal Federation of England have seen fit by a vote of 182 against 124 to put woman suffrage on the Liberal program; our Welsh Federation did that in April, 1895, so that John Jones was before John Bull, as indeed he is with most reforms. On the whole, even our Welsh Parliamentary representatives are to the fore. All our best men are in favor of woman suffrage. Some are kept back who are desirous of currying favor with the Liberal leaders—who are known opponents—a few because, probably, of the apathy of the women they know most about, and perhaps, too, a very few who dread the woman's vote will be a moral house-cleaning. We have a large Liberal convention to be held the first week in February, to which we are sending, by invitation, one hundred delegates from the Welsh union of Women's Liberal associations.

It is a fact worthy of note that the two candidates in a division of Lancashire at a recent election placed the words, "I am in favor of the franchise for women," in large letters on the posters exhibited all through the district. We are steadily gaining ground, and we feel now is our time, before the franchise is given more freely to men. Lectures, conventions, etc., are good, but the ballot is the power, without which all our efforts seem like beating the air. That is our present political situation.

As a pleasant contrast to the despicable behavior of the undergrads of Cambridge towards their sisters, who had won their degrees with honors and not by a mere pass examination, comes our Welsh University. We have no sex in education. A woman may become even a chancellor of the Welsh University, and it is good to remember that it was a woman we had the honor of giving the degree of B. L. to for the first time. That is our educational position. Then our temperance movement is marching onward, thank God; in many a neighborhood they are proving beyond a doubt that they are indeed Christ's leaven in the world. They have many ideas, many plans, as unique as they are good, to keep mankind from the grip of the liquor traffic. They start an early coffee stall, or a cheap supper; one good woman I know does a great work through having thrown open a large part of her house as a reading-room in the evening for men; then some associations keep a Bible woman to visit the poor in their own homes. Altogether, we have reason to "be glad in the Lord and rejoice," for the outpouring of the spirit upon the handmaidens is daily becoming more of a reality.

If I were asked what is the real need of women to-day, my answer would be, "Perfect loyalty to one another and their common cause." You sent us over from America for a time a woman who was the embodiment of the loyalty I am trying to describe—Helen Hood. She had no self while with us. Self had been absorbed in the cause to which her life was devoted. We want that kind of women. Women who will not allow a sister woman spoken lightly or unkindly of in their presence. Women who will never be too cowardly to stand for the truth at all times. Women who will have too much self-respect to listen to the meaningless complaints of men, who by these petty means, scheme to keep them from their just rights. It is usually only the artful schemer that pours nonsense into a woman's ear and she must depend upon her own headpiece to find out its worthlessness. We want women with good headpieces, strong women physically, intellectually, morally, spiritually. I am told that you have many such women in that America of yours. I can well believe it, having seen, and known, and loved our Chieftain, Frances Willard. I want to see the world full of Frances Willard's images, and there is room here for many a Susan B. Anthony—but knowing something of an editorial pair of scissors I must beware lest the chair should frown upon my long-windedness, for I do not want this to be my last appearance in THE UNION SIGNAL.

Yours, in that noble bond of the sisterhood of woman,

GWYNETH VAUGHAN,
Temperance Advocate,
Hon. Sec. to the Welsh Union of Women's Liberal Associations.

Simplicity of Attire.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—I presume I was the writer of the article referred to by Josiah W. Leeds in THE UNION SIGNAL of January 13, and I ask for a little additional space as I fear my plea for more modern dress was not wisely worded. I do deplore out-of-style dress for our workers and I strongly advocate the "bright and fair" appearance in dress as in countenance.

"Simplicity of attire" should, by all means, be our motto, but that does not imply carelessness of attire. A quotation from Pope (I think) expresses very concisely my views and I think we might advantageously apply it to the subject in hand:

> "Be not the first by whom the new is tried,
> Nor yet the last to lay the old aside."

Extravagance in dress, undue attention to "style," or any other conspicuousness of dress is to be avoided. The mass of our temperance women are not given to the indulgence of a "desire for dress," they are women from the ordinary walks of life; like Daniel, they have a "purpose firm," and devote time, energy and prayerful study to the attainment of that purpose. In the very nature of their work they are prone to think lightly of matters pertaining to dress and the result may be a detriment to their work. Talk as we may we all know that the careless or antiquated dress of even a talented woman will prejudice many against her and the cause she represents, while men do not hesitate to pronounce such either "strongminded" or "dowdy" and neither epithet is intended as complimentary.

I do not advocate more expenditure, nor more fashion-plate gowns. Let us not err in that direction, but do let us as far as possible approach the current idea of dress; this may often be done by giving only a little thought and a little time, and the result will be beneficial, I am sure.

Let us always dress modestly, within our means, and carefully avoiding the conspicuousness resultant from a "stylish effect," or the total lack of it. I realize that I am treading on dangerous ground, but I wrote last year in all earnestness and have no reason to change the views then expressed though perhaps I erred in the expression.

World's Missionaries in Canada.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—This year which has dawned for us in fair Canada is vastly different from anything in our experience before, with the beautiful white snow and icicles all around, and people clad in their warm furs, whereas in the sunny land we have left so far behind, our friends are doubtless vainly endeavoring to keep cool.

What changes have taken place in one short year. Aye! and as I write what a sea of faces of loved ones whom we have labored with rise up before me and cause the heart to beat faster with the remembrance that they are praying for us.

So much has been said about the marvelous World's Convention meetings, and those of your National held in Buffalo, that we will but briefly refer to them as the grandest meetings we had ever attended, and certainly we praise God for the inspirations received, and are proud to be identified with such a noble band of women, with well beloved Frances Willard as our leader.

After the Buffalo Convention we returned to Toronto, and in due time commenced our work as round-the-world missionaries by conducting gospel temperance missions in York county, Ontario. In Newmarket we addressed crowded audiences on the Sunday, making it necessary to secure the Town Hall for week night meetings, instead of Temperance Hall, and a similar experience was met with in Aurora, where many young men signed the total abstinence pledge, and so on, wherever we have gone the people have received us kindly, pledges have been taken, and some members added to our beloved W. C. T. U. We find the people are not as enthusiastic in Canada, as in Australia or England, on the temperance question, excusing themselves by saying, "They have passed that stage." Certainly, they have done well in the past, and we admire them for it, but in view of the important plebiscite which we hope will soon come on, it would be well to arouse and so enthuse others that many be added to our ranks.

We esteem it a privilege to be permitted to take part in this most important campaign, and the probability is we shall (D. V.) remain in this country for twelve months before coming over to the United States. We have already made engagements up to the end of March, and invitations are coming in thick and fast.

The British Bands of Hope.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—"We cherish all the Firsts throughout our lives," the poet says, and so do temperance workers theirs. In celebrating the United Kingdom Band of Hope Jubilee the originator of the union is called to mind. As early as 1833, Mrs. Ann Jane Carlile used to visit the women prisoners in Dublin jail, urging them to take the "moderate" temperance pledge. One day one of these women said to her: "Thrue for ye, m'm, the whisky brought us here, but you can afford to drink your wine and we can't!"

In order to rescue a bright little girl of one of these prisoners, Mrs. Carlile brought the little Mary to her own home. One day she was horrified at finding her on the floor licking up some spirits the servants had spilled by dropping a bottle. From that moment she made up her mind to do all she could to save the children.

In Leeds, Yorkshire, the Rev. Jabez Tunnicliff had been adjured by a dying drunkard to warn the boys against taking the first glass. Mrs. Carlile came to Leeds in 1847 to seek this man's help, and there they organized the first Band of Hope under the auspices of the Leeds Temperance Society. Councillor John Hope had started a band in Scotland the previous January, which was soon absorbed into the Leeds union; three years later London formed its own, and auxiliaries to the union became general all over the country. After the work of a quarter of a century, the Rev. Mr. Chown, of Yorkshire, gathered up the most careful statistics of the results on the children. Many thousands had by this time been pledged abstainers and had gone out into their different walks in life.

Studies in Sociology—No. 2.

THE Labor Movement and the Social Movement of to-day are acknowledged to be synonymous terms, but this statement only calls forth another question: What is the Labor Movement? Prof. Graham Taylor gives this definition: "It is nothing less than the more or less concerted movement of the majorities of the world's workers for the recognition of human rights and personal values in the working world, the more or less organized effort of fellow craftsmen and the federated forces of all trades unions to attain and maintain that standard of life or comfort which makes it possible for 'men to live the life of men.'"

Deeper even than this definition is that view of the labor problem which considers it a necessary stage in human evolution; not affecting the poor only, but all classes of society alike. This conception sees labor as the divinely appointed mission of all men and looks upon the present conditions of unrest as sure presages of the final organization of society upon a basis where every man will work; where each shall take his share in human toil and the Master's words, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work," will be true of all.

The labor problem is not a thing of recent growth. It is as old as man himself. History shows us that for centuries the only condition of the manual laborer was that of a slave, in absolute subjection to his master's will. Read the histories of Greece and Rome, where a slave's life was counted of so little value that hundreds were sometimes put to death to gratify a whim of their master or to swell his funeral pageant.

Then came the period of serfdom, when the laborer was believed to belong with the soil, and was considered as much a part of the estate as its forests or fields. This was a vast advance beyond slavery; indeed, many to-day question if, in passing from serfdom to wages the laborer has not suffered rather than gained. The personal relation between lord and serf was often a very close one, and the fact that the serf was acknowledged to have a claim upon the soil worked largely to his advantage. Yet there were many and cruel abuses connected with this system. Jessopp, in his description of "An English Village Six Hundred Years Ago," says that they "were living a life hugely below the level of yours. They were more wretched in their poverty; they were incomparably less prosperous in their prosperity; they were worse clad, worse housed, worse taught, worse tended, worse governed."

The forces which changed feudalism and serfdom to the wage system of the present were many and were long at work. The feudal lords more and more leased lands to the serf, making him the "tenant farmer"; serfs were also hired out to other lords, and part of the wages left in their own possession, while part went to their lord. These facts naturally produced greater personal independence. Some students lay great stress upon "The Black Death," the awful plague of 1348, as a factor in producing this economic change. It is estimated that from one-third to one-half the population of England died of this plague. Naturally, labor became scarce; harvests rotted in the fields for lack of reapers, and competition first appeared as a factor in the industrial life of England and of Europe. In 1381 came "The Peasant's Revolt," William Langland wrote "Piers the Plowman," labor's great poem; and John Ball, "the mad priest of Kent," uttered the burning words which incited the first great "strike." "Mad, as the landowners called him, it was in the preaching of John Ball that England first listened to the knell of feudalism and the declaration of the rights of man." (Green's History of England.) "Wat" Tyler soon appeared to put into action song and sermon, and, with a hundred thousand men marched to London to make this demand of King Richard: "We will that you make us free, our heirs and our land, and that we be no more bound, nor so reputed." Defeated, punished and persecuted as these peasants were, they set in motion mighty forces which have not yet ceased to work.

He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength. I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.—Isa. 40:29; Phil. 4:13.

MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS, whose noble husband was the first to respond to Miss Willard's appeal for money after she made her ever memorable speech in behalf of the Temple at the National Convention at Buffalo, like her husband is a warm friend of the "House Beautiful." A letter just received from her contains the following interesting incident: "Perhaps it might help the Temple cause a little if I should tell of a remark made to me last spring while traveling in the South. I got into conversation with a gentleman in the seat behind me. In the course of his remarks he said he was from Kentucky, and that he was a distiller, a manufacturer of the M—— whisky. Pointing to my white-ribbon bow, I said, 'You must recognize a foe in me.' He replied that the white-ribbon society had done more than any other society to harm the liquor business, and that he had often stood and looked at the Temple in Chicago and thought of it as a monument to the success of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. What would he and other distillers and liquor men say if our women should let this 'monument' pass into other hands? Would they not consider ours a lost cause?" Mrs. Crafts' very pertinent questions should awake every white-ribboner to both thought and action.

Mrs. Edith Russell Cone, Cedar Rapids, Ia., writes asking that a general appeal through the daily press be sent out for the Temple.

She says: "I noticed in the Chicago Tribune, a few days since, the sudden illness of Miss Willard and her anxiety on account of the Temple debt. I thought, why should it be necessary that she should have this load of care upon her? Why should not we mothers 'lend a hand' to lift this responsibility from our great Temperance leader? I think if we would all do but a little it would amount to a large sum in the aggregate. I would suggest for your consideration that an appeal be made to the Christian motherhood of the country, that each mother send a penny for every child the Lord has given her, towards the debt of this Temple which shall stand as an anchorage for her children against the tide of impurity and sin which fills the land. Why must that Bethel, Willard Hall, have a cloud hanging over it, when it exists only to bless humanity? Please find enclosed ten cents to head the list for my two babies, who already have their mites in the Temple."

We thank Mrs. Cone for her interest in the Temple, and if we could reach all mothers in the way she proposes, a large amount might be realized, but we cannot. Some papers would publish the appeal but others would not. We must depend upon our white-ribboners working out the latest plan we have set before them, viz: Each one sending out four of the fifty cent collection cards to friends outside the temperance ranks. This will take no money out of the union, only a few minutes' work from each member to address the envelopes to her friends. By this plan every white-ribboner becomes an agent to raise two dollars for the Temple. We beg all who have so far received the cards to send them out to their friends without delay. This is the quickest and best way to relieve Miss Willard and give us the controlling interest in the Temple.

All matters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send a two cent stamp to her either for a subscription card, Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago.

. . . . . .

Those who prefer to send money to the fund Miss Willard is raising to help pay off the Temple Trust Bonds, should make their checks payable to Miss Cornelia M. Dow and send to Miss Dow, Portland, Me.

OH, great, good Soul
Which rules the whole
Of everything I see,
Help me to-day
To be, I pray,

To lowest depths you flow;
Shine upon me
That I may be

Ida's Valentines.

BY M. LOUISE FORD.

"TO-MORROW'S Valentine's Day, mamma, and, oh, you ought to see the big box teacher's got on her desk for us to put our valentines in! Can I make some more to-night? I know how to make lovely ones!" and an eager little face looked up into Mrs. Lane's.

Mamma stooped down and planted a kiss on the rosy cheek, saying:

"Yes, indeed, dear, as many as you please. But to whom are you going to send them all? Isn't your list about full? Have you remembered Katherine and Annie as well as the others?"

"Yes, mamma, and I'm going to make one for Alec Boles; he isn't very bright, you know, and the boys make fun of him. I thought he'd like one. I don't believe he'll have any; and Kitty Welch has to stay at home now, 'cause her brother's got the measles, and so I thought I'd send her one, too," replied Ida earnestly.

"I am very glad you thought of them," said her mamma, "and here are some little pictures I found to-day; you may use them if you like."

"Oo, oo! aren't those just sweet!" exclaimed Ida in high glee.

"Yes, indeed, especially the one that came off the candy box," said mamma, with a merry twinkle in her eye.

Ida was off in a trice to make her valentines, and so busily did she work that she had quite a handful to take to school next morning.

How the merry little voices did chatter up to the very time the bell rang, and Miss Walker kindly allowed the wonderful box to be opened before lessons were begun.

Time after time Ida's name was called, until her desk was quite covered with big valentines and little ones, home made and store bought, some rather the worse for handling, and some fresh and clean in their white envelopes.

"Seventeen!" she counted in surprise, when the last one was distributed, and the proud and happy little maiden looked around to see who had fared any better.

"How many did you get?"

"And you?"

"Oh, isn't that a lovely one!"

"I got most as many as you," were the words heard on all sides, and the excitement had scarcely begun to subside when Miss Walker struck the bell once more, and every valentine was put away till recess time.

Only one little girl there was who had not a single valentine; she was a new scholar, a thin, sad-looking child, with big brown eyes. Her dress was old and faded, and the first day she came to school, one little girl had whispered to another:

"Josie Dean's father drinks, I guess, 'cause I saw her with him last week, and he couldn't walk straight."

That was, indeed, the sad secret of Josie's home, and now, when all the others were happy with their valentines, she was looking out of the window, winking hard to keep back the tears.

Not one valentine, did I say? Oh, yes, there was one of those dreadful ones children sometimes call "comic," with a coarse picture of a drunken man, with a bottle in his hand upon it. Some thoughtless boy had put that in the box for Josie Dean, and in delight she had responded to her name.

But when she saw the cruel joke her little face grew pale and frightened, and she hid the dreadful thing in her pocket before any one could see it.

At recess time Ida was here and there, showing her treasures and admiring others, and suddenly came upon Josie Dean, who was trying very bravely not to be disappointed, but wiped away a tear as Ida came to the window where she was standing.

In a minute Ida had guessed the trouble, though she knew nothing about the secret hidden in the depths of the faded pocket. She saw that Josie's hands were empty.

"Oh, Josie," she said softly, "didn't you get any? I'm so sorry. Here I've got lots of them, more than I need, and I want you to pick out the very prettiest one," and she drew her away into the dressing room, and spread her valentines out.

"There, now you take just the one you want most."

Josie's face brightened, but she was too shy to accept the kind offer, until Ida insisted upon it.

"Yes, you must; you see you've been here such a little while that the girls don't know you much. Next year you'll have plenty. You see they all know me 'cause I've been here so long," she said comfortingly.

There was one representing two little girls busily and happily at work in the very act of making and writing valentines; this one Josie chose, and shyly thanked Ida.

"We'll say that is you and me," said Ida, laughing, "and next year we will make our valentines together," and the two little girls went back to the schoolroom, their feet dancing with happiness, and their hearts light as air.

It would be hard to tell which of the two was the happier, but Ida said to her mother that night, as she was tucked into her little bed:

"The very best part of the day, mamma, was when I gave Josie that valentine. It made such a happy place in my heart that it hasn't gone away yet."

"No, and it will not, for it is what we do for others that makes us happy. What is the verse about that, dearie, can you tell?"

Ida looked thoughtful a moment, and then said, "Oh, yes, 'it is more blessed to give than to receive,' and it is, sure enough, isn't it, mamma?"—Our Sunday Afternoon.

What God Gives a Boy.

A BODY to live in and keep clean and healthy, and as a dwelling for his mind and a temple for his soul.

A pair of hands to use for himself and others, but never against others for himself.

A pair of feet to do errands of love and kindness, charity and business, but not to loiter in places of mischief, or temptation, or sin.

A pair of lips to keep pure and unpolluted by tobacco or whisky, and to speak true, brave words, but not to make a smokestack of or a swill trough.

A pair of ears to hear the music of bird, and tree, and rill, and human voice, but not to give heed to what the tempter says, or to what dishonors God or his mother.

A pair of eyes to see the beautiful, the good, and the true—God's finger-prints in the flower, the field, and snowflakes, but not to feast on unclean pictures or the blotches that Satan daubs and calls pleasure.

A mind to remember, and reason, and decide, and store up wisdom, and impart it to others, but not to be turned into a chip basket or rubbish heap for the chaff, and the rubbish, and the sweepings of the world's stale wit.

A soul pure and spotless as a new-fallen snowflake, to receive impressions of good, and to develop faculties of powers and virtues which shall shape it day by day, as the artist's chisel shapes the stone into the image and likeness of Jesus Christ.—Youth's Temperance Banner.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—A letter has come to me from Beatrice Smith, West Rockport, Me., who is ten years old, and what do you think she says: "I can wash dishes and floors, sweep, make beds and cook, and I help mamma with the housework." I wonder how many of my little nieces have learned to be so useful! It isn't always pleasant work, to be sure, for Aunt Mary remembers distinctly when she would almost rather go hungry than to wash the dinner dishes, but the home tasks, well done, prove the stepping stones to successful work in the larger fields of service, and I know that my girls all want to be capable, trustworthy women. Aside from the knowledge gained, what a comfortable time the mammas must have if the little daughters help about the housework as cheerfully as Beatrice does. Do you? Lovingly yours,

AUNT MARY.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am so glad you told us of the "Crutch and Kindness League," I am very much interested in it. I do think that many little cripples will be happier because some one is thinking of them. You wanted us to tell you what we did for others Christmas. I took some of my toys to six motherless children. I was so sorry for them. I also gave a poor little boy some toys, and I made two old ladies happy. I didn't give toys I cared nothing about, but toys that I loved. I was trying to make a sacrifice cheerfully; and Christmas morning I enjoyed my presents better because I made some one else happy and glad. I joined the Cozy Corner when Aunt Jane took charge of it. I am eleven years old. EMILY C. KENNARD.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—Christmas my Sunday-school class made a poor old widow happy, as well as themselves, by sending her a basket of provisions. She is sixty-six years old and works for her living. Mamma went with us to see her and in conversation asked her if her husband was a soldier. She replied he was, but from some lack of evidence thought she could not get a widow's pension, but mamma thought the law was in her favor and asked a pension agent to go and see her and examine her papers and he said she was entitled to a pension, which she has since applied for; she said, "God bless the li'tle girls who brought me so much Christmas cheer and probably the means of securing a pension to help support me in my old age." So many of the little letters say "my mamma belongs to the union and takes the SIGNAL;" of course mine does and the badge was tied on me and I became a Y when about one month old. When the June roses bloom again I will be fourteen years old. THEO DODSON.

And they took strong cities, and a fat land, and possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards, and oliveyards, and fruit trees in abundance: so they did eat, and were filled, and became fat, and delighted themselves in thy great goodness.—Neh. 9: 25.

The Future of Country Life.

BE it understood that in last week's editorial we were not saying that country life and country people have more serious faults than have town and city life and people. But each has its peculiarities. The town family is likely to spend all its income on dress and show, and it has no cause to claim superiority to the country family that lays its earnings uselessly in the bank. Wealthy city families spend thousands of dollars on one evening's ball. It is reported that a woman of New York's upper ten has said that $25,000 a year is the least upon which a woman of that "set" can dress herself respectably. Such people have small reason to look with contempt upon the niggardly living of the country. We do not here undertake to say which is the worst. All the people referred to are alike living upon the husks of their lives. All alike utterly fail to appreciate life and its meaning. The woman who makes of herself a mere household drudge and hoards unneeded money in the bank, sins against the highest and best part of her own nature, sins against her children, her home and the world about her. The woman who puts all her money into ostrich plumes and silk dresses sins likewise. Both enter into the next world dwarfed and stunted souls.

We are sadly aware that the causes which underlie the radical defects of life in country, city, and town are a part of our whole social system, and cannot be entirely removed until that system is radically changed. Competition and excessive individualism have given to wealth abnormal value. The different forms which this wrong view takes in the different modes of life are due to the different environment in each case. There is reason enough why country life has been forced into its present sordid ruts. Starting out with little or nothing, our competitive system grinding him down to the most meager returns for his produce, the farmer, not from choice, but of necessity, has toiled early and late and lived penuriously. When at last competence has come, the habits of a lifetime could not be changed, and more, intellectual life has been starved to death. The people, and there are many of them, who have in farm life persisted in carrying out higher and nobler ideas, who have bought books and educated themselves and their children, have indeed a higher and a better life which pays for all the sacrifice, but, almost without exception, they are poor in dollars and cents.

The pressure to the lower kind of life is very great. In face of the facts which confront us, we must urge the imperative necessity of rescuing country life from its evils. Congested cities with their corruption and vice, farms given over to an unassimilated foreign element and the healthy country life utterly destroyed, offer little promise for the future prosperity of our nation. We see no other hope for changing these conditions than that of arousing country people themselves to a sense of the danger, getting them to consider honestly the defects of their present manner of life, and making an earnest effort to correct them. As we have already indicated, this is to be accomplished by making life in the country attractive to our American young people by reducing its hours of toil and affording development to the intellectual and the spiritual. The children of country homes must be supplied with the world's best literature and taught to appreciate it. A broad and generous education in higher institutions of learning must show them the beauties of the world around them. Chautauqua Circles and Woman's Christian Temperance Unions can here find work to do second in importance to none in the world. There can be no nobler endeavor, there can be no greater achievement than to lift the life and thought of our rural districts out of their present average low plane. It is the only way in which the healthy country life of the past can be restored, and we must remember with the gravest apprehensions that it is from that country life that the nation has drawn its strength and vigor.

Now is the time to begin. One person really in earnest can accomplish more than he dreams of. It is not necessary to begin with impossibilities. Do the little that lies next you to arouse the thought of your own community and interest it in something outside the little treadmill of duties in which it has so long been confined. You will find as every other worker has before you, that your work and its results increases and spreads in a way that will astonish you.

Prohibition Conference Aftermath.

THE conference at the Grand Hotel in Cincinnati, O., January 26, reported in our last issue, was harmonious and fairly well attended, and was considered one of the most successful gatherings ever held by the party. Mrs. Beauchamp's response to the toast, "A Woman's View," which we give in full on another page, voiced, we think, the general sentiment of the W. C. T. U. It was a brave utterance, and there was the closest attention by all and evident enjoyment by many. A few faces, however, reminded us of the peculiar look of a man we once knew, who had the misfortune to laugh when he cried. It was evident to all that Mrs. Beauchamp was speaking her profound convictions, and her words were permeated by deep feeling, and prompted by a hope which we believe is destined never to be realized. The difficulties and dangers attending the restoration of the lost suffrage plank would be as great to-day, or greater, than existed at the Pittsburg convention. The sentiments of at least a number of the leaders can be inferred from the remarks of the toastmaster, Dr. Funk, when Mrs. Beauchamp had finished. He spoke to this effect, although we cannot quote verbatim. Nevertheless, and because we believe all this, we also believe in the single plank, and that we can best protect them [the women] by the single issue.

An element in the banquet speeches, comforting to women in general, was their length. There were six regular toasts and one welcome. No doubt all were limited in time (theoretically). One orator, after his predecessor had spoken forty-five minutes, said he would not make his so eternally long as to merit the charge of trying to make it immortal, and forthwith broke the record in the effort to find out "where we are at," and succeeded in being humorous if not brief enough to be witty.

Rev. Sam Jones in his speech in the afternoon on the subject, "Prohibition and the American Home," said all the parties split last year so as to give a chance for twice as many candidates to run, and that the Prohibitionists split, but "sorter like a hairpin—stayed together at one end." Some of his epigrams were:

"You will never get the world to heaven until you get the world sober.

"I believe that whisky is God's worst enemy and the devil's best friend.

"It is a question in my mind which is least endurable, to lead a drunkard's life or to be a drunkard's wife.

"Every saloon in the world is a menace to every home in the world.

"If all of the politicians in the country would die at one time the devil would look through the keyhole when he saw them coming and shut up shop. He'd know that if he let 'em inside they'd hold a caucus and elect a devil of their own and run hell.

"Lots of men vote one way and pray another. If any of them get to heaven, it will be because the other place is burned out."

He moved his audience to tears when he spoke of his own talk to his two sons when he told them how he had driven the bloom from their mother's cheeks in three years of debauchery, and asked them, if they must drink and carouse, not to commence it until their mother died, for it would kill her. This does not sound like much on paper, but it was a story which went straight home when told in the quiet, forceful words of Sam Jones.

Again, there were moist eyes when he told of an angel coming to earth and gathering a rose, a child's smile and a mother's love as the three most beautiful things on earth. At heaven's gate the rose had faded and the smile was gone, but the mother's love was as pure and as strong as ever.

His whole address was a telling plea for the protection of the home, and one who has never heard him cannot imagine his quiet, good-natured, almost sly humor, which reveals his tender heart and captivates his audience.

John G. Woolley did not speak on the subject announced, "The Law and the Profits," but got off his usual number of good hits. He likened the people who give excuses for not being prohibitionists to a shabby man who said he was so ticklish that he couldn't stand it to be measured for a new suit. They are so ticklish they can't stand it to be measured for a new party suit.

He said that the Republican party knew it couldn't fool the saloon-keeper and keep his vote, but it knew that it could fool the church people time after time, and still they would continue voting its ticket. Neither did he blame the politicians for catering to the liquor element when in office. The thing to do is to get another sort of politicians.

Homer L. Castle said that the growing conviction that Jesus meant what He said when He commanded His followers to "be separate and apart," is filling our hearts not only with hope, but assurance that the church will not long be like Ephraim, a cake not turned, i. e., red-hot crust on Sabbath observance, dough on election day observance.

He also said that anti-saloon leagues are the confessions of the churches that they are under conviction of political sin, and any good minister will tell you that a sinner well convicted is half converted. Like the man in the Bible whose eyes Jesus touched, they see "men as trees walking," and they only need one more touch of the divine Physician to be clearly in the light.

Two resolutions were introduced at the close of the afternoon session which were withdrawn owing to the opinion that it was not within the province of a political party to take such action. One of these expressed "our profound regret and unqualified disapproval of the drinking and immorality that now exist and are allowed to flourish at Yale University," stating, among other things, "that there are within two blocks of the Yale campus and green, sixty-six saloons and houses of prostitution, existing largely, if not wholly, for the purpose of tempting the young men who are students in that institution." The other commended "the action taken by the trustees of Princeton University with regard to the frequenting of saloons and drinking places by the students of that institution," and "uttered protest against the position of President Patton as indicated by his recent speech at the alumni dinner in the city of New York."

No new measures were advocated by the conference. Its chief value was in a comparison of views upon the subjects as announced in the program, and in getting pledges for the wherewithal for the year's expenses. Mrs. Henrietta Monroe who was announced to speak upon "Woman and the Prohibition Party," was not able to be present.

To Bombard Yale.

THE following letter from our editor-in-chief will, we believe, incite the unions to great activity along the line suggested:

MY DEAR COMRADES IN W. C. T. U. BONDS:—I have read with sorrow and alarm the accounts as published in The Voice, and verified by the local press of New Haven, of the drunken carousal among Yale students following the recent intercollegiate football game; also of the startling facts that there are sixty-six saloons, some of them the lowest kind of brothels and gambling houses, near the Yale University, all located within two blocks of the college campus and the green; and that students are permitted to have intoxicating liquors in their rooms and at their class spreads.

We have all read with the deepest regret the revelations regarding the signing of a petition to license the sale of liquors in the immediate neighborhood of Princeton University, that old and honored institution so closely identified with the great Presbyterian church of the United States; and now we note with joy and thanksgiving that this university has listened to the appeals made by our unions and the Christian men and women throughout the country, and has forbidden students to enter any place where intoxicating liquors are sold as a beverage, or to bring such liquors into their rooms, and that the famous grill room in Princeton Inn is doomed! We also have reason to be profoundly thankful that Harvard University has taken a decided stand in favor of no-license in the city of Cambridge, where the university is located, and in forbidding liquors to be furnished at the class spreads. For eleven years now Cambridge, with the aid of the university, has carried no-license; also that the University of Chicago has taken an equally uncompromising stand.

In view of the alarming facts concerning Yale University, I would earnestly urge you to use all your official and personal influence to secure the following early action:

First, that all local unions, at the earliest convenient time, pass resolutions expressing deep regret that the Yale authorities permit students to enter saloons, and to have intoxicating liquors in their dormitories, and to have them served at their class spreads, also expressing horror and grief at exposing young men, the majority of them in their teens and away from the restraining influences of home, to the frightful dangers of the saloons and brothels that infest the neighborhood of this great and venerable institution. Let the resolutions forcibly declare that until these evils are remedied we will do all in our power to have our sons and brothers seek their education at institutions where the environments are less dangerous. The resolutions should also urge upon the authorities at Yale to help carry no-license in New Haven, as has been done in the city of Cambridge by the help of Harvard professors and students for these eleven successive years; also to have as far as possible the intercollegiate sports held in places that are free from saloons.

A copy of the resolutions should be forwarded either to Rev. Timothy Dwight, D.D., LL.D., president Yale University, New Haven, Conn., or to Henry P. Wright, Ph.D., LL.D., Dean of the college faculty, New Haven, Conn., and copies should also be sent to THE UNION SIGNAL, Chicago, and to The Voice, New York.

As this desired reform at Yale is of such grave and far-reaching importance (for if Yale will take its stand on this question by the side of Harvard, Princeton, and the University of Chicago, all our leading colleges in America must follow or greatly lose patronage), I urge,

Second, that each union secure the signatures of a number of parents to the following petition, and send the same to one of the Yale addresses given above, also a copy each to THE UNION SIGNAL and to The Voice. Either written or printed copies of this petition can be used.

PETITION.

To Timothy Dwight, D.D., LL.D., President Yale University, New Haven, Conn.
To Henry P. Wright, D.D., LL.D., Dean Yale University, New Haven, Conn.

As the students in our universities and colleges are in large majority only lads in their teens and away from the restraining influences of home, and in view of the fact that these students are the very flower of American youth, and are to be the future leaders in literature, science, education and government, as well as in many of the industrial enterprises, and of the fact that the use of intoxicants is exceedingly detrimental to fixed habits of study, to mental clearness and to moral character, while the example of drinking habits among students is very widely corrupting among the young men outside of college, and who look upon college men as examples of cultured manliness,

Therefore, We, the undersigned parents respectfully petition:

1. That you will forbid students under your charge to enter places where alcoholic liquors are sold for beverage use, to keep such liquors in their dormitories or rooms, or to have them furnished at their class or other spreads and banquets.

2. That you will use your great influence to secure prohibition of the sale of intoxicants within the city of New Haven, the same as has been secured at Cambridge.

Until such action is taken by your honored body, much as we honor Yale University, we feel compelled to send our sons and brothers to institutions where these provisions for safety against intoxicating drinks have been adopted.

In addition to the above suggestions, it would serve a good purpose if you and other friends in your neighborhood should write individual letters to the authorities at Yale, touching these same reforms that we so much desire.

It would also serve a good purpose if our sisters throughout the country would secure the adoption of protests, or similar resolution to the above, by churches, clubs, young people's associations, etc., with which they may be connected, and have the same forwarded to the addresses as given above. It would also help to a successful result if the action taken by a union or other organization should be published in the local press.

Yours for conserving the powers of America's young manhood and protecting its homes,

Frances E. Willard

"Georgia Prison Atrocities."

THE above is the caption of two articles in the Vanguard of Missouri. The clippings are sent with an appeal to let the facts, if true, be circulated so widely that "the storm of indignation which they will arouse will sweep such a condition of affairs out of existence"; and the question is asked, "Are there not white-ribboners in Georgia who will crusade this evil till it is abolished?" THE UNION SIGNAL can not verify the statements of the articles referred to, but it would seem from other details in the public print that the convict system of Georgia is of the lowest and most brutal type. We quote a few of the points made in these articles, believing that our white-ribbon women of that state will fathom whatever there is of vileness and inhumanity, and lend their speedy aid to a better condition.

Four thousand two hundred prisoners are in the chain gangs and stockades in Georgia.

Georgia still adheres to the infamous lease system adopted by most of the southern states soon after the war. The penitentiary convicts number 2,377. Less than one-tenth are white. Georgia has no penitentiary building whatever, and under the present system there is no permanent location of the prisoners. They are scattered about in twenty-two different counties. The laws made for the protection of these are a dead letter in the convict camps.

An official investigation of the camps two years ago brought to light some of the most horrible abuses. The investigating committee declared the punishment of some of the convicts to be "the most brutal ever inflicted by one human being upon another." It was found that convicts were being starved, and some had gone half-naked and barefooted all winter. Some had been so severely punished that they had died insane. In some of the camps no fire was allowed during the coldest weather.

The latest published reports show the average number of female convicts to be about sixty-five. Official investigations have established the truth of the declaration of a Georgia editor when he said, "A woman sent to prison in this state is made the plaything of beastly passion." During one of these investigations, one female convict was found who had borne seven children during her confinement; another had borne six, and so on.

There are most horrible instances of the abuse of women given in these articles, quoted, it is affirmed, from Mr. Phil G. Byrd's report published last September. "Mr. Byrd was sent by Governor Atkinson to make an inspection of the camps"; and yet the writer says that much of what exists is too horrible to be put in the public print.

This is sufficient we are sure to set good women to work in the fair state of Georgia. Would it not be well to have Mrs. Barney do missionary work nearer at home when she returns from Australia?

Rev. Richard D. Harlan Explains.

WE are glad to publish Rev. Mr. Harlan's statement to the effect that Princeton's message to Amherst did not have "the bottle accompaniment." It would be in order now for Amherst to rise to a "question of privilege," for no one, as yet, has discredited the "bottle accompaniment" in its case.

Editor of The Union Signal, Chicago, Ill.:

In THE UNION SIGNAL of January 27 there appears the following paragraph:

"About the middle of the banquet A. C. James and H. L. Bridgman arrived as a delegation from the Amherst association, dining in another room. They bore a bottle of champagne draped in Amherst colors and a greeting of good fellowship. They were cheered, and Rev. Richard D. Harlan and Job E. Hodges were delegated to return the compliment."

As to what our Amherst brethren brought with them, I cannot speak accurately, for I did not observe their entrance; I only heard their very sober message of fraternal good will to Princeton University. With Mr. Job Hodges I had the honor of delivering a similar message in the name of my Alma Mater to a college whose record in the republic of letters is a most distinguished one; but the "return" message did not have the bottle accompaniment, if I may so express it, as might naturally be inferred to have been the case from the juxtaposition of the last two sentences in the above paragraph.

Yours sincerely,

RICHARD D. HARLAN.

Young Woman's Branch.

College Students and the Temperance Reform.

AN underlying principle of this government is the provision made for the proper education of its future citizens.

But education is more than book-learning, and in these later days, attention is paid to physical as well as mental training, so that no college or school is well equipped for its work without, in addition to its facilities for mental culture, its gymnasium, its campus, and its provision for outdoor sports. But no matter what the equipment for mental and physical training, if there be no moral training, education fails of its purpose.

It is to the college men and women of the present that we look for the future leaders of the nation.

If the college woman lacked morality, or religion, immediately there would be the cry that "Higher education for woman was a failure." But she does not. Around the young women in college, and in all their schools there still lingers the touch of home life, and the house-mother of the cottage or institution is held in a measure responsible for the morality and womanly behavior of the young women.

It is not always so with the young men. Going away from home in their teens, boarding in clubs and dormitories, exposed to the temptation of the saloon and kindred evils, unchecked by the restraining influence of home life, too often the young man becomes familiar with social drinking, and tainted with skepticism.

The Christian sentiment of most colleges is clustered about the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., and these organizations are doing valiant service and leading in the Student Volunteer movement for missions.

But is this all that can be done for the moral welfare of the students? We think not.

In opening a large workingman's hotel in New York city recently, the founder did not mention poor people at all, but said, "There are no poor people in this country, if they have health and good habits. Their income may be limited for a time, but they have capital. The only poor man in America is the man who is sick or has bad habits." And the one bad habit that causes more of sorrow, of poverty, of failure in life than any thing else is the use of strong drink. True, a man may take an occasional glass of wine or champagne and not seem to suffer harm, but science tells us that alcohol taken in even small quantities has the power to create an appetite for more. No man or woman taking a social glass expects to be brought so low that he or she may get drunk or be a drunkard, but every drunkard began that way.

There is need then in the college life of to-day of an organization that will stand for total abstinence among students.

But further than that there is need that the influence of those in authority be directed against the saloon itself, whether it be in the form of a social club, maintained by the patronage of students, a grill-room in a fashionable hotel for the convenience of visitors, or a more or less popular saloon or hotel. College fun is all right, but immorality, impurity and drunkenness are sins in college students as well as in the slums of our cities. Stanford University has recently notified a number of students that their presence was no longer desired because of immoral habits. Harvard for a number of years has used all its influence to keep no-license in Cambridge. The influence of the larger colleges is so great that they could drive the saloons out of any town or city where they may be if that influence were only properly directed.

But there is still other work that can be done by and for the college student, and the Christian students have as much influence along these lines as the others if they will only use their influence boldly for Christ's sake.

These are some of the ways they can use their influence:

1. That there shall be no liquors at college banquets or at college spreads.

2. That work for total abstinence be made a part of the regular Christian work of the college.

3. That sentiment be forcefully expressed against all meeting of students in room adjacent to or connected with places where liquors are sold.

4. That books containing the latest findings of science in regard to the effects of alcoholics be placed in the libraries, with the same emphasis put upon them that is given to missionary works.

5. A temperance meeting at least once a term at such time and place as will reach the greatest number of students.

6. Consideration of the social and economic phases of the temperance reform in literary societies, social gatherings and debates.

7. Systematizing pledge signing, that the influence of the educated men and women of the country may be on the side of the temperance reform, and in favor of sobriety, righteousness and purity of life

Systematic Work Tells.

What one Industrious Y Accomplished.

DEAR Y EDITOR:—You will be interested in the result of the venture made by our Y girls, and particularly interested, I'm sure, in hearing just how we did it. First, we set to work to raise ten dollars as best we might and invest it in W. T. P. A. books and leaflets. And you would have been surprised to see how quickly the money came. Two Y teas, a musical and some "honorary" members' dues, and we had it. Then we ordered our little stock of books and leaflets, and when it came how pretty the dainty gift books were, and how full of good things the leaflets.

There was "Driftwood," and "Nineteen Beautiful Years," and "Glimpses of Fifty Years," and the "White-Ribbon Portfolio," and samples of THE UNION SIGNAL, and The Young Crusader and all the rest.

The next problem was to find some one to take them to the people, and we found just the woman to do it among our own white-ribboners.

She wasn't a public speaker, but she had longed to give herself to our work, and gladly took our little stock in hand, not to give away, but to sell it for us. We agreed to pay her a small amount each week, and she went from house to house with the beautiful books and her sweet smile and sold as other agents sell, where she could, and at every home she left samples of THE UNION SIGNAL, The Young Crusader and some of the leaflets.

You will be surprised when I tell you that the discount allowed us on the literature not only paid our agent, but that at the end of two weeks we had a profit above all expenses for our treasury. That was a year ago, and many of the sales were for Christmas presents. This year the state convention met here and the Y's provided fully half the funds for its entertainment, and it was the money from our "literature canvass" that paid it. Any union, W or Y, that needs an increase of membership or money or interest, can secure all three by employing one of its bright Christian women at a fair salary to act as "literature agent," under the auspices of the union for the supplies furnished by the W. T. P. A. I shall be glad if THE UNION SIGNAL can recommend the plan to our unions everywhere. The literature sells by this plan better than by taking orders, because it is so pretty that if the people see it, it "sells itself." Then there are women everywhere dependent on themselves for support, who have had the "arrest of thought," and who are anxious to give their time and energy to W. C. T. U. work. But they must live, and here is their opportunity and ours. It is not a theory; we've tried it thoroughly and it is practical and helpful.

Yours, with love and hope,

B. J. B.

Y's at Work.

PENNSYLVANIA.

THE Y editor has "borrowed" the following items from the letter of Miss H. Frances Jones, official reporter for Pennsylvania, as being of special interest to the Y's:

"The newly elected state secretary, Miss A. E. Thomas, sends me the following note:

"Our Y reports are ready. They not only contain Mrs. Ross's report of last year's work, but also a full directory of the Y unions of the state and the plan of work for this year. Each Y (and W. too) should have one. They are sold for three cents apiece, or thirty cents a dozen. I will be glad to send to any one who can not buy. Send orders to me.

"Miss Laura A. Guthrie, Armstrong county, writes:

"The Y's of the county are going to devote this winter's work largely to the Temple.

"Apollo First Y are untiring with the W's in holding public meetings in the churches, collections for the Temple. They have with the W's taken a column in a weekly paper—The News Record—which column will be edited in the interest of our work. Mrs. Kinter, superintendent of music, held a Longfellow's evening last month. Refreshments were served and a delightful social time enjoyed by all present. This Y took part in a stamp social given by county president."

OHIO.

THROUGH the prompt and kind coöperation of the W and Y unions, it was made possible to arrange a route for our state secretary, Miss Frances H. Ensign, covering fourteen engagements in seven days, at minimum expense. All the unions have been benefited by her presence in Cleveland, and four engagements at Berea on the same trip have left little to be desired in the way of opportunity.

On the evening of January 10 she spoke before the Christian Endeavor society of East Madison Avenue Congregational church, her earnest words of admonition and cheer receiving the closest attention from the large number present. This society had changed their meeting night in order to have Miss Ensign, and after listening to her appeal for more direct work along this line, the pastor, Rev. Thomas, expressed his appreciation of her talk, and made a motion to extend her a vote of thanks, which was promptly seconded. In putting the motion, Miss Clyne, president, took occasion to express her hope that all who had heard the earnest words would not only appreciate them, but carry out their idea in action in their daily lives. After the Christian Endeavor meeting Miss Ensign held a short meeting with the Willard Y's.

January 11, at the Franklin Avenue Congregational church, Miss Ensign spoke for the West Side Y. W. C. T. U., giving "Glimpses of a Great Convention," that held at Toronto. After a graphic description of different interesting phases of the Convention, she read some of the resolutions which set forth the platform and position of our World's Union, and then went backward all along the line till she came to the groups of workers here and there, known as local unions, and showed how the faithful, conscientious work of these made possible the magnificent whole which belts the globe with its band of purity, and how the common purpose has brought about a larger sisterhood, a more whole humanity than ever existed before. The C. E. Society of this church met earlier than usual, and attended the meeting in a body, furnishing the choir. The kindly introduction of the union by Rev. B. G. Newton, pastor, and the appreciative audience made our worker feel very "comfortable."

Miss Georgiana Richardson sang for the offertory "Battle Hymn of the Y's," further showing the purpose of the Young Woman's Branch to lift that shadow, and make the homes of the future free from the trail of the serpent of intemperance.

January 12, at the Willson Avenue M. E. church, Miss Ensign spoke for the Y union, which bears her name. Miss Nellie E. Fraser, vice-president, from that church, presided. Miss Gombert read the Scripture lesson, Rev. Dewey, the pastor, leading in prayer, after which a trio rendered a most beautiful selection. Miss Eda L. French, of the West Side Y. gave an illustration in ribbons of the cost of various articles in the year 1895. Miss Faucett then rendered a beautiful solo, after which Miss Ensign was introduced and spoke on "Do Thyself no Harm." Along scientific lines she gave much information, citing certain patent medicines in common use, and the percentage of alcohol contained therein as given by the Massachusetts board of health. Touching upon different lines of work, and the general progress of our beloved cause, she likened the present insolent attitude of the legalized liquor traffic to the drunken revel of Belshazzar, and the temperance workers to the faithful soldiers of Cyrus, who, without the walls, were busily turning the river Euphrates from its course, and when they had succeeded, entered the city by the river bed and recaptured it. God speed the day when this shall be done.

Sunday evening, January 16, under the auspices of Cuyahoga county Y. W. C. T. U., Miss Ensign spoke at Scovill avenue M. E. church, taking for her subject "Queen Esther and her Mission." Never was the sweet story more gracefully told, and beneath the beautiful words was the strong and earnest purpose apparent in the appeal to the Queen Esther of our time, the young people, to seek the king, public opinion, and petition that the wicked purposes of Haaman, the legalized liquor traffic, be not accomplished. The large audience listened attentively, and many words of appreciation were spoken afterward. Mr. Herbert Repp, of the Ensign Y, read the scripture lesson and the pastor, Rev. A. E. Church, gave the organization most kindly words of introduction and cheer.

The annual reception to honorary members and friends, given by the West Side Y. W. C. T. U. New Year's day, at Gordon avenue M. E. church, was a decided success, socially, and seven new members were added to our number. Mrs. R. J. Trego, state and National evangelist, wished us a Happy New Year; our own members and friends furnished music, and seated at an immense Y table, we enjoyed the good things that had been prepared, while Rev. Place, pastor of the church, and Mrs. S. P. Adams, president of the Willard W (local), added warm words of cheer and also wished us many happy New Years.

World's W. C. T. U.

MY DEAR COMRADES:—I heartily wish you all a most happy New Year. May our work be abundantly blessed, and as the months roll on may we, when difficulties arise, remember how wonderfully God has guided us.

Since the World's Convention I have been gathering together many scattered threads, also in a few days our reports will be in hand from the printer. I had hoped you would have received them ere this, but the printing has been in process ever since my return home. The reports will contain Miss Willard's address and superintendents' reports in addition to the Convention reports. Great impetus will be given on every side if white-ribboners and others will secure orders; the money and orders can either be sent to Mrs. Sanderson, Danville, Quebec, Canada, or to me. In every case please give the address where to be forwarded clearly. Price 35 cents, or 1*s*. 6*d*. post free. I have also a leaflet, "Reasons why we Should Wear the White Ribbon," price 1*s*., or 25 cents per 100. If every local union would buy a copy of Miss Willard's new edition of "Woman and Temperance," and lend it amongst the members it would be found to be a source of inspiration to all.

Ireland is going ahead famously. The Sligo W. C. T. U. has recently prevented several licenses being granted, and when I remember how anxious they were to understand the rudimentary principles of our work, their progress seems most cheering. Dublin white-ribboners, assisted by the Catholic W. C. T. U., are collecting information with regard to the serving of intoxicants to little children to bring before the Royal Commission. The Athy union is making a great success with its coffee van.

Miss Kanwady has accepted the presidency of the Syria W. C. T. U. She writes me that they hope to start active work at Beyrout on the return of their pastor, Mr. Zurub.

Brazil: Miss Smith, national secretary, says drinking habits are gaining ground, but she adds a most happy sign is that the young people are taking a real interest in our work. At the Collegio Piracicabono stereopticon views have recently been given illustrating the evils of intoxicants.

Africa: Port Elizabeth W. C. T. U. has been providing refreshments on the cricket and football fields, also at the agricultural show, with excellent results.

Australia: We are hoping soon to hear of the safe arrival of Mrs. Kirk at Melbourne. Our Australian sisters added greatly to the interest of our Convention, and we are all grateful for the representative capable delegates sent us. New South Wales has been actively opposing the opening of public houses on Sundays.

West Australia: At the annual convention this autumn the mayor and Prime Minister of the Colony took part in the meetings.

World's Missionaries: Delightful accounts of Mrs. Barney's work in Australia are often arriving. She will probably soon be in Ceylon and then come on to Paris and probably to England.

The Misses Vincent and Cummins write cheerily from Canada. After a series of meetings in Canada they will proceed to the United States and then return to England.

Miss Parrish rejoices that Japan has won the banner given by Mr. Ramsay and awarded to the country which made the greatest proportionate increase in its membership. The recent meetings in the North Island were most successful and five new unions were organized as the result. Probably Miss Parrish will soon go on to Ceylon. We are hoping to be able soon to send some one to Burmah and several other countries are waiting to begin work when one of our missionaries can be sent.

May I remind all W. C. T. unions to pay one cent or one half-penny per member to the World's W. C. T. U. annually; if this is done we shall be able to send gifted, consecrated women who are ready to go to help countries which are naturally looking to us to open our temperance work, and how it is needed God alone knows. Our funds have recently been chiefly devoted to Australia, India and Japan. The small expense of sending our missionaries to various lands is a mere trifle compared with the glorious results which invariably follow their efforts. I believe as our work becomes more and more known different countries will each provide us with the means to send out a missionary as their special contribution; in the meantime we are dependent on our cents and half-pennies chiefly to carry on our extensive ever-increasing work.

Mrs. Butler has resigned the superintendency of our purity department. After the strong resolutions unanimously adopted by the World's Convention at Toronto, the utterances of our president and the absolute stand taken by the Convention against all proposals to regulate vice, we regret that Mrs. Butler could not see her way clear to stay with us, especially when we remember how all over the world we are leading the movement for the absolute prohibition of vice, and we cannot see how the cause for which Mrs. Butler has worked so devotedly can be helped by her withdrawal from the white-ribbon movement. A comrade, trusty and true is, I believe, about to take Mrs. Butler's place; in the meantime we wish Mrs. Butler success in her work.

Miss Willard is working away bravely and we hope the result of her work will be Headquarters free from debt for the National W. C. T. U. of America. Nothing daunts Miss Willard; we wish her speedy success.

Lady Henry Somerset has resigned the presidency of the B. W. T. A. at the urgent request of her medical advisers who insist on her resting from the great demands made by such a position. No woman has done so much for temperance work in England as she has done. She has made it easier for each one of us. One of the crowning joys of life is endeavoring to claim the world for Christ; this she has done. Though we have recently had to entirely differ from her with regard to her proposals for the state regulation of vice, yet we know she is as anxious to have a pure world as any person and how she has worked for this end! The remembrance will be to many thousands one of the blessed memories of life. I am affectionately,

Your comrade,

AGNES E. SLACK.

News from the Field.

New Jersey.

TO our platform of words, "organize, educate, agitate," has been added "coöperate," in order that our brave forces in the "Garden" state may miss no opportunity for carrying forth the exalted spirit of the Crusade into every door of church, school, young people's societies, agricultural fairs, and into the widely read pages of the newspapers. So that, in truth, "New Jersey shall be redeemed."

The twenty-fourth annual convention of the state union, held in our capital city of Revolutionary fame, we claim was the best convention of whatever kind or condition, that has ever been held in the state.

Our president, Mrs. Emma Bourne, never did better work, or gave a more forceful annual address than at this convention. She was easy master of every situation, and her grace and eloquence were assuring and inspiring to the three hundred delegates present, representing the 7,838 members of the state.

The four general officers, the Y and L. T. L. secretaries, nineteen of the twenty-one county presidents, and fifteen of the twenty-three superintendents of departments were in attendance, beside the large number of delegates and visitors at each of the eight successive sessions, the interest manifested seeming to wax stronger with the days.

The corresponding secretary, Mrs. Isabella H. Demarest, opened her report by quoting Mark Antony's words: "If you have tears to shed, prepare to shed them now;" explaining that this was the best quotation for the preparation of the dry bones of a secretary's report. But the year has been one of gains. Unions say they have grown in knowledge, efficiency, influence, interest, membership, financially, and above all, spiritually.

We have had 240 speakers in the state who have addressed 2,010 public meetings, speakers of wide national reputation, headed by our Miss Willard.

Salem, though not the banner county in the National, is yet proud to be the banner county of the banner state, she having won the laurels this year for the largest increase in membership, 151.

The treasurer, Mrs. Henrietta L. Caminade, showed that $29,411.47 had been received for the local work during the year, and $24,266.27 of that amount was paid out. The total receipts of the state union for 1897 were $4.869.21, and the disbursements $4,453.78.

The evening attractions during these convention days were: John G. Woolley, Mrs. Ella A. Boole on Y evening and demonstration night. All were of first quality, the enthusiasm having reached its highest point when the "White-Ribbon Star Spangled Banner" was sung by Miss Ethel Bond, while the author of the inspiring words, Miss Kate Lunden, who was made state lecturer of foreign work, stood at her right. Miss Bond waved as she sang, our National ensign bordered with white ribbon, while each county delegation responded thereto by waving flags, bannerets, handkerchiefs, etc., thereby presenting a scene that will live long in the minds and hearts of the workers.

"Demonstration night," looked forward to with such uncertain, questioning eyes last year, will hereafter be an assured part of the state convention's programs, Elizabeth, the convention's city for '98, having already promised such a feature. Since Convention days the work throughout the state has gone steadily forward. New unions are being constantly added to our list, and many new members gained in old unions.

Mrs. Bourne journeys in all directions for the benefit of the work, and Mrs. Demarest, who is rapidly taking front rank as a brilliant and accurate speaker, is much in the field and the work in New Jersey is bound to go forward.

Mrs. Demarest has just completed a very successful tour of the Gloucester county unions, having delivered seventeen successive addresses. Atlantic county has now extended to her a like call:

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, of New York, whose name had become familiar through the pages of THE UNION SIGNAL, is now in the state and is all that has been claimed for her. She strengthens every member with whom she comes in contact, and wins many new ones to the organization. In one of our South Jersey towns she and her daughter, Miss Florence Bullock, won thirty-two new members. This we consider a good record, worthy the thoughtful attention of every state that is pushing forward to victory.

Mrs. S. S. Downs, daughter-in-law of Mrs. S. J. C. Downs, so long New Jersey's sturdy leader, has resigned the presidency of the Willard union, Newark, to take up her residence in Denver, Col., where her husband has accepted an important business position. We commend her to the love of the Denver women.

Iowa.

IOWA W. C. T. U. women propose to replenish their treasuries this year by saving "wrappers" and "trade-marks," but will in no way neglect the regular lines of work by so doing. Much enthusiasm is manifested by the unions in raising money for the Temple. Several have increased their pledges from ten dollars to twenty-five, and even fifty dollars. The pledge of $100 given at state convention by the eighteenth district has been paid with an additional twenty-five dollars. Mrs. Etta Wooster, of Calliope, wishes to pledge ten dollars on condition that the $300,000 is raised, and hopes others in the eighteenth district will join her in similar pledges.

Mrs. L. G. Johnson spent six weeks in this district, organized nine unions and added 160 members to the roll in old and new unions. Mrs. Johnson is doing grand work in the state. Many unions are holding medal contests and we hope many more will do so. Write the National superintendent, Mrs. Adelia Carman, The Temple, Chicago, for full instructions regarding contest work. We also find a growing interest in the course of study for local unions. Cresco's latest is a "Klondike" social, result, $7.10 for the "Christian Home Orphanage" at Council Bluffs. This union is always wide-awake and up to date in all good enterprises.

Death has entered our ranks since state convention, taking two of our valued district presidents, Mrs. Galena Idle, of Letts, and Mrs. D. E. Voris, of Marion.

The Y and L. T. L. secretaries are both in the field in the interests of their departments. Mrs. Lora Bennett, president of the fourteenth district, is also out giving her illustrated lecture on temperance and temperance workers, using a stereopticon to bring out the pictures. Our state president, Mrs. Dunham, is busy with pen and typewriter, directing and pushing the work and encouraging the workers. Our corresponding secretary has spoken every Sunday since her return from National Convention. Our legislative superintendent has been busy getting the Franchise, Narcotics and Purity petitions circulated; will tell you of their reception by Iowa legislators later.

Mrs. Lilian Cole-Bethel, superintendent parliamentary usage in the Ohio W. C. T. U., began work in our state at Mount Pleasant, January 24. At Burlington, she has a large and enthusiastic class under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Bethel has a national reputation and our state is fortunate in securing her services. She is a very practical, thorough teacher and we recommend her to all the unions and clubs desiring help in parliamentary lines—and what society does not?

West Virginia.

MISS JESSIE ACKERMANN recently spoke to a large and appreciative audience in Charleston. We wish this highly talented woman could speak in every city and town of this state.

By invitation of Mrs. Raymond, the wife of the president of the West Virginia University, our state president, Mrs. N. R. C. Morrow, addressed the Woman's League of the University quite recently, the subject, the "Nineteenth Century Woman."

The state executive committee, feeling the imperative need of a state paper, have made arrangements for the White Ribbon to make its appearance this week. This will be a great help to the work all over the state.

Our state organizer Miss Marie Burton, of Charleston, is quite successful in her work.

The St. Albans union gave a supper last week which had as the most attractive feature a "relic table," on which was found the heirlooms of many families of the town. As it will not be possible to mention the half on exhibition we will notice a few bearing the following cards: Cane, made from the flagstaff shot down in the hands of Ensign Grant, afterward President Grant, at the battle of Chapultepec, Mexico. One of the first copies of the Declaration of Independence ever printed. Home spun linen bed-tick made from flax grown on the ground where Cincinnati, Ohio, now stands. A small spinning wheel very old. Needle book made in 1750. The display of handsome silver of great age, value and quantity was magnificent, as was also the fine china. There was also a quantity of brass, coins, iron, linen, beadwork, manuscripts and valuable old papers of all sorts.

Physical Culture.

At very slow pace physical education is taking its place in the school curriculum. It is true, about all the large cities, and some of the smaller ones, have given the matter more or less attention; but changes and modifications which are repeatedly occurring show that systematic physical discipline is not yet assured to the American child, and is not likely to be fully established until laws are enacted making this branch of education compulsory. The facts in the case are such, that when there is a "waked-up-purpose" on the part of the people, even the extra expense necessarily incurred will not prove an insurmountable obstacle in securing legislation.

A new department leaflet has been issued which is the special field document for the year. It is entitled, "Defective Sight and Hearing," and is based upon investigations made in several cities, showing that prevailing defects in these senses indicate the low physical condition of children attending the public schools. It is a leaflet which should be read and seriously considered by each local union. If these are freely distributed in homes sending pupils to the schools, a new light will be thrown upon the necessity for looking after the body as well as the mind. These leaflets will be furnished at about the cost of mailing to any one who will apply to the National or to the state superintendents of this department. Send two cent stamp for sample copy.

As an important step at this particular time, we earnestly ask local unions to respectfully urge boards of education to appoint a competent medical examiner who shall properly investigate the physical condition of the children. With some instruction the teachers can assist in testing sight and hearing. Very limited investigation shows that these defects are serious indeed.

Several other important leaflets are under consideration. Any one ordering the department package, costing seventy-five cents, will be entitled to all new literature issued during the year, the same to be mailed promptly, when ready. Some of the ablest writers and specialists have contributed to this package. It affords valuable material for instruction and interesting papers to be read before county conventions, presenting facts which if once understood, will show plainly the importance of this department as a temperance measure. A printed list of the literature will be mailed to all ordering the new leaflet mentioned.

Soldiers and Sailors.

DEAR FELLOW WORKERS: — The first work before us now is the Gallinger and Ellis bill to prohibit liquors in all government buildings. This will remove the canteen from six National Soldiers' Homes, where the bar-room is being run by the government of our country, and will also remove it from the navy, where Secretary Long has thought it wise to put it so as to make drinking places more respectable. I am trying to secure all data possible about these homes (also the state homes) so that I can bring it before our honorable secretary. Will you not help me by sending me every item of news gathered? I want to know the number of deaths due to intemperance, the amount of beer sold per day, the number of crimes to be traced to the drink curse; who will help me? I have tried to glean it from state superintendents of my department but have not been successful as so many of them do not live in towns where these homes are situated. At the Erie Home, Pennsylvania (state home), no canteen is running and no saloon is near, so that drunkenness is very little known. A soldier cannot remain there if he is a habitual drunkard, and I was told of cases where old veterans come there for a refuge, knowing that they were not obliged to run the gauntlet of the liquor evil. There is no W. C. T. U. in this important city. In this home nearly all the pension is sent to the soldier's family. In reading the report of the inspector of Soldiers' homes I find that Waupaca, Wis.; Kearney, N. J.; Hot Springs, S. Dak., are the only places where the W. C. T. U. has entered this open door for good.

The commandant of the state home of Ohio, Sandusky, speaks of "the lack of music to make life there less monotonous." Indiana commandant reports, "No provision is made for religious services, but is sorely needed." Colorado commandant says, "The W. R. C. gives literary entertainments, which wind up with a dance in which the 'old boys' are given the preference over the kids there." Many others speak of gospel services and entertainment needed to make life brighter for these men. It seems to me now is the time for our dear workers to step to the front and seek an entrance. Do not forget to hold meetings February 22 wherever practicable. Invite the G. A. R. veterans and the state militia to the meetings. Circulate literature and department pledge cards; do everything possible to instruct and interest.

Who will help the seamen's friend, Mrs. A. Burdick, 509 Hudson street, New York city? For years she has bravely worked, and now unless help comes soon the Mizpah reading room and Convalescent Home must go down and one more "life line" will be withdrawn, one more harbor light will go out, and many a weary mariner will be wrecked who might have been saved had we kept the light trimmed and burning.

Comfort bags should be made thus: Use cretonne or any strong cloth. Make bag 12x14 inches with a strong drawing string in the top to open and close. Put in it buttons, needles, thread, scissors, knife, bandages rolled, small bunch of white cotton, court plaster, comb, brush, pulse warmers, pencil, paper, envelopes, leaflets, Testament, gospel hymns, two pledge cards (asking to have one returned signed, the other for sailor to sign and keep), UNION SIGNAL and state paper, and a kind, motherly letter giving name of donor, with request for a reply. This is an ideal bag, but all these articles need not be put in.

Wall pockets are made much like the comfort bags, only of table or stiff cloth, filled with clippings of good reading matter. A standing army of 25,000 men, 25,000 more gathered in soldiers' homes, 300,000 G. A. R. men and 3,000,000 men sailing our seas will give us much to do if we are faithful and ready to do it.

Please let me hear from all who are interested. Two loan libraries are ready, but need copies of Ben Hur, and a few books similar in style.

Christian Citizenship and Legislation.

The legislative situation is constantly changing. The bill prohibiting the sale of alcoholic liquors in all government buildings was referred by the speaker of the house to the committee on public buildings and grounds. Friends of the measure are striving to have it transferred to the committee on alcoholic liquor traffic, where it rightfully belongs. This is a most important and far-reaching measure, affecting not only the government buildings in the District of Columbia, but soldiers' homes, "canteens," emigrant stations, etc. Every church, young people's society and W. C. T. U. should pour in petitions now! Oh! if Christian people only realized their power through a steady flow of petitions, they certainly would do this much to help win the battle.

The Age of Protection bill is in the hands of a sub-committee, with Hon. Case Broderick, of Kansas, a good friend to the cause, as chairman. Jesse Overstreet, of Indiana, and D. A. DeArmond, of Missouri, make up this committee. Letters to these men from their own states will greatly aid in bringing the matter forward. The anti-gambling bill is also in the hands of a sub-committee consisting of Hon. S. W. McCall, of Massachusetts, chairman, R. W. Parker, New Jersey, and O. W. Underwood, of Alabama. The anti-cigaret bill has been largely petitioned for, and is also in the hands of a sub-committee—Hon. G. W. Ray, of New York, chairman, R. W. Parker and W. L. Terry, of Arkansas. In the multiplicity of bills, these moral measures are very apt to be overlooked, but personal letters from home folks will keep them reminded that we are looking after them. Do help us by letters, petitions and prayers.

Yours in the battle,
MARGARET DYE ELLIS.

Evangelistic.

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR 1898–9.

DEAR SISTERS:—The usual evangelistic work, outlined in my "Hints and Helps for Evangelistic Workers," is always before as as we face a new year of effort. This work is especially necessary for the new unions constantly organized. It is well, however, that each year have a special keynote. I would especially emphasize the following lines of work for this year's campaign.

Rescue work has been the mission of this department from the beginning. Let us push this special work everywhere. By meetings in halls, school houses, depots, prisons and jails, camp and outdoor services, let us seek to "rescue the perishing." To this door of opportunity the pierced hands ever point.

Let great care be exercised this year, to emphasize in all public meetings the foundations of our work. What are these? Our sure and only reliance upon the Holy Spirit and the Word of God; the earnest invitation to a personal Christ; the duty of total abstinence; the presentation, as in former days, of the pledge; the convention evangelistic hour from 11 to 12 A. M.; the noontide prayer.

Let the movement to arouse the church, so fully outlined in "Hints and Helps" and so successfully inaugurated in many localities, be continued.

The presence at each state convention, of the National evangelistic superintendent, or one of the National evangelists, and at each district or county convention of the state superintendent or evangelist, would greatly add to the power of these gatherings. Wherever possible, hold an evangelistic service the evening preceding a convention. Also an early morning devotional service, in addition to the convention evangelistic hour. Where this pastoral visitation can not be personal, let a letter of greeting and exhortation be sent to each convention.

Let each state and county superintendent remember that one of her first duties is to secure a local evangelistic superintendent in each union and to inspire her for work.

Believing that the little book, "Hints and Helps," in the hands of each local superintendent will result in greater spirituality and harmony, I urge all presidents, state and county superintendents and organizers to assist in its distribution.

The department of work in almshouses, having been merged in the evangelistic, let our local superintendents plan frequent visits to these institutions, establish libraries and frequent Sabbath services, coöperate with state boards of corrections and charities, and by every means better the condition of the unfortunate and outcast by carrying light into their darkness and Christ's peace to their hearts.

State or district superintendents desiring to send a copy of these recommendations, and of the question circular, to each local union, can obtain the same from the National superintendent. For prices address

Organizers' Corner.

DEAR COMRADES:—After National Convention in Buffalo, Miss Henderson and myself made our way—and these three words have a very literal meaning—slowly, through storm and cold, to the Southland. We are now giving our time to Texas. We find the workers here in many places much disheartened on account of the stagnating effect of the late yellow fever scare and the present depression caused by the low price of cotton. The whisky element seems to thrive under such conditions and many bold strides are being taken into territory previously impregnable. If there was one word more necessary to be said than another at such times as these, I should say it would be in favor of greater diligence on the part of our white-ribbon sisters. The saloons are not dying on account of yellow fever, four-cent cotton or "hard times" of any other sort. They do not falter in their work because their cause is not "popular in town."

White-ribboners are often too fearful. They do not advertise widely enough; they undervalue printer's ink. They need to have a larger portion of "holy boldness." Often a speaker is met with, "You haven't been in a place like this, I reckon; our cause isn't popular; it's always this way when we attempt anything. If we have a meeting there's sure to be a show in town." You ask, as the "dodgers" of the "show" fall about you like snowflakes in a western blizzard, "Have you advertised your meeting?" "Oh, yes, we've had a local in the weekly paper twice and Miss Blank said she'd attend to having it announced in all the churches. We can't afford to have handbills, you know." In this very direction I believe our unions fail in making their work known and therefore "popular." Dear sisters, make our cause popular by your own faith in it, and work for it. Refuse to see a dark side, or to talk about it and others will catch your enthusiasm.

MAUDE L. GREENE.
Will's Point, Texas.

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions secured by Miss Willard or offered by those who are especially interested in the effort being put forward by our National president to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow's address is Portland, Me. She is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, and the one who was his home-maker in all his later years, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it is by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and the request of Miss Willard that she has accepted the foregoing trust.

Where Our Speakers Are.

MISS E. W. GREENWOOD, World's evangelistic superintendent, will give lectures and Bible expositions at the Wyoming county convention, Castile, N. Y., February 10 and 11. February 20 she will commence a series of services in Connecticut, under auspices of the state W. C. T. U. Unions en route can secure lectures, Bible expositions or evangelistic services at reduced rates. Address her at 59 Remsen street, Brooklyn, N. Y., as letters are forwarded daily.

Are You to Live in Alaska?

The universal article of diet in that country, depended upon and indispensable, is bread or biscuit. And to make the bread and biscuit, either in the camp or upon the trail, yeast cannot be used—it must be baking powder; and the powder manufactured by the processes of the Royal Baking Powder Company, miners and prospectors have learned, is the only one which will stand in that peculiar climate of cold and dampness and raise the bread and biscuit satisfactorily.

These facts are very important for every one proposing to go to Alaska and the Yukon country to know, for should he be persuaded by some outfitter to take one of the cheap brands of baking powder, it will cost just as much to transport it, and then when he opens it for use, after all his labor in packing it over the long and difficult route, he will find a solid caked mass or a lot of spoiled powder, with no strength and useless. Such a mistake might lead to the most serious results. Alaska is no place in which to experiment in food, or try to economize with your stomach. For use in such a climate, and under the trying and fatiguing conditions of life and labor in that country, everything must be the best and most useful, and above all it is imperative that all food supplies shall have perfect keeping qualities. It is absurd to convey over such difficult and expensive routes an article that will deteriorate in transit, or that will be found when required for use to have lost a great part of its value.

There is no better guide to follow in these matters than the advice of those who have gone through similar experience. Mr. McQuesten, who is called "the father of Alaska," after an experience of years upon the trail, in the camp, and in the use of every kind of supply, says: "We find in Alaska that the importance of a proper kind of baking powder cannot be overestimated. A miner with a can of bad baking powder is almost helpless in Alaska. We have tried all sorts, and have been obliged to settle down to use nothing but the Royal. It is stronger and carries further, but above all things, it is the only powder that will endure the severe climatic changes of the arctic region."

It is for the same reasons that the U. S. Government in its relief expeditions, and Peary, the famous arctic traveler, have carried the Royal Baking Powder exclusively.

A MOTHER'S IDEALS, a Kindergarten Mother's Conception of Family Life, by Andrea Hofer Proudfoot. The author, as editor of Child Garden, is well known. This book is full of helpful thoughts which if practiced in everyday life will make home sweeter, husband and children dearer and brighten and develop the mother's character until she become the ideal incarnate of every mother. The subject is treated with the heart of a mother and the training of a teacher and only good results can follow the study of its chapters. A carefully selected list of books from a kindergartner's standpoint will be found in the last chapter. For sale at 1400, The Auditorium, Chicago.

It is cause for sincere gratulation when both author and subject assure a very interesting volume, as in THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF HARRIET BEECHER STOWE, by Mrs. James T. Fields. Beyond all question Mrs. Stowe was one of the greatest and best women America has produced, and her position in American literature is high and likely to be enduring both from her world-famous "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and from her other books of remarkable observation, grasp of character, humor, humanity, breadth and literary skill. Mrs. Fields has a full appreciation of all that Mrs. Stowe was and did, and, having also adequate literary art, she has given us a biography of equal interest and value. Price $2. MASTER SKYLARK. A story of Shakspere's time. By John Bennett. Illustrated by Reginald B. Birch. 12mo, 380 pages. Price $1.50. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

In MASTER SKYLARK, Mr. John Bennett has told a story of the time of Good Queen Bess. Among the characters he introduces are Shakspere, Ben Jonson, and many of the congenial spirits who listened to the combat of wits at the Mermaid Tavern. The hero is a little lad of Stratford town, a relative of Anne Hathaway, Shakspere's wife. The story is full of the romance of the Elizabethan age, and Mr. Bennett has given many pictures of characteristic scenes in old London. Mr. Birch's illustrations are in accord with the spirit of the story.

THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST, by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward. Women best understood the Master, and this book written by a woman gives the truest, most vivid picture of Him and His life. The gates are set ajar again and we see Jesus in realistic, everyday life. The picture of His suffering and loneliness makes a dark background for the setting of the bright pictures of the joy He brought to those who came to Him for health and healing. Mrs. Ward teaches that His self-consciousness was a growth, that it took Him thirty-three years to learn that He was "with the Father before the world was." She may meet some criticism and controversy on this subject. Altogether the realistic picture of Christ's sad life remains the vivid impression of the book. Price, $2.00. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago, Ill.

Buy of those who advertise in The Union Signal.

The attention of the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL is called to the advertisement of Wool Soap, which appears regularly in these columns. It is an excellent article and is commended everywhere it has been used. There is no question but what this soap will do all that is claimed for it. It is manufactured by Swift & Co., the wealthy stock yards company, and with their excellent facilities they are enabled to make as fine an article as is to be found on the market. THE UNION SIGNAL would be glad to know that every advertiser gets good returns for the money expended and trusts all readers will take a lively interest in this advertising of Swift and Company.

A Necessity.

The text for this paragraph is the November number of The Young Crusader. It is packed full of good things, not only for our Legioners, but for their leaders. Its very first story, "The Loyal Temperance Legion," gives material for an admirable chalk talk. Its reports from Pennsylvania L. T. L. are inspiring and suggestive, though no more so, I am glad to say, than our own will be when their turn comes. From the Wisconsin letter one could make a fine Band of Mercy talk. Our own National L. T. L. secretary, Mrs. Rice, gives a most interesting account of the planting of a tree at North Danville, Vermont, on the site of the birthplace of Madam Willard. All this and much more in the way of reading matter, to say nothing of Miss Willard's picture on the outside and the notes on the Sunday-school lesson for Temperance Sunday. If you do not know the Crusader send to the W. T. P. A. for a sample copy.—From L. T. L. Helper of New Jersey.

A subscriber sends us $3 and writes: "At last I am able to pay my subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL for the last two years and renew for the coming year. Both my husband and myself regret very much our inability to send the amount sooner. We are truly grateful for your kindness in continuing to send the paper. I hardly know what I would have done without the SIGNAL."

Of Franklin Mills Flour by High Medical Authority.

* * * * * Fathers and mothers the world over will join us in saying that one of the most useful and beneficial books of its class ever issued, is, "Tokology, a Book for Every Woman," by Mrs. Alice B. Stockham, M. D. In the fifth chapter there occurs the following empathic voluntary unpaid tribute to Franklin Mills Flour, a fine flour of the entire wheat, showing that it is worthy of the good name it bears. Mothers with bright Tokology babies will appreciate these words: "Entire Wheat Flour, Franklin Mills Co., Lockport, N. Y. * * * * is one of the noblest additions to the foods of the world. The grain is denuded of the outside silicious bark and then ground into fine floor and all the elements of the grain are preserved.

"Wheat, more than any other article of food, furnishes all the elements and in the right proportion required to nourish the body. In bolting the flour to make white flour, four-fifths of the gluten, the very most nutritious part of the grain, is taken out to be fed to cows and hogs."—New York Christian Nation.

"Thoughts for Mothers."

DEAR MRS. VAN OSDEL:—Thank you so much for those beautiful lines, and while the tears flow I am so thankful to find other hearts living the same life, other souls finding the same great eternal truths, other minds seeking for the same light I am searching for. I can not speak of one selection more than another. They are all helpful in every way. The quotations are truly beautiful, and so varied. Oh, how I wish we might have free literature, and could scatter such things broadcast! I have been truly blessed and greatly helped by your writing.

If a dear white-ribboner of seventy-four years makes an effort to secure new names for her beloved paper, ought it not to be an incentive to younger and stronger workers for the cause of temperance? This aged saint writes:

"With gratitude I send these lines, for I fully appreciate your kindness in sending me THE UNION SIGNAL. It is like a ray of sunshine in my path. It is nearly even-tide with me in the journey of life—twilight even now, and such kindness helps to make a beautiful sunset. I shall soon be seventy-four, but I will try to get subscribers for your paper, although it is doubtful if I can, as times are very hard."

"I am grieved to tell you I can not pay the bill you sent to me. My husband had been sick with consumption for two years and died last April. I am old and almost a cripple. I am a temperance woman and one of the Crusaders in Idaho, where I have lived eighteen years. I did all I could for the W. C. T. U. until my husband became sick. Times have changed—my home is gone, my husband gone, and I am left alone in my old age."

Another kind friend sends us $5 with thanks for our kindness in being considerate during the hard times, saying she could not bear to have the paper stop coming, and yet it was impossible for her to pay for it until now. This confirms our faith in white-ribboners, and we are glad to say that each mail brings similar communications from those who are beginning to feel the effects of better times and are able to meet past due obligations.

A dear old white-ribboner of ninty-one years renews her subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL and writes: "I wish to keep posted in the temperance work, and as the print is large, I can still read the paper."

We have been informed that Miss Agnes Slack will accept United States postage stamps in payment for the World's Minutes. Price 34 cents. Address Miss Agnes Slack, Ripley, Derbyshire, England.

Mrs. Phebe Elkinton, Box 40, Haddonfield, N. J., writes that she would be glad to donate a large number of UNION SIGNALS to some one that would appreciate them. Unions near that part of the country please notice.

To Denver in Less than 28 Hours. Only one Night En Route.—"The Colorado Special."

Beginning Sunday, February 6th, a new train will be placed in service between Chicago and Denver via the Chicago, Union Pacific & North-Western Line, which will make the fastest schedule ever maintained between Chicago and Colorado's capital City.

This train will be known as "The Colorado Special" and will leave Chicago via the Chicago & North-Western R'y at 10:00 A. M. every day and reach Denver at 1:30 the following afternoon, the westbound time at certain intermediate stations to be approximately as follows: DeKalb, 11:30 A. M.; Clinton, 1:25 P. M.; Cedar Rapids, 3:30 P. M.; Belle Plaine, 4:30 P. M.; Tama, 4:55 P. M.; Marshalltown, 5:25 P. M.; Ames, 6:15 P. M.; Boone, 6:40 P. M.; Carroll, 8:25 P. M.; Mo. Valley, 10:40 P. M. and reach Chicago 8:45 the next evening. As connections will be made in the Union Depot at Denver to and from trains of all the Colorado lines, passengers will thus be afforded the very best opportunities for quick transit between Chicago and all points in Colorado and the west.

Train will be vestibuled throughout, lighted with Pintsch gas, and will consist of Drawing Room Sleeping Cars, Free Reclining Chair Cars, Buffet, Smoking and Library Cars, coaches and Dining cars, serving all meals en route. A feature in connection with the service of this train, which will be appreciated by tourists, is that it will afford an opportunity for a daylight ride through the progressive and thickly settled portions of Illinois and Iowa, which has been impossible heretofore, as all trains for Denver have left Chicago in the evening.

Daily service to Denver via The Pacific Limited leaving Chicago 10:30 P. M. will be continued.

BIBLE READING FOR FEBRUARY, "Christian Citizenship," by Mrs. C. H. Markham. The subject is treated under six heads, viz., (1) God's favor necessary to the power and perpetuity of any nation. (2) Good rulers necessary to good government. (3) Duties of rulers to the people. (4) Duties of the people to the rulers. (5) Duties to one another. (6) Duties to ourselves. This reading has been given with good results at Sunday evening services and at W. C. T. U. conventions. It is a live topic and one that is especially timely. Local unions can use it effectively in connection with their "red-letter day" exercises on Washington's birthday.

We wish again to call attention to the frequent loss of money in the mails, and as many complaints are reaching our office, we urgently request our patrons to forward to us checks or postoffice orders in settlement of all accounts.

Great men differ on many important subjects; but distinguished scholars all agree that the

NEW FUNK & WAGNALLS

Standard Dictionary

is incomparably superior to all other dictionaries of the English language. For example, we give the views of two of America's most celebrated public men:

HON. E. J. PHELPS,
President Cleveland's most trusted diplomatic representative.

"THE work is extremely well done throughout. I have no doubt that for general and practical purposes it is the best American dictionary now available."

"I AM confident that the published statements of Funk & Wagnalls Company, respecting the value of the Standard Dictionary, are not exaggerated."

CHARLES A. DANA,
President Cleveland's most aggressive journalistic antagonist.

SCHOLARSHIP HAS NO POLITICS!

It would be useless, in the limited space at our disposal, to attempt to put before our readers the many hundreds of commendations of the STANDARD DICTIONARY that came spontaneously from all sources, upon its first appearance. To those who wish to inform themselves fully as to the merits of this great work, we will cheerfully send printed matter containing full description. The following are characteristic expressions from competent authorities:

Harvard University: PROF. N. S. SHALER: "The Standard Dictionary will remain an enduring monument to the labor of its editors. I believe that it will come into general use in this community."

Harvard University: PROF. A. PRESTON PEABODY: "Will prove of invaluable service, and will last while the English language remains essentially unchanged."

University of Michigan (Ann Arbor): PROF. THOMAS M. COOLEY: "It justifies its name—Standard. . . . It is everything that could be desired."

Oxford University (England): F. MAX MÜLLER: "It is a rich mine of information, and shows how much can be achieved by co-operation if under careful supervision."

A. Conan Doyle, the eminent English Novelist, London: "It has become quite a joke with us that we can not trip up this dictionary. We have several times been sure that we would, but have always failed."

Oxford University (England): PROF. A. H. SAYCE, the eminent Philologist: "The Standard Dictionary is truly magnificent, and worthy of the great continent which has produced it. It is more than complete. . . . It is certain to supersede all other existing dictionaries of the English language."

Henry M. Stanley, the African Explorer: "The Standard Dictionary comes nearer to my idea of a first-class dictionary than any of the kind I have seen."

The New York Herald: "We are free to pronounce it the most complete and most satisfactory dictionary yet printed. . . ."

Johns Hopkins University: PROF. WILLIAM HAND BROWNE: "In accuracy, clearness, and fulness it surpasses all similar works."

Sir Edwin Arnold: "A noble piece of work, destined to be most useful. . . . Everywhere copious, erudite, and reliable."

The Irish Times, Dublin: "It is a monument of American learning and industry. . . . From the publication of the Standard Dictionary, America may date a new period of the country's history."

Brown University: PRES. E. BENJAMIN ANDREWS: "I believe that this Dictionary essentially fulfils the high ideal of its projectors. It is an out-and-out new product, and not, like our old dictionaries, the result of patching and amendment, little by little the different pieces often added by many, many minds."

Yale University: T. R. LOUNSBURY, Professor of English: ". . . The work deserves the fullest success, and I doubt not will meet with it."

Gen. James Grant Wilson: "It should, and it would seem will, become what its title indicates, THE STANDARD. I deem it the best English Dictionary published."

Edward Everett Hale, D.D.: "It is the blessing of our breakfast table. I have been surprised at the fulness and accuracy which show themselves to anybody who uses it constantly."

REMEMBER that these Commendations were written after a comparison of the STANDARD with all other Dictionaries now in existence. The full number of words and terms in these dictionaries for the entire alphabet is as follows: Stormonth, 50,000; Worcester, 105,000; Webster (International) 125,000; Century (six volumes complete), 225,000; Standard, over 300,000. In so important a field as the spelling, pronunciation, and definition of the words that make up our vocabulary, it is not worth while to have in your library, or on your study table, a book of reference that is not up to date and authoritative. It is most desirable to be able to consult an unquestioned authority; and such is the STANDARD DICTIONARY. Sent, carriage prepaid, to any address in the United States on receipt of price, $12.00; or $12.75 with Patent Thumb Index.

"How can I expand my chest?" asked a stingy fellow of a physician. "By carrying a larger heart in it," the doctor replied.

A SCHOOLBOY was asked to explain the formation of dew. His answer was: "The earth revolves on an axis every twenty-four hours, and in consequence of the tremendous pace at which it travels it perspires freely."

A LITTLE Rochester girl drew the picture of a dog and cat on her slate, and, calling her mother's attention to it, said, "A cat oughtn't to have but four legs; but I drew it with six, so she could run away from the dog."

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are unrivalled for relieving Coughs, Hoarseness and all Throat Troubles. Sold only in boxes.

"PAPA," said Tommy, "little brother is a week old to-morrow, isn't he?" "Yes." "Let's me and you give him a birthday present." "Very well. What shall it be?" "Let's buy him a wig. He needs that more than anything."

THE pupils in a school were asked to give in writing the difference between a biped and a quadruped. One boy gave the following: "A biped has two legs and a quadruped has four legs; therefore, the difference between a biped and a quadruped is two legs."

RED-LETTER DAYS.

FEBRUARY 22—Washington's Birthday.

MARCH 20—Prohibition Rally Day.

The Birthday of General Neal Dow.

Notes and Comments.

THE following letter, sent from National W. C. T. U. Headquarters last Saturday, explains itself:

Miss Christine Bradley, Frankfort, Ky.,

DEAR MISS BRADLEY:—As corresponding secretary of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, I desire, on behalf of the organization, to extend to you our sincere gratitude for the noble stand you are taking with reference to the christening of the battleship, Kentucky. We feel that the influence of your decision will be a far-reaching one, and that it means much for the young manhood and the young womanhood of our nation, to have one in such a high social position ally herself with the forces which are working for clear brains, pure hearts and safe homes. Please accept our sincere congratulations and thanks, and believe that you have by this act endeared yourself to half a million women all around the world.

Very sincerely yours,

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON,
Cor. Sec. Nat'l W. C. T. U.

The W. C. T. U. of Kentucky will present to Miss Bradley a silver-mounted cut glass bottle from which will flow the sparkling water used in the ceremony.

"THE Advance Agent in sight at last!" So, jubilantly writes our friend and prohibition brother, Mr. Carskadon, of Radical Hill Farm, in a breezy letter to THE UNION SIGNAL, which we take pleasure in quoting: "Brother McKinley's revocation of the lease of his property for saloon purposes is, if followed by his earnest coöperation in helping to revoke the license of all others, the surest and happiest harbinger of real prosperity, social and financial, that has appeared above the dark horizon of our beloved though rum-ridden nation for a quarter of a century, and does, indeed, prove that God reigns and that the republican party may still live if it will renounce its Hannas, hang (politically) its Hamans, enthrone its Mordecais and banquet with its Esthers."

THE women of the nineteenth ward of the city of Chicago are in politics sure enough. As a result of the Hull House opposition to Alderman Powers, republican and independent voters are joining forces to prevent his return to the council. The women workers in the campaign are giving more trouble to the alderman and his lieutenants than all the opposition heretofore offered by men. It is easy, they say, to "go after" a man, but difficult to persuade a woman that she is wrong. Therefore, to offset the work of Miss Jane Addams, Miss Amanda Johnson, and other feminine leaders, the nineteenth ward boss has organized a woman's club of his own, through which he is calling to his aid the wives and daughters and sisters and sweethearts of voters, who are to be urged not to listen to Miss Addams and other reformers.

THERE is great gladness and much fervent thanksgiving in W. C. T. U. ranks over the withdrawal by Lady Henry Somerset of her proposed "regulations" concerning vice in the Indian army. Her letter to Lord George Hamilton, published in THE UNION SIGNAL last week and largely quoted by both the secular and religious press, can not fail to convince her most severe critics of her abolition principles and of the purity of the motives which led her to submit the obnoxious propositions. Like many another noble nature she placed too much confidence in the integrity of others, and now that the government by its do-nothing policy proves the dishonesty of its purpose, she does not hesitate to withdraw "indorsement of whatever form of the principle of regulation." Friends of humanity generally and advocates of purity everywhere will rejoice with white-ribboners in this decisive step taken by our English leader. As Miss Willard says, "It is only what we had a right to expect from our great-hearted comrade who has from the first been devotedly with us in our purity work."

THE National Woman's Christian Temperance Union earnestly asks the coöperation of the Christian churches, the Christian Endeavor Society, the Epworth League, the Baptist Young People's Union, the National Temperance Society, the Good Templars, the Prohibition party and all other temperance, religious and philanthropic societies who are willing to join in the celebration of the birthday of Gen. Neal Dow, March 20th, for the purpose of strengthening the public sentiment that seeks the protection of the home by the prohibition of the liquor traffic in our own and every land.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, Pres.
KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, Sec.

MANY letters of inquiry have come to us concerning a statement, industriously circulated by the press, that the Chicago Board of Health had examined fourteen brands of cigarets and found no injurious ingredient except tobacco. The name of Cass L. Kennicott having been given as authority, Mrs. Ingalls, our National superintendent of anti-narcotics, wrote to that gentleman, and received the following letter in reply:

DEAR MADAM:—Yours of January 3, in regard to cigarets, at hand. In reply would state that the interviews credited to me in the daily papers are not authorized and are, I believe, published to advertise. Yours very truly,

CASS L. KENNICOTT.

JUST as we are going to press the sad news is received of the critical illness of our beloved leader. We at the Temple have known for some weeks that Miss Willard was suffering from an attack of the grip, but no symptoms to occasion alarm had developed until Saturday last. On Monday Mrs. Stevenson received from Miss Gordon this telegram: "Miss Willard suffering extreme exhaustion, condition critical, not hopeless." Later came this message: "Dear hearts, pray and believe. Doctors say there is truly hope. Vitality remarkable." A season of prayer was immediately observed in the office of the corresponding secretary, and prayers were offered at the noon meeting in Willard Hall. Tuesday morning our hearts were delighted by this message: "Slight change for the better at six last evening. Favorable conditions continue this morning." And still later, from our faithful vice-president-at-large, Mrs. Stevens, who had gone immediately to New York, this most encouraging word of all to those who had been troubled by the dispatches in the morning papers: "Disease not cancer of the stomach. Drs. Hill and Draper deny it. It is exhaustion following grip. Hopeful." We are sure that in this hour of especial trial the hearts of all in our ranks will be raised to God as never before that the life of our leader may be spared to us.

Current Events.

New York Liquor Dealers Prepare Bill of Their Own.

THE following is a new license bill prepared by the officers of the Wine, Liquor and Beer Dealers' Association of New York, and which will be presented to the state executive committee for approval. It is radically different from the Raines bill, and its chief features are as follows:

Hotel license in New York city to be $500; a hotel to have ten rooms for guests, the proprietor being authorized to traffic under the provisions of the saloon liquor tax.

Hotel keepers may sell at all times and on Sunday saloon-keepers may sell after 1 P. M.

A saloon license in New York city is to be $400. Saloon-keepers who wish to sell between 1 and 5 A. M., may do so on payment of an extra annual tax of $150.

The store liquor tax certificate in that city is fixed at $250.

The pharmacy tax is put at $100.

The bottlers' license and alcohol license are abolished.

All the penalties of the Raines law are abolished, and instead a wilful violation is declared a misdemeanor.

Dartmouth Contrasted With Princeton.

FOR forty-three years prohibition of the sale of liquors at retail has been the law of New Hampshire. Since the memory of the oldest inhabitant, the faculty of Dartmouth College has stood like a wall against drink in all forms. For twenty-five years the faculty has enforced a rule forbidding intoxicating liquors to be brought into the dormitories or to be used in class spreads. More than that, through its endowments, Dartmouth offers beneficiary aid to its needy students in the form of scholarships. There are more than two hundred of these scholarships worth fifty dollars each. Nearly all of these, by faithfulness and proficiency, can be increased from seventy-five to eighty-five dollars. Not one of these two hundred scholarships is granted to any student under any circumstances, unless he is a total abstainer from the use of strong drink as a beverage.

Temperance.

THE Prohibitionists of Massachusetts have prepared a prohibitory bill, and it will be presented in the legislature at an early date.

WASHINGTON'S birthday will be marked at Philadelphia, Pa., by a conference of prohibition workers, called by the state executive committee.

A GENERAL temperance council is to be held at Seattle, Wash., in March, to which all temperance organizations in the state will send representatives.

ON behalf of the executive board of Olivet College, at Charlotte, Mich., President Sperry had two prominent druggists arrested for selling liquor to students in violation of the local option law, said students being also minors.

PRESIDENT HART, of the Chicago Baseball Club, has selected Waycross, Ga., as the training ground for his team, this year, and in giving his reasons therefor concludes with this significant sentence: "Best of all, the town is prohibition."

THE Citizens' League, of Chicago, has secured the conviction of Michael Dopke, a saloonkeeper, charged with selling liquor to minors and keeping a disorderly house. He was fined $100 and held to the criminal court in bonds of $1,000.

THE demand for ornamental corkscrews has grown in Princeton since President Patton's celebrated speech at the Alumni dinner at Delmonico's—"Prohibition in Princeton would only increase the trade in corkscrews." The souvenirs are made of buckhorn and silver plated screws. The Princeton "coat-of-arms," on the face of the corkscrew handle is a shield in orange and black, the college colors. On the upper half is an open Bible with the legend, Vet Nov. Testamentum (Old and New Testaments).

A BILL has been introduced into the Kentucky legislature, now in session, by Senator Thomas, of Bourbon, to decrease the penalty for selling liquor in local option counties from one hundred to twenty-five dollars.

DR. T. D. CROTHERS, editor of the Journal of Inebriety, and secretary of the American Temperance Medical Association, says that The Voice in calling attention to the tolerance of the use of spirits at Princeton and Yale Colleges has "fired a shot," not at Princeton and Yale alone, but at the great delusion that alcohol is harmless in moderation.

SENATOR WRAY, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has introduced an anti-treating bill, making it a misdemeanor to "treat" any person to liquor in any saloon, barroom or clubroom. The first offense is punishable by a fine of five dollars, the second offense by imprisonment of not less than five, nor more than twenty days. A similar resolution has been introduced in the legislature of Iowa.

AT a recent W. C. T. U. meeting in Buffalo, N. Y., action was taken condemning the Yale authorities, who permit students to enter saloons and to have intoxicating liquors in their dormitories, and to have them served at their class spreads. A large number of parents signed the petition to be forwarded to the Rev. Timothy Dwight, D. D., LL. D., president Yale University, bearing on the subject.

THE Governor-General of Canada, at the opening of the Dominion parliament, made formal announcement of a bill for the taking of a plebiscite of the electors of the Dominion upon the question of the total prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. A monster prohibition conference was held at Ottawa on February 8, to consider details of the campaign which is now on. The date of voting has not yet been announced.

A CORRESPONDENT of The Voice says that the newspapers have, by common consent, come to speak of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens as the successor to the late Gen. Neal Dow as head of the prohibition movement in Maine. Mrs. Stevens has been the leader in the agitation for the enforcement of the prohibitory law, which has resulted in a petition to the governor bearing on the matter. His reply is a letter to every county sheriff in the state, setting forth the duties of such office and a request for their fulfillment.

AT the last session of the Illinois State Grange the following resolution was passed: "Resolved, When crime, corruption in politics, hard times, excessive taxation, pauperism, insanity, suicide and degradation are traced to their primary source, it will be found that a leading factor in their propagation is the saloon. The paltry addition to the farmers' income through the very small per cent of grain used for distillation is swallowed up many times in the cost of almshouses, courts, jails and other woes of drunken vices. For these reasons, and many others, we demand the suppression of the liquor traffic." A resolution was also passed recommending the passage of a national law granting equal rights at the ballot box, regardless of sex.

At Home.

AT a conference of United Presbyterians held in Chicago on February 10, resolutions were passed recommending the United presbytery to establish a universal system of tithe-giving.

AN explosion of whisky during a fire at Pittsburg, Pa, on February 9, resulted in a serious loss of life, twelve bodies having been recovered, out of thirty-eight missing. The financial loss will reach nearly $1,500,000.

SENATOR FINCK, of Ohio, has introduced in the state senate a joint resolution providing for the submission to the voters next fall of a proposition to amend the constitution so as to permit women to vote at all elections.

SENOR DEPUY DE LOME, Spanish minister to the United States, has resigned very suddenly, such action following the publication of a private letter in which Senor de Lome referred to President McKinley as "a low politician who caters to the rabble." The minister's resignation has been accepted by the Spanish government, and he will return immediately to that country.

THE Iowa house committee on constitutional amendment has reported favorably on the resolution for the submission of the proposition to strike the word "male" from the constitution.

A CONFERENCE of Chicago Methodist ministers recently passed a resolution to ask the state legislature for better revenue laws in order that pewholders in their churches need no longer pay bribes to public officers to have their assessments moderate.

CHARLES H. J. TAYLOR, formerly United States minister to Liberia, has started a movement by which he hopes to join the negroes of this country in one party, the Afro-American party. Mr. Taylor was born a slave, and is the only negro lawyer ever admitted to the bar of the Supreme court of the United States.

THE supreme court of Illinois has denied the motion to reconsider the petition for a writ of habeas corpus by Harry Gundling, a Chicago druggist who was arrested and fined for selling cigarets contrary to the city ordinance. Gundling refused to pay the fine and the case was made a test of the legality of the ordinance.

About Women.

MRS. ALICE STRONG and Mrs. W. T. Thornton have been nominated for school directors on the prohibition ticket at Westfield, Pa.

MISS HELEN GOULD has given $500 for a library for the Railroad Men's Y. M. C. A. building to be erected at Decatur, Ill., this year.

TWO American college graduates have found their field in the Huguenot College, at Wellington, Cape Colony, Africa. Miss Martha Veeder, of Cornell, is professor of mathematics, and Miss Alice W. Kellogg is teaching English.

MISS MERESIA NEVILLE, the secretary of the Ladies' Grand Council of the Primrose League, England, has now given fifteen years of her life to political work. She has canvassed in every district in London, and has spoken at over 2,000 public meetings.

MRS. ELIZABETH PRESTON BROWN DAVIS, who computes the ephemeris of the sun for the Nautical Almanac, is but little more than thirty years of age, and she is a remarkable mathematician. Originally a Washington school-teacher, she entered the Columbian University, and while there she startled her instructors and other astronomers by discovering and correcting an error in one of La Place's tables that had for years resulted in inconsistencies puzzling to astronomers throughout the world. She also invented and copyrighted the Washington-Greenwich table now used by the government, which is said to greatly facilitate the work of the computers.

Educational.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY will attend the celebration of Washington's birthday at the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia.

PROF. EDMUND J. JAMES, of the University of Chicago, has been nominated by the bureau of education at Washington to represent the United States government as delegate to the International Congress of Commercial Instruction at Antwerp, to be held April 16, 1898.

THE members of the Seventh Day Advent Society of Baraboo, Wis., have withdrawn all their children from the public schools and started an institution of their own. A move of this kind is being inaugurated by the Adventists all over the state, and competent teachers are being engaged for these schools. They will ask no aid from the state, but will bear all the expenses from the church fund.

Five Hundred Million.

BY ADA MELVILLE SHAW.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 11.—The employés of the "Budweiser department" of the Anheuser-Busch Brewery Association were remembered with a special gift to-day. The reason for the celebration was the filling of the five hundred millionth bottle of "Budweiser." These astonishing figures show the great popularity of this beer in American households and all over the world. Five hundred million bottles of a single brand is a record that has been reached by no other brewery in the world, and the officers of that monster enterprise have cause to be jubilant.—Chicago Times-Herald.

FIVE hundred million! Human mind,
Made finite, scarce can grasp
The import of the words. The span
Of fleshy hand can hold
Of precious things so few!
A million dollars—or a million stars—
We'd weary in the counting.
But down men's throats have sped
Five hundred million streams
Of ferment fire. God help us!
Our children cry for bread—
Five hundred million little loaves
Would make God's sunshine leap
To hungry mothers' eyes;
Five hundred million cups of water,
Given in Christ's dear name,
Might save the world from sin!
But from God's hills, fair, ripened grain
Man's greed has garnered in
To make five hundred million curses
For the world. Great God, how long?
Better thy fields lay barren
Under the burning sun,
Than man should do this thing!

God, dost Thou see the day
When brewers' fires shall burn no more,
When hell's swift poison shall not steal away
Our God-like brains, leaving its demons there?
Shall the time be, when on Thy thousand hills
And in Thy valleys sweet and cool,
Love shall cut down the ripened grain,—
Five hundred million loaves of life-charged bread
To feed the hungry world?

An Ower True Tale.

In Two Chapters.

BY MAUD B. RODGERS.

CHAPTER I.

THEY had journeyed—journeyed. They had taken parting looks at the old world—the ever new one—with their hearts exalted and their minds scarcely able to comprehend that their feet had trodden the same paths His human feet had trod. They had sailed out Constantinople's deep lying roadstead under the same southern sun that bathed that city's mosques and minarets in eternal whiteness. They had seen Venice melt away into its surrounding blue tranquillity; they had passed down the river of dreams and its castle ruins still lingered in their memory. They had left Japan all snowy blooms and sunshine; they had wandered through the enchanted mazes of the snowy-bloomed and golden-fruited orange groves of California, and they had now just journeyed from one southern port of this flowery, fragrant land to another—both ports of old, dreamy Spanish cities where the clear, green water ripples in fantastic curls about the dark piles of the wharves and the moored fishing boats, and where the winding streets lead by old adobes and ever blooming gardens, whose fragrance floats upward far from the sunny, high-tiled walls inclosing them.

They had walked from their hotel back through a forest of pines and down to this beach, and here was a village, as un-American as their most distant voyaging had shown them—so miserable, so squalid, the odor of the drying squid mingling with wafts of pure ocean air.

The waves of the soft Pacific rolled before them, piles of dank, shell strewn moss lay at their feet, salt-plashed cliffs about them, and the Chinese village just behind them, its white joss house glistening in the sunlight, its bright, scarlet dragon flag floating wide from its tall flag pole. They gathered a few shells and pebbles as souvenirs of this strange place. Their journey was nearly over now. In a few days they would be in the new home for which they had planned, and of which they had dreamed so long.

As they wandered slowly back to their hotel their way led them through the little village, a way hard to pick among the many dirty, barefooted children running to and fro, the few old Chinese sunning themselves upon the narrow walks of the still narrower streets, the fishing boats and wagons, the nets, the fishers and the fish. The doors of all the houses stood open, the dreary, desolate aspect of the interiors forbidding intrusion. In front of one of these doors the travelers paused, attracted by small urchin, bowl and chop sticks in hand hurriedly eating his rice.

"Where did you get that?" the man inquired, surveying with something akin to amusement the unkempt hair with its tangled queue attached, the dirty face, the dirtier clothes and bare, brown feet of the little figure before him.

The boy, unused to being spoken to, merely bent his head deeper into the bowl and pointed with his sticks into the house.

At this both travelers glanced within. The narrow house, crowded closely into line and devoid of windows, was divided into hall-like apartments running across the house, each connected by a close, doorless space. The first apartment was lighted by the street door, the second by dim lamp light, which shone faintly and with a sepulchral glare into the brighter daylight of the first apartment.

While the two travelers stood looking at the few large fishing baskets and dark boxes which made up the furniture of this dull, bare-walled room, a tiny cry broke in upon their meditative inspection. The fair bride looked at her husband and he at her.

"A baby in there?" she asked in tones of unbelief.

"Why not?" returned the husband with a smile. "This very little youngster before us was a baby once."

"That is true," she returned, and glancing deeper into the house she added, "Let us go in a little farther and knock. The door is open and I should so love to see that baby—a tiny Chinese baby."

The husband smiled again, and after the bride had gained the confidence of the little boy in the doorway and stepped inside, he followed her.

Once within, the child dashed into the next room, where his mother lay, and his hurried jabbering told the two visitors of his great excitement.

To prevent confusion, the bride went directly into the dim passageway of a room, where she stood, half undecided, half eager, with a sweet, sympathetic light upon her fair face, which was turned to the Chinese mother.

For a brief moment the little mother looked inquiringly at her visitors and held the tiny brown bundle beside her in a frightened manner closer against her breast, but when the bride, with a smile of kindness and interest drew closer, the frightened look disappeared, and reaching out one of her slender brown hands in a beseeching manner, she burst into a hasty supplication in Chinese words.

The perplexed bride drew nearer to the sick woman, and glancing at the narrow, hard bunk made into the wall, the soiled covering, the utter entire lack of anything half comfortable, half necessary in this strange room, the tired, distressed young mother face and the appealing little form beside it, turned to her husband, who still stood upon the threshold, and exclaimed:

"Oh, Robert, is not this hard? See the poor little mother and the poor little baby born into such a place. Can we not do something?"

The young man, raised in California, and more accustomed to Chinese villages than was his eastern bride, involuntarily felt for his purse.

"She seems so distressed—so worried," continued the bride, who though her soul had hung in the balance could not have understood the pleading accents and gestures of this Chinese mother, "she ought not to be alone like this, with just that small child." And she glanced down at the boy beside her who still clung to his bowl and sticks.

The young man did not answer, and watched his wife vainly endeavor to understand and do something for the little mother. But all her efforts were useless.

"It may be she needs something—perhaps she is hungry or cold. See, there is nothing to eat here, and no covering for her but those rags."

"Perhaps she wants her husband," said the young man, and, placing some money in the woman's hand, he added, "Come, my dear, we must be going, and I'll look up some one and send them in."

"I dislike to go, somehow, Robert. I hate to leave her like this; poor thing, it seems as if we ought to do something."

With this the bride cast a last pitying glance upon the mother, upon the lonesome aspect of the house in which she herself had no right, and saddened by the first harrowing experience of her wedding journey, followed her husband from the house.

How could the softened heart of the American bride dream that the hard lot of this timid China-woman was even now paradise to the awful fate that was hurrying to overtake her? How could she dream that beneath the folds of the flag of her native land was sheltered the vilest bondage the world knows to-day?

Down the sidewalk, a few feet from the door, they met a Chinaman, bareheaded, with a steaming bowl of rice in his hand. He was evidently on his way to the sick woman. The young man pointed to the little boy who had followed them out on to the sidewalk.

"Your little boy?" he asked.

The man did not pause, and answered shortly, indifferently, "Yap."

"Your sick wife heap need you then."

At this the Chinaman cast a suspicious look upon his accoster and hurried on. They saw him enter the house they had just left, and as they passed from the street to the beach path the bride exclaimed, "Oh, what misery, what misery!"

And the young man returned, "Not for us, my dear, not for us."

A Helpful Husband.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

NEARLY thirty years ago, when I was president of the Woman's College in Evanston, Miss Jessie Brown was the leading and favorite student whose ability, high character, tactful manners and good looks served to smooth the path of innovation by which the gentler sex was admitted to our University. She was the daughter of one of our "best families" in the highest sense of that term. Her father was a Christian lawyer, her mother prominent in philanthropic work, and their home was the center of a delightful circle, who "did good and not evil." When the Crusade came and my heart was stirred to inquire, "What can we do right here and now to help the cause of temperance?" the first young person I sought was Jessie Brown, who coöperated warmly with me in an effort to bring the new outlook within the scope of our students within and outside of the recitation room. An autograph album was procured in which we signed the pledge, and she circulated it among her friends. As appears in the following letter, the first one to "stand by" and help was her schoolmate, Mr. T. B. Hilton, whom she afterward married. He was a Methodist minister, and one of the most successful young pastors that ever went out from our institution at Evanston. After about twenty years of devoted pastoral effort, he died in Quincy, Ill., leaving Mrs. Hilton with several children, who are her joy and song to-day by reason of their trusty Christian character. Mrs. Hilton then returned to Evanston and now lives near her parents. Her eldest daughter is "the head of the house" while the mother goes forth to speak as a National W. C. T. U. lecturer on purity, and endeavors by her mothers' meetings and parents' institutes to build up the cause in every possible way.

I have long wished that my dear pupil Jessie would give a frank statement concerning the manner in which her husband became the chief factor in her development, and when at the Buffalo Convention I again urged it on the ground of the good that might be wrought for young married people in these difficult new days, she agreed to send me a letter from which I could make extracts, or which I could work over into an article. This I pass on to THE UNION SIGNAL with an earnest prayer that many young people—and especially young husbands—will read it with an open mind:

"MY DEAR MISS WILLARD:—You ask me to tell you a little about my life and its work since I left the dear old college days and the class-room where we were associated as teacher and pupil.

"As you know, I was the first girl to enter the preparatory school classes when the doors of the university were thrown open to girls by that noble-minded man, Dr. E. O. Haven, then president of Northwestern University. I went because my mother said I must, and it was no easy task to stand alone on one side of the hall, the only girl, waiting for the chapel door to open, with 250 young men looking and talking. But I say with gratitude and intense appreciation, that never in my seven years of college life did I receive a rudeness from any student among the many hundreds whom I met. In fact, the young men accorded to me and my associates every honor which was in their power to give.

"It was in the sophomore year that I began my temperance work by asking my classmates to sign the triple pledge. The girls in the other classes said they would do so if I would start the work. My efforts met with subdued mirth at first, then many questions and much talk. I was broken-hearted, for a girl hates to be laughed at by those she admires. However, the next morning one of the boys in the hall asked for 'that paper you had yesterday.' I brought it out, and a general laugh went around, for my name was the only one on it. Then Mr. Hilton came up, looked at it and said, 'That's all right; I'll sign it,' and did so. In the Greek class it was called for again, and three signatures obtained. I was the only girl in the Greek class, and graduated in 1876 as the first woman classical graduate of Northwestern University, receiving the degree of B. A. Eight years after, when I had three boys of my own and felt that I must keep abreast of the times, I presented the literary work I had done, and was, after due examination, allowed the title of M. A.

"Through six years of college life Mr. Hilton and I were classmates, and I always felt that he helped to mold and fashion the college pride and chivalry toward girls for which our university has been so justly admired. Born and bred in a physician's family, he was in the habit of meeting all classes of people; with a mother of deep religious convictions, and thoroughly read in science, history and poetry, she built into his very nature the highest ideals of womanhood and Christian manhood.

"In 1871 the Philomathian Literary Society invited me to become an honorary member; and through the vigorous representations of Mr. Hilton, backed by other 'woman's rights advocates,' the Euphronian Literary Society, a few months later, invited me to become a full member. I believe the other five girls received similar invitations. Mr. Hilton was president of this society and always advocated woman's rights and privileges in every department of life, often calling down upon his head the displeasure of men of his own age and even of those higher in authority.

"After we commenced our home life he began to consider what part his wife could take in the arena of his ministerial life. The care of the home and the five children who came to gladden our hearts was work for any woman, physically, but considering the mind and soul of more importance, he said, 'If you slave for me now, I will be more comfortable, perhaps, in a material way, but when you are fifty you will not be the delightful companion you were during the college days; you will be worn out physically and rusted out mentally.' So he planned to help me become, as he said, 'an all-round woman.' Every Sunday, for six months, we stayed at the noon class-meeting, where he expected me to pray aloud. I had never been taught that part of Christian service. If my courage failed and only a few sentences came, he finished the petition, and grew more tender and helpful as he saw my evident distress. I can truly say that it was a hard lesson. Then my husband planned missionary meetings for Sunday evenings, when he encouraged me to read papers which I had carefully written, and he had criticised with unfailing impartiality. I will admit that I had rewritten them with many tears, feeling that I could never measure up to his ideal. But I tried hard, and the people said, 'How easy it is for you.' I was always told the topic of the prayer-meeting, on that morning, with the quiet remark, 'You might want to say something, you know;' or, 'If there is a pause, just try and help me out.' Sometimes he would tell me two months beforehand that there would be a temperance or missionary meeting in the church and I might do well to study such a topic.

"I took a deep interest in his studies. If I could not get the entire church service I slipped in for the sermon, because I had sat up until one and two o'clock in the morning hearing it read and amended, and I would know by my feelings how the people received it, so the preacher thought. My husband always kept me by his side after the church services, thus I was introduced to all the strangers and shook hands with nearly all the people the minister met. In this way, although often confined by home cares from calling upon the people, I met them on the Sabbath and knew them by face and name at least. After services at night we would walk, for then the children were safely asleep and there was no likelihood of any one calling, and we learned to know the shadows and dark places in the heart history of the town. At these times we talked over the events of the day and studied the social problems. I learned much of what I know of the evils of intemperance from these midnight walks and talks. I understood why my husband took the extreme position he did on all the moral questions of the day and realized more keenly than any other hearer what it cost him when he unfolded the mistakes and wounds of the human heart.

"Mr. Hilton helped me to study woman's responsibilities and privileges and the needs of mothers and children so that, as he said, 'when you are fifty and gray-headed you will be fitted to teach others.' Putting into practice in my own family whatever theories or helps I might find, with such an adviser and example before me, with the motto of our home, 'Sweetness and Light,'' engraven upon my heart, when God took from my side my great-hearted husband, I felt that I would like to help others and give to them some of the inspiration which had come from our close companionship.

"And I want to say that any good man can help his wife cultivate herself. My brain work did not detract from my love of home. In fact, I took more pains to have the everyday duties perfectly done. Many little superfluities can be omitted. One must be healthy and wise to make life a pleasure. Clean, healthy children, a sunshiny atmosphere in the home, and heart and mind companionship in the marriage relationship will, with God's blessing, insure true help to the world and highest pleasure in life.

"Lovingly yours in the work for Christ,

"JESSIE BROWN HILTON."

Woman's Battle for Bread.

BY LOUISE S. ROUNDS.

PERHAPS there is no cry which so pierces the mother heart as the hunger cry of a child. To still that cry and relieve that hunger a woman will brave any danger, endure any privation and overcome almost any obstacle. Once in the field as a bread-winner, whether from necessity or from choice, she rarely returns to the rôle of the clinging vine or shrinks to the proportions of a helpless ornament of society. Whatever may be the outcome of the debate carried on in a more or less acrimonious spirit concerning woman's sphere, she seems to be settling the vexed question by a law of her own nature, the status she shall occupy in that ever increasing multitude which, under a good Providence are commanded to eat their bread by the sweat of their own faces.

The cold array of figures and facts concerning the ability of women to successfully enter the bread-winning arena with men must push aside all mere sentimentalism and challenge the world to both pity and praise; pity, that upon the slender shoulders of the physically weaker sex should fall such heavy burdens, praise that she brings full oft a queenly grace to most ignoble tasks, and bears her burdens as 'twere honors, and neither heeds nor hears the laugh that goes the round of little souls. Poverty and pain, twins in life's large family of ills, tug at her skirts, creep constantly about her feet and sit down at night beside her couch, most constant watchers!

It is no part of my plan in this brief statement of facts to discuss the effect of either manual or professional labor upon the exclusive womanly attributes; enough that we consider here the unwelcome and perhaps unwholesome fact, that to-day man is no longer a feared competitor by woman in the contest for employment. True, not yet has there come a perfect equality in the schedule of compensation, for equal work has not yet produced equal wage as between the sexes, but undaunted by this most manifest injustice, woman waits no longer in idleness the recognition of her real work, but enters fearlessly every gateway to possible even if not to probable success, and by an ever-increasing confidence born of increasing knowledge she wins her victories on her field of fate.

The Hon. Carroll D. Wright, United States Commissioner of Labor, in his eleventh annual report, which brings his investigations up to last year, declares that the fact is absolutely demonstrated that the proportion of females, taking all the occupations into consideration, is steadily increasing, while, on the other hand, the males have dropped from 85 to 79 per cent.

Where shall we look for the cause of this falling off of men from these industrial occupations? Let the idle, good-for-nothing creatures that hang around saloon doors in every city and village where that legalized pest is found; let the aimless, wandering tramps whose solicitation for bread at your back door is the least harmful feature of their presence; let the baseball and horse racing parks with their worse than idle thousands; let all these make answer to this important question, and, if possible, calculate the condition of society twenty-five years from now, if these sources of crime and general degeneracy are left to go on unchecked and unhindered to their complete development! Another significant fact is also stated, that the cigar-makers' union opposes the employment of women. Would that their opposition was strong enough to keep every woman from the filthy, ill-smelling, poisonous industry! If all the cigars could be made in our state prisons—most appropriate place for the work—women would not be found sufficient criminals to invade the carefully guarded domain, nor be able to "displace a man" from his self-elected position of quiet retirement!

In carefully looking over the list of states, naturally enough I gave the most thought to Illinois and sought to know why women were gradually gaining over men in the various industries and departments of labor. Opposite the names of these manufacturing interests I found these words which answered my query: "Better adapted;" some added, "and more industrious"; while against printing and publishing of maps and atlases were these words: "Better adapted, cheaper and don't drink!" That touches a no longer secret spring, which opens to our gaze an endless train of misery.

"Ah me! my soul is grey
With poring over the long sum of ill;
To see it down in figures on a page,
Plain, silent, clear—as God sees through the earth
The sense of all the graves!—that's terrible
For one who is not God, and can not right
The wrong he looks on."

The only bar to woman's progress in the fields of labor is not the man, but the machine, which brings fingers more delicate and flexible than hers into all the finer grades of work—fingers that act automatically and therefore tirelessly—fingers more swift and deft than hers, bloodless fingers, which, after all is said, better suit the too often bloodless employer because they bring forth a cheaper product than she with her greatest skill can place beneath his trade-mark.

But taking this fact as the chief if not the only serious difficulty in her way, nevertheless the fiat has gone forth that the stalwart oak and the clinging ivy have parted company, except in theory, and henceforth woman must largely base her calculations for financial needs upon her own powers. I would not presume to cast, in saying this, the slightest reflection upon the one whose name she may choose to bear. Too well we know what strain and stress awaits the bravest and best of men as their barks are tossed upon life's commercial sea; too well we know the awful, ominous sound of a coming financial cyclone; too often have we seen the broken victims of its undeserved wrath go down and out of life with not a remnant of their once magnificent courage left to tell the story of what they tried to be and do. Labor is no more degrading to woman than to man; that false notion is already going—rather let me say, gone.

No shock to our sensibilities is felt when we gaze upon "The Angelus," that far-famed picture of work and worship, because the man and his wife are at their toil together in the field; the rather do we pay homage to the dignity which rests upon these homely peasants, as with uncovered heads they cease for a moment their congenial or uncongenial task—we take no note of that—and reverently respond to the far-away bell which calls them to prayer!

The danger which lies hidden in woman's battle for bread is more complex and subtle; it is the danger which she must meet and the state must meet in the consequences of her being overworked. Her God-given functions as to sex should be guarded with most jealous care, and if she is compelled to turn her strength to other duties than to those of holy motherhood, then look to it, men, you who make the laws, and answer for the weak, debilitated, unhealthy offspring who will curse the state by their imbecility and shame society by their viciousness!

Look to it? Yea, look with the gaze of a scared soul as you see some drunken husband and father spending his earnings for beer, while his wife counts out her scanty coins, earned at the washtub or in the field, possibly at labor harder still than either of these, for the bread that keeps her hunger-smitten child from starvation's death. Come to the tribunal of your conscience, if you have one; come to the judgment seat of public opinion and make answer, O, voter in this great commonwealth, to the awful crime of putting woman to the necessity of a physical struggle with the saloon as she defends her home and her children!

Make answer to the state why we meet, on every side, hunger-eyed, wan and wretched childhood, and why woman must bend to such burdens until the very laws of her being are changed, unfolding no more in peaceful, restful, healthful maternity! There is worship in labor only when the labor keeps within its true limitation; beyond that boundary the victim hears no "Angelus" call to prayer! Her cry is one of despair; her repose is not the picturesque one which charms the painter's fancy; it is rather the dumb agony of physical torture as it sinks in its helplessness to the temporary oblivion of sleep!

"Who, being man and human, can stand calmly by
And view these things, and never tease his soul
For some great cure? May I choose indeed
To vow away my years, my means, my aims,
Among the helpers, if there's any help
In such a social strait! The common blood
That swings along my veins, is strong enough
To draw me to this duty."

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.

—Adapted from Longfellow.

THE last Thursday and Friday of January were among the most notable days in the history of Willard Hall. Thursday at 11 A. M. there was a meeting for women only. They came until all seats were occupied, and a sister whispered to me, "What will you do with the men?" Brother V. D. David's address to the women of Chicago continued until 12. As soon as the doors were opened, an army of men poured in until the aisles themselves were packed and the crush filled the corridors to the street entrance. Then in disappointment many turned away. Without weariness Brother David continued to tell of the wonderful way until two o'clock.

Friday Willard Hall was filled as on the day before, and Brother David gave the message which closed his eight weeks of work in Willard Hall. Mrs. Carse said to him at the close, "A larger light has come into my soul to-day than I have known before. I shall never forget you." Hundreds stood and said the same at this noon hour.

V. D. David went from Willard Hall to the Moody Institute. The announcement that Dr. J. Q. A. Henry would be with us the first week in February, was greeted with rounds of applause.

We sang "Praise God," Brother David pronounced the benediction, and thus ended the month of January, 1898.

ABBIE FRANCES B. CHURCH,
Leader Noonday Meetings.

Correspondence.

An Open Letter to the Rev. H. Price Hughes, M. A., London, England.

DEAR BROTHER:—God helping me, I will not write one word in malice, but every word in love. Love edifieth; malice destroys. But I must say the truth in love. I wish, therefore, at the beginning to acknowledge that the church throughout the world has received many a lesson and much holy inspiration from you and your co-workers in the West London Mission, and we will continue to pray that God may give you a thousand fold prosperity in the future. Personally, I am glad to say that I believe you are a total abstainer and honestly desirous of seeing every man in the Methodist church a total abstainer and opponent of the liquor traffic.

What we protest against is the inconsistency of your action with the very spirit and letter of the discipline of your own church and the plain word of God in tolerating liquor dealers in the church. The discipline plainly states that members of the church are to abstain from drinking or buying and selling spirituous liquors except in cases of "extreme necessity." Then God's word says, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." How can a man's hands be clean who is daily promoting a business that is black as hell? "Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." If the liquor traffic is not an unclean thing, then there is nothing unclean.

Your utterances about retaining liquor-sellers in office in the dear old mother of us all—the Wesleyan Methodist church in England—brought pain and sorrow to the heart of many a devoted Christian and temperance worker in this "Great West Land." Moreover, it brings special sorrow at the present time, when we are on the eve of the battle for Dominion prohibition, as it puts a weapon in the hands of our enemies. They will inevitably reason that if the editor of the Methodist Times opposes prohibition in the church, he can not favor it in the state. Then for you to tell us in your letter of "explanation" that such honored veterans as the Rev. Charles Garrett, Drs. Randels and Jenkins and "all the older and more responsible promoters of the temperance movement in Methodism" stood with you! Why, it simply overwhelms and confounds us. Many of us had learned to look on you as the hope of the Methodism of England. We refused to believe the reports circulated by the press of this country till we wrote to Miss Slack and read your acknowledgment over your own signature in THE UNION SIGNAL of January 20. We do not now wonder that leading Anglican clergymen of this country are writing of the decline of Methodism in England, and support their arguments by quotations from the Methodist Times, edited by Rev. H. Price Hughes. We have stoutly denied this, so has the Rev. Mr. Huxtable, of Montreal, but the action of the leading men of English Methodism has caused me to be dumb. Seriously, brother, you ought to drop the honored name of Wesley from the title of your church, or at once reverse your action and pray for courage to lead the younger men in their brave fight against the vice which is defeating you at every point in your holy war.

Your so-called letter of "explanation" is from beginning to end one sad wail about the black ruin that would follow the exclusion from the church of the "murderers of Her Majesty's subjects," and a very weak attempt to show that the liquor traffic is less hellish than some other great evils such as slavery and war.

What has happened to our Moses whom we hoped was God's chosen leader and legislator to lead the hosts of our beloved Methodism in to possess her full share of the promised land with the other tribes of our spiritual Israel? The very thing you so much dread is coming. The handwriting will soon be, if it is not already on the wall. Is it not right to do right if the heavens fall? but somebody has well said that "if we do right the heavens will not fall." Nothing but righteousness will stand in the holy societies organized by the pure-souled John Wesley. That dear old bottle will not stand the new wine of modern compromise and mixing. It will rend it. The failure of the Methodist or any other church to reach the masses under such circumstances is no mystery. It is simply the natural action of the natural law of the spiritual realm. "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me." Psa. 66: 18. If I regard it in my action the result will be the same.

You intimate that the younger men (God bless them and give them courage to return to the attack again in the District Synods and next Conference and I pray by that time they may find some Daniels among the older men) who had faith and courage to move for the exclusion of all liquor-sellers from office in the church were lacking in broad statesmanship. You will not say that of the man whom Macaulay said was not inferior to Richelieu in his "genius for government." The calm-spirited, smooth-browed John Wesley was an ecclesiastical statesman of broad views if ever there was one. When he drew up the immortal "rules" which are the governing principles of every Methodist society on the face of the earth to-day, did he not make it forever impossible to lawfully admit a liquor-seller or user as a member of the Methodist church, much less as an office-bearer?

[The writer here made the quote from Wesley's sermon, used in an editorial on page 8 of THE UNION SIGNAL, January 27.—EDS.]

As to your declaration that war is more anti-Christian than the liquor traffic, I put over against it the statement of the Hon. W. E. Gladstone, namely, "It has been said that greater calamities (greater because more continual) have been inflicted on mankind by intemperance than by the historic scourges of war, famine and pestilence combined. That is true, and it is the measure of our discredit and disgrace;" and of Cardinal Manning, that "Drunkenness causes every year in England 60,000 deaths, and according to the testimony of the magistrates, it is the source of seventy-five per cent of the crimes committed." Judge Noah Davis says: "Among all causes of crime, intemperance stands out the unapproachable chief." Chief Justice Coleridge says: "I can keep no terms with a vice that fills our jails, that destroys the comforts of homes and peace of families, and debases and brutalizes the people of these islands." Ruskin says: "Drunkenness is not only the cause of crime, it is crime; and the encouragement of drunkenness for the sake of profit on the sale of drink is certainly one of the most criminal methods of assassination adopted by the bravos of any age or country."

In your excellent editorial on "The Most Urgent Methodist Need," you rightly say it is "above all else times of refreshing from the presence of God" and again "We shall break down unless we receive special rich gifts of divine grace and special baptisms of the Holy Spirit." How can the times of refreshing come with such a mountain of crime standing between God and His church? Move the mountain and the Spirit will come as floods upon the dry ground, but never till then.

I verily believe if Jesus Christ came to you in the West London mission and if He brought any one with Him it would be John Wesley. I believe that in substance they would unitedly say to you, "Brother Hughes, the Lord God intended you for a prophet and deliverer, therefore, 'Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet and show my people their transgressions' and the Methodists their sins. Lift up your voice so loud that it will be heard in every hamlet in the United Kingdom. Tell the Methodist people and all people that drunkard-makers can not be a part of Christ's body—the church. Say unto them, 'Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him and makest him drunken also.' And pronounce a double woe on the Methodists that give it any countenance, for they have had special light from the days of their founder till now, on the deep damnation of this horrible traffic in the bodies and souls of men. Lift up your voice in the pulpit and in the Methodist Times, until there is such a tide of holy enthusiasm kindled that the church will rise in her majesty and sweep the foul thing from her midst. Cry aloud till this holy zeal shall be crystallized into a resolution so clear and strong that any minister shall feel that he has the whole church at his back when he so enforces the discipline against this great evil that it will be as impossible for a liquor-seller to be a member of the Methodist church as it would be for him to enter the Kingdom of Heaven."

This I believe is the voice of the Lord to you and the people "called Methodists" in this awful crisis, involving as it does the very life of our beloved church and the welfare of our country. Take heed to it and may the Lord give you power and wisdom. He is even now speaking to you and saying, "All power is given unto me in heaven and earth. . . . and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen." Yours truly,

J. A. McCLUNG,
Methodist Minister.

Inside Testimony.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—Some time since I was sitting at a table in a hotel, when two men took seats beside me. Their conversation soon informed me that they were traveling salesmen. No. 1 sold groceries; No. 2 sold liquors. After some talk about their respective lines of goods, the following conversation took place:

No. 1. I should think your business would be easy to handle, as it is all cash; but we have a hard time to collect our bills, because the retail merchants must trust their customers.

No. 2. That's a mistake. I don't think people know how much is trusted out in our business, and what's more, when it's out, it's about as good as gone forever.

No. 1. But the profits are so large that the retailers can stand it.

No. 2. The profits are large, but on my round no customer I sell to loses less than twenty-five per cent, and some twice that in bad bills.

No. 1. Well, anyway, you have an easy time, for there are not many men to call upon, and you don't have so many different samples to carry. You can get some time to yourself, and don't have to work your life out in making your round.

No. 2. Yes, I should say so. Few men I have to meet, that's true; but what a set they are, and what do I have to do to meet them? You go into a decent place, say "Good day, how do you do?" in a decent way, and are treated like a gentleman. I go in and yell out "H'are ye, Mike, or Bill, or—"

Here followed a torrent of denunciation, profanity and indecent language that surpassed anything I remember to have heard. It vented itself on the reprobate character of saloon-keepers, on the barbarous talk and spirit of a saloon, upon those who frequented it, and upon himself. He spoke of the folly of men drinking, and especially in saloons, with a vigor that the most rabid temperance talker might envy, and wound up with a general curse upon himself for being in such a villainous business.

I have many times regretted that I did not immediately take down what this man said, though I am glad enough to forget the language he used.

It occurred to me that these men knew what they were talking about.

This account is substantially verbatim, and makes the worst indictment of the liquor business I have heard lately.

AN ILLINOIS TEMPERANCE MAN.

Local Union.

WHAT are your objections, in the Study of Sociology for local unions, to Edward Bellamy's "Looking Backward" and "Equality"; Groveland's "Coöperative Commonwealth," Sprague's "Socialism from Genesis to Revelation," and Kidd's "Social Evolution"?

I am familiar with three only of the five books mentioned—the two by Bellamy, and Kidd's "Social Evolution." There are no objections to the study of them. On the contrary my purpose has been to recommend them at a later period in the course, when we come to consider the various remedies suggested for the existing state of society. The thought in the course as given in THE UNION SIGNAL is to make it chiefly suggestive and yet to go enough into detail to make it possible for a union whose members may not feel that they can purchase books and enter into genuine study, to still keep in touch with the line of thought and work.

Hence the first lessons have been very rudimentary. As we advance we shall try to give more of outline and trust the unions to do the filling in.

Both the July and September numbers of Chicago Commons (1896) contain quite complete Bibliographies of sociology and the labor movement. Lack of space prevents our quoting the list entirely, but perhaps it will be well, at the outset, to name some of the most helpful books in this line of study, in addition to those we have already given.

"The New Era," by Rev. Josiah Strong.

"How the Other Half Lives," by Jacob Riis.

"Ruling Ideas of the Present Age," by Rev. Washington Gladden.

"Social Meanings of Religious Experiences," by Prof. George D. Herron.

"Social Aspects of Christianity," by Prof. Richard T. Ely.

"Prisoners of Poverty," by Mrs. Helen Campbell.

"Progress and Poverty," by Henry George.

"Social Evolution," by Benjamin Kidd.

"Recent Economic Changes," by David A. Wells.

"The Labor Movement in America," by Prof. Richard T. Ely.

"Hull House Maps and Papers."

"Merrie England," Robert Blatchford.

"Looking Backward," Edward Bellamy.

"Equality," Edward Bellamy.

"A Traveler from Altruria," Wm. D. Howells.

The list might be prolonged indefinitely, for the literature on this great subject is a constantly growing one, but, if only one of the books named can be read in connection with our outline studies much good must be gained. "The Social Problem," the new book by Prof. Stuckenberg, mentioned by him in his "Guide for Workers," has recently been published, and forms an admirable text-book.

What can a local union do to arouse the interest of its members in the question of health?

I suppose this question properly belongs to the superintendent of the department of health, but personally I know of nothing so likely to arouse an intelligent interest in this subject as to coöperate with Dr. J. H. Kellogg, in his plans for health schools. The General Officers at the last Convention requested Dr. Kellogg, so far as possible, to lay his plans before the local unions and invite their coöperation. He and his coadjutors are very willing to do this and now if a corresponding willingness can but be aroused in white-ribboners themselves something will surely be brought to pass in this direction. It is quite time that an interest should be aroused in this subject. Our workers are falling out by the way here and there, some through overwork, but most because they have never learned the laws under which work should be done. A letter addressed to Dr. J. H. Kellogg, Battle Creek, Mich., will give you all needful instruction concerning these schools.

A question has come concerning the composition of "Moxie," which I can not answer. If any one has any knowledge on this point I shall be glad to receive and to publish it at a later date.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

The just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. No man having put his hand to the plough and looking back is fit for the kingdom of heaven.—Heb. 10:38; Luke 9:62.

MRS. ANNA M. BUNTING, vice-president of Nebraska, and Temple superintendent for the western states, in a circular letter she has been sending out, expresses some very pertinent truths. She says in part:

"DEAR SISTERS:—Be in earnest in this matter, for a little while let us leave everything else and put our whole effort in this direction. Let the watchword for the time being be 'The Temple—it shall be ours.' The brutal boast of the brewers that Willard Hall, the Westminster Abbey of the temperance reform, shall yet be a beer tunnel, and the offices in this magnificent building—where not even a cigar stand is allowed, notwithstanding the fact that most tempting (?) bids have been made for the privilege—will yet be the headquarters of the Brewers' and Distillers' Association, ought to wake up the friends of humanity everywhere, to the necessity of earnest, persistent work and sacrifice, that this threat and hope of our enemies may not be allowed to come to pass.

"With what fiendish glee these foes to all we hold dear would pour out their gold to possess our Temple, to turn it into a den of thieves and hot house of all iniquity while mocking at our awful failure. Then Willard Hall, with its sacred memories, and walls covered with the names of our loved ones, shall no more echo to the glad shout of redeemed souls and songs of praise to the Most High, but instead there will be heard the ribald jest, the obscene song and dreadful blasphemy. Then arouse, and 'let us be all at it and always at it,' until the end is accomplished, and our House Beautiful is ours without a shadow upon the title. 'To combine is to win,' and for us at this time division means not only defeat, but an ignominious and disastrous failure in the face of the whole world."

The treasurer of the Woodstock, Vt., union, Mrs. L. A. Thomas, sends the last installment on their gift of $100. She writes: "There is more money to come on the cards sent out, but the enclosed amount has been lying in the treasurer's hands, so she hastens to send it. 'The King's business requireth haste.'" Two days after the above was received the president of the union, Mrs. Mary E. Purple, enclosed a check for the contents of twenty-two subscription cards, We would like to hear from other unions in a like generous fashion. Another Vermont union, Peacham, through Mrs. Baily, sends a check for receipts from twenty-six collection cards. Another dear Vermonter, Mrs. E. P. Allen, of St. Johnsbury, sends the contents of four cards, beside $4 in money of her dear daughter, Carrie, who, her mother writes, was deeply interested in the Temple, but has now entered into the Temple not made with hands.

The Castile, N. Y., union has sent a check for $75, which completes its pledge. Of the above amount $50 was the gift of our beloved sister, Dr. Cordallia A. Green, whose name is to be inscribed in Willard Hall. Mrs. P. L. Wilcox sends $40 which completes the pledge of the Jewett City, Conn., W. C. T. U. The last installment has also been received on the $100 pledge of the Mason city, Ill., W. C. T. U. The treasurer, Mrs. C. H. Merritt, says, "We will try to do all we can for the Temple in future."

We ask that all money be sent by postal order or checks, as we have heard of several amounts that have been sent us lately in greenbacks which we have not received.

All matters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send a two cent stamp to her either for a subscription card, Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago.

Those who prefer to send money to the fund Miss Willard is raising to help pay off the Temple Trust Bonds, should make their checks payable to Miss Cornelia M. Dow and send to Miss Dow, Portland, Me.

A Washington's Birthday Thought.

"I WISHT I'd been George Washington," said Jimmieboy, one day.
"He had much finer chances than have ever come my way.
He had front seats at all parades, and when he came to fight
He always wore a uniform just simply out o' sight.

"There never was a battle anywhere about the land
When he was not right up in front, or just behind the band.
And in his day a boy that wished to fight an Indian red
Could get 'im without goin' west, sometimes 'longside his bed.

"Nowadays there isn't any show for boys that want to fight.
They have to go to school all day and stay in doors at night.
There aren't anything but strikes and trolley wars to-day,
And being brave as brave can be don't hardly seem to pay.

"A man could fight a striker from inside a trolley car
As bravely as a lion, and yet not be popular
Enough to be elected 'mongst the local magistrates,
Much less to be the president of these United States.

"And so, as I have said before, I wish that I'd been he,
Because he got the chances that will never come to me.
The only consolation that comes just now in my head,
Is that I'm very much alive, while Washington is dead."

A Day At Mount Vernon.

BY IVA G. WOODEM.

MANY of us can remember a picture which adorned the homes of our childhood; the subject was a military looking figure, mounted on a milk-white charger, and was frequently inscribed, "Father of his Country." However ludicrous this may appear to us now, it undoubtedly served at the time to inspire veneration and patriotism, and each recurring anniversary of Washington's Birthday strengthens our admiration for the sterling qualities of our Revolutionary heroes and the unequaled administrative ability of our first president.

The writer had always desired to visit the historic landmarks round about Washington, and was pleased to make one of the party going down to Mount Vernon. Taking a boat to Alexandria, we were favored with a smooth passage down the Potomac, and enjoyed the fine view of the rolling country which that method of travel afforded. From Alexandria we continued our trip by the new electric line, winding around through woodlands and farms which once composed the original Custis estate, but now is divided up into small farms and in the hands of strangers.

Suddenly the car came to a stop opposite a little ticket booth, and we were informed that the last car left at half-past four and the return boat at half-past five—a gentle hint to make the most of our time. The preliminary of purchasing tickets, arranging time and place of meeting for the homeward trip, etc., being disposed of, we became conscious that we stood in the presence of a past generation; the main house, with its broad wings stretching out to the negro quarters on either side, and the great trees which had furnished shelter for eight or ten generations of the first families of Virginia, seemed peopled with the shadows of old-time plantation life; while beyond, the sweep of the river and the gentle lap of its waters on the banks produced a feeling of repose and serenity which enabled us to understand, in some degree, that ineffable "calm" artists always portray on the features of Washington.

Entering the house we made a tour of the reception rooms, the dining-room and library, and our guide obligingly pointed out those articles which had been used and purchased by the Washington family, as distinguished from furnishings which have supplemented the originals. There were also many items of interest connected with the pictures and bric-a-brac, which brought many historic events vividly before us. We were shown upstairs the bedrooms occupied by the various members of the family, and on up in the third story the room where the illustrious statesman breathed his last on the 14th day of December, 1799.

The room would not compare favorably with our modern ideas of comfort and elegance; the floor was bare with an occasional rug; simple white curtains draped the windows and high, four-post bed; by the side of the bed, near the head, were the three little steps used to mount up to its surface. A chest of drawers, or old-fashioned bureau and a small washstand, surmounted by a square looking-glass, completed all the furnishings visible from our point of view, as visitors are not allowed to enter.

One naturally turns from this room to the tomb of Washington, and we slowly filed down the narrow, winding stairway and out along the avenue leading to the family burial ground. This is an ample lot inclosed by a high, iron fence, and contains nearly all the members of the Washington family, with the exception of Mary Washington, the mother of the President, who is buried with her people near Fredericksburg. We lingered before the tomb of George and Martha Washington, which was covered with flowers, while the guide related many interesting facts connected with the Washington and Custis families.

Nearly all the trees have a history, but we have no clear recollection of any save one which was presented to Washington by LaFayette and planted by Jefferson, at Washington's request, as he wished the tree to commemorate the many pleasant hours spent in the company of these two illustrious men. A few minutes were spent in looking off down the river from the front piazza, and in examining the old flagstones forming the floor of the piazza and paths.

Mount Vernon is in the hands of a society who endeavor to preserve everything as it was a century ago; it has been necessary to entirely rebuild some of the Quarters and the carriage house, etc., and the utmost pains is taken to keep the shrubbery from being carried off piecemeal by marauding visitors. The front of the house still retains its original flagstone paths.

We stopped in Alexandria to pay our respects to the old Christ church where Washington and Lee and other prominent statesmen worshiped; were shown the original signatures of the first vestrymen of the church and the old Bible which did duty for that generation. We sat down in the square, high-backed pew that Washington's family occupied and tried to imagine the other pews peopled with his neighbors. On one side of the pulpit hung a picture of Washington and on the opposite side a picture of Lee, who is held in equal veneration in this part of the country.

The homeward trip was very quiet, each one being busy with the varied pictures imagination called forth, and we soon were separated to different sections of the country, but shall always have pleasant remembrances of our day at Mount Vernon.

A True Story.

TWO little boys from the kindergarten went into the barber-shop to have their hair cut. Two men were already there waiting their turn. The barber said to one of the little boys, "Run over to the store and see if my assistant is there. Tell him to hurry up and come back, there are four men waiting." The boy went, found the man and gave the message, except that he said there were two men and two boys waiting. Then he added, "The barber told me to say four men, but I wasn't going to tell a lie for two men." "Why not?" asked the man. "Why," answered the boy, "don't you suppose we have got a picture of George Washington over in our kindergarten?" The kindergartner who told the story said she should tell the story of the "cherry-tree" with renewed interest and vigor.

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I begin to feel like the old woman who lived in a shoe, "who had so many children she didn't know what to do." A whole lot of little letters are piled up in my desk and I find that I shall have to answer them collectively, for it will be impossible to print them all. Fifteen letters have come from a school in Dows, Iowa, so I must introduce all these new nephews and nieces to the Cozy Cornerers. Here they are: Willie Valline, Albert Anderson, Ephraim Anderson, Frank Fults, August Anderson, Adolph Swanson, Delia Pearson, Laura Johnson, Hulda Swanson, Jennie Nicholson, Esther Swanson, Ellen Pearson, Ellen Anderson, Anna Pearson and Hilma Pearson. What a lot of good work for temperance these boys and girls will be able to do. I am sure that we are all very glad to have them come into our Cozy Corner. Their teacher is Mrs. E. M. Amory, and she has told them all about us and our L. T. L. Perhaps some of you will like to write to them.

Lovingly yours,
AUNT MARY.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—We do not have an L. T. L. where I live, so I joined the W. C. T. U. where my mamma belongs. I am only ten years old, but I want to do all the good I can as long as God keeps me in the world. My mamma and I wear a white ribbon.

The Twelfth and Twenty-Second of February.

AS the years go by these days should become more and more patriotic holidays. We are credited as a nation with having much enthusiasm, but we have never turned it to great account in honoring the deeds of our heroes. Other nations surpass us immensely in this particular. The present generation knows far too little of Washington and Lincoln, and of the principles of which they were great exponents. It is a wise and a happy thought that just now so many periodicals are reprinting parts of Lincoln's "Washington's Birthday Address," delivered February 22, 1842, at Springfield, Ill., before the Washingtonian Temperance Society. In that address, fifty-six years ago, Lincoln prophesied two political revolutions, one to free the land from slavery and one to free it from drunkenness. The first has been accomplished and the mutterings of the second are already in our ears. In that speech, wonderful on many accounts, and in which he said of our revolution of independence, "It breathed forth famine, swam in blood, and rode in fire," he made the following prophecy concerning the revolution against strong drink:

Turn now to the temperance revolution. In it we shall find a stronger bondage broken, a viler slavery manumitted, a greater tyrant deposed—in it, more of want supplied, more disease healed, more sorrow assuaged. By it, no orphans starving, no widows weeping; by it, none wounded in feeling, none injured in interest. Even the drammaker and dramseller will have glided into other occupations so gradually as never to have felt the change, and will stand ready to join all others in the universal song of gladness. And what a noble ally this to the cause of political freedom! With such an aid, its march cannot fail to be on and on, till every son of earth shall drink in rich fruition the sorrow-quenching draughts of perfect liberty! Happy day, when, all appetites controlled, all passions subdued, all matter subjugated, mind—all-conquering mind—shall live and move, the monarch of the world! Glorious consummation! Hail, fall of fury! Reign of reason, all hail!

And when the victory shall be complete—when there shall be neither a slave nor a drunkard on the earth—how proud the title of that land which may truly claim to be the birthplace and the cradle of both those revolutions that shall have ended in that victory! How nobly distinguished that people who shall have planted and nurtured to maturity both the political and moral freedom of their species!

Time has only served to prove Lincoln to have been correct in estimating the drink evil as the "stronger bondage," the "viler slavery," the "greater tyrant," and manumitment from it as the next step in political freedom after the abolition of negro slavery. How fitting, then, that the birthdays of the father of his country and the emancipator of his country should be devoted to a better understanding of the greater revolution to be wrought out for the salvation of our republic. In the American revolution it was freedom from foreign oppression; in the second it was to free the negro, in the third it will be the emancipation of white and black, North and South, from slavery to a debasing, degrading, damning practice, destructive to body, soul and nation. We are under the curse of God. Who will arise to lead us across the Red Sea? Who can unify the temperance forces? Who can bring together the tens of thousands who already see the necessity of freeing Laocoon, the chosen priest of freedom among nations, from the coils of the awful serpents that come from our seas of intoxicating drink, and strangle every high hope of home and nation! Whoever this leader shall be, that one will be greater than Moses, and we say it reverently, greater than Washington, greater than Lincoln, and that political party through which it shall be accomplished will have achieved greater honor and more undying fame than is as yet written in the annals of history.

Train the young people on the birthdays of these two great men to cry with Lincoln, "Hail, fall of fury! Reign of reason, all hail!" and to work intelligently for that day when Gambrinus shall be dead and Christ shall reign.

How to Improve the Conditions of Country Life.

THE Social Settlements movement has become one of the leading features of modern philanthropy. Briefly stated, the idea underlying this movement is the bringing together in social contact heretofore distinct classes of society. Instead of cultured, Christian people forming their own social cliques and shutting themselves away from the more unfortunate members of our common humanity, in these settlements, people of education, Christian culture and Christian character deliberately settle among the poverty stricken, the ignorant, the criminal, and make it the business of their lives to lift these wretched ones to their own plane of living.

It is not the purpose of this editorial to explain at length the methods of the Social Settlements. We call attention to them for the purpose of pointing out that a work parallel but not exactly similar to that which they are doing in the cities needs to be done in the rural districts. It is unfortunate that something of the kind has not already been undertaken in the country. Doubtless the cause for this neglect is that the needs of the rural population are not such as to challenge general attention. Because of the scattered population, the outbreaking crime, the depths of vice and corruption characteristic of city slum life are unknown in the rural districts. Comparing themselves with this degraded city life, country people have always regarded themselves complacently as much superior to their city neighbors. People generally have been accustomed to regard the country as the nursery of the nation's strength, and the serious decadence of true life in the country has only of late begun to attract the attention of thinking people.

We have indicated that a work parallel to that done by the Social Settlements in the cities needs also to be done in the country. In the latter place there is this difference and this advantage, there is no call for missionaries from the outside. In every rural community there are individuals fitted by their own intellectual development and their appreciation of a higher mode of life, to inaugurate such a movement as we have indicated in a previous editorial.

The task is not so difficult a one as may be supposed. There is no need, indeed, it is most undesirable, that there should be any announcement of an intention to revolutionize the life of the community. Notwithstanding the unfortunate conditions already pointed out and the lack of intellectual life, there is, after all, a very general appreciation among country people of the value of such life and culture. With very few exceptions they neglect their own intellectual culture, not because they do not recognize its worth, but because they believe they have neither the time nor the means to devote to it. It is therefore comparatively easy for any person of tact and wisdom to arouse interest in a movement which does not seem to undertake too much, for intellectual culture. A reading circle whose aims at first are modest, may accomplish results which will astonish its originator. This, indeed, is the history of all great movements. We have only to read to find from what small beginnings large results have started, and under what difficulties, with what seeming discouragements, the world's great workers have achieved their ends.

We know personally of a young man, a college graduate, who went into a country community as a teacher. He was a man of beautiful spirit who gave most generous appreciation to all the good he saw in those whom he met. Never by word or look did he intimate that he considered himself in the least better than those around him. But he did succeed in making a profound impression that the intellectual life of the community was far below what it ought to be and what it could be. In the end he organized a young people's literary society which held regular meetings with literary programs and which gradually built up an excellent circulating library which has done unmeasured good in that community. Through his influence many of the young people took a partial or complete course in a neighboring college, and returning to their homes, permanently affected the intellectual status of the community. In the course of a few years he also revolutionized the school system. A similar work may be done in any country community. An active W. C. T. U. could well take up such a work as one of its departments.

But, as we intimated in a previous discussion of country life, we are well aware that other causes lie at the root of the decadence of country life which a movement of this kind will not directly reach. The conditions of our social system which are driving the working people to the wall and seem to be building up a plutocracy, have forced farm produce down to the lowest prices and are making it harder every year to secure more than a bare living from agricultural pursuits. It is of no use to expect that American young people will remain upon the farms if they see before them only lives of hardest toil with no prospect of even a competence for old age. Yet such a movement as we have indicated will indirectly help to solve these problems also. No one can claim to be wise enough to clearly see just whither the modern changes are tending, what is to be the outcome of the political and social turmoil and chaos of the present. If it were not for "the divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them as we may," we might well give ourselves up to the gravest apprehensions. And yet, while we may safely trust to that divinity, there can be no doubt that the wisest, most intelligent thought on our part is necessary, if we are to be saved from disasters similar to those of the French revolution. The thought of every intelligent man and woman should be given to the problems which confront us. Let the people of the country be aroused from their intellectual apathy, let them be brought together in any kind of social and intellectual organization, and very soon their best thought would be directed to the solution of the problems which so nearly concern them. Good and only good must result. It is by just such means that the great questions which are pressing upon us must be settled. There is every reason why the people of the rural districts should have their part in this work. But they can not do it if they maintain their present isolated life with its meagre intellectual opportunities and development. Only through organizations where they shall be brought into contact with the thought of their neighbors and with that of the world, can they make themselves felt as a distinct power in deciding the issues which involve the reconstruction of our social system.

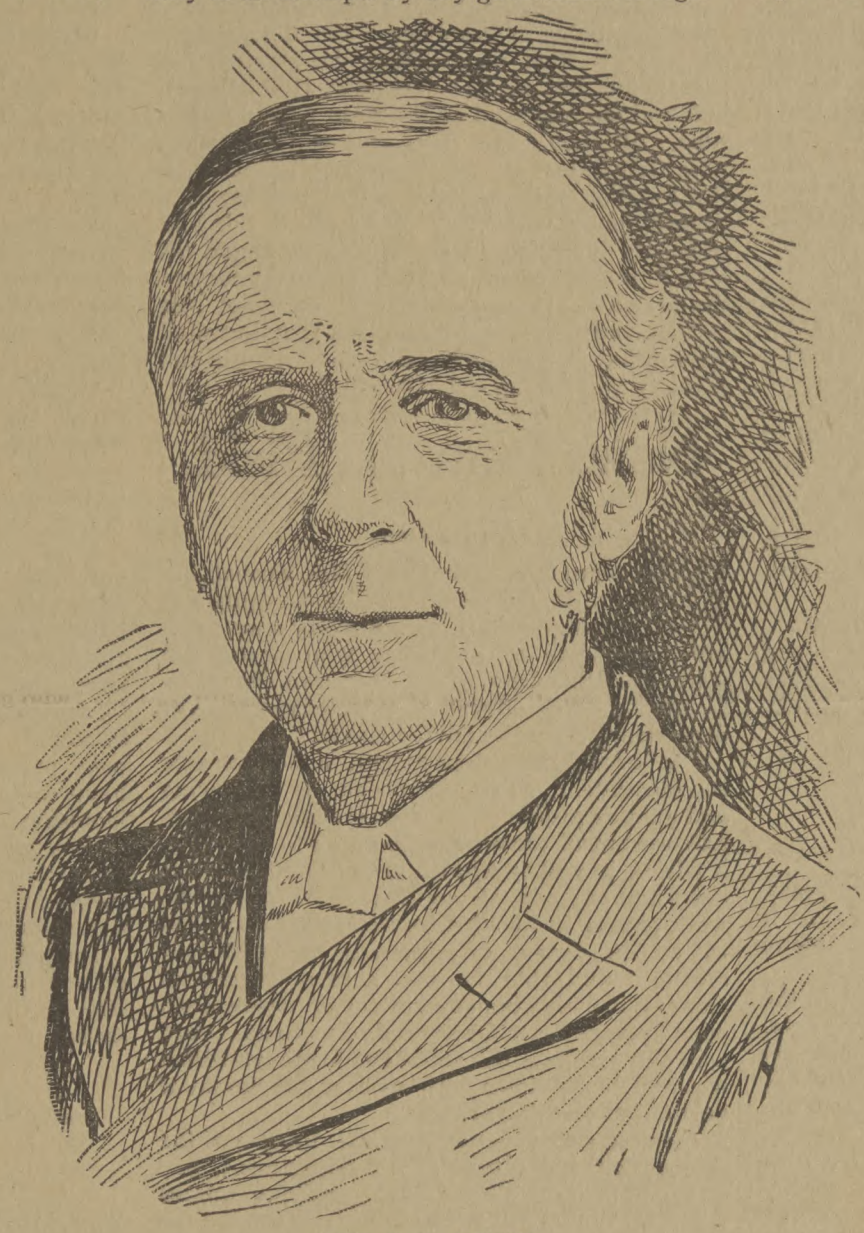
A Strange Coincidence.

MRS. MARY A. LIVERMORE, writing to Mrs. Baxter in high commendation of her effort to bring together a collection of coins, stamps and relics, that she may by their sale create a working fund for the National W. C. T. U., says some very interesting things. So far as we know the coincident of the direction of the bullet which killed Abraham Lincoln, and the crack in a bronze medal which Mrs. Livermore donates to the cause, has never been published to the world. She says:

"I will send you a bronze medal struck off for the first sanitary fair, held in 1863, in Chicago, to commemorate the great occasion. On one side is the head of President Lincoln, and on the obverse a representation of the goods of the sanitary commission, intended for the sick and wounded soldiers, which are being unladen at the wharf of a city. By permission of the government, the medal was stamped at the Philadelphia mint, and the die somehow got cracked in the process of stamping. The crack showed in every one of the beautiful medals, although it would not be noticed by a careless observer. But the remarkable thing is that that slight crack indicates the track of the bullet sent into the brain of the martyred president, by Wilkes Booth, as unerringly as if it had been designed for that purpose."

She also says, "I will send you a copy in wax of the private seal of George Washington, donated to the World's Fair by some one in Washington."

Mrs. Baxter is greatly encouraged and believes that white-ribboners are going to put into her hands a collection which will in time greatly help to provide sinews of war for the great temperance revolution.



THE following letter from Dr. Mary Wood-Allen was commented upon in our last issue. We know of no one better fitted for the World's Superintendent of Purity than Dr. Allen and hope her recovery may be speedy:

To the General Officers of the World's W. C. T. U.:

DEAR SISTERS:—I have just received notification of my appointment to the World's superintendency of purity work, in place of Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, resigned. I have greatly regretted Mrs. Butler's resignation for I felt that at this juncture we needed wise leadership in a determined opposition to governmental regulation of vice. I accept the position with some reluctance and desire to place myself on record as occupying, in this matter, the same position as my predecessor; that is, of an unqualified hostility to all attempts by any government to legislate so as to make vice easy or appear to make vice safe. This is exactly the position which I know you would wish me to occupy. But in my present condition of convalescence from serious illness, I must ask that for some months I shall be considered only as a figure-head, for I am forbidden all mental exertion until my health is entirely restored. I hope, in the not far distant future, to be able to do active and efficient work for the cause. Thanking you for the confidence expressed by the honor conferred upon me, and assuring you of my unswerving loyalty to the highest standards of morality, I am,

Your sincere co-worker,

MARY WOOD-ALLEN.

REV. F. B. MEYER.

REV. F. B. MEYER of London has recently filled a series of engagements in a number of our largest cities with great acceptability. His mission is to promote deeper spiritual life among Christians and he has been especially helpful to ministers along the line of how to reach the masses. A favorite proposition of his is that if one obeys the laws of the Holy Spirit it will be responsive to the desires of that one; just as by obeying the laws of gravitation water can be made the servant of man. Rev. Meyer succeeded Newman Hall in Christ Church, London, and his work is remarkable for its varied character among different classes of people. Many of his books are listed in the W. T. P. A. catalogue and are much appreciated by white-ribboners for their deep spirituality.

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

Miss Lillian N. Phelps, of St. Catharine's, Ontario, Canada, has been made a local preacher by the Methodist church of which she has been a member since her childhood. She is probably the only local woman preacher in Ontario.

The legislature of Mississippi passed a resolution asking Miss Ackermann to speak before them. This was a great and very unusual recognition of W. C. T. U. work. The ministers of Jackson had refused the use of a church.

Mrs. M. H. Shay has been appointed state superintendent of Ohio for railroad work. Mrs. Woodward, the National superintendent, met her in Chicago, and together they go for special work through Ohio on the Erie and other eastern systems.

By mistake a playful personal letter appeared in our columns lately, headed, "Dear UNION SIGNAL." Let it be remembered that the one who wrote it had no thought of its ever appearing, indeed supposed she was absolutely certain of the opposite.

Miss Parrish writes in a private letter: "Japan is wonderfully stirred just now, and my special prayer is that Mr. Crittenton may come, or send us more help. Now is the time to strike. Since I finished my letter I have read the following in the Nagasaki Press, 'It is said that the secret shipping of women from Japan is greatly on the increase.' Isn't it dreadful? My courage almost fails."

A number of the states are already well on the way of their membership race and some have determined to double the number this year. Our workers should bear in mind that they can not always sow and reap at the same time. If they do faithful work the results will appear even "after many days." After all, it is very desirable to be enlarged by intelligent additions, well grounded in the faith and ready to obey drill masters and generals until the army is invincible.

Miss E. W. Greenwood, World's evangelistic superintendent, has just returned from three weeks of service on Cape Cod, Mass. Twenty-four of these were evangelistic services, three temperance lectures, one lecture in the Winter Lecture Bureau Course, and one address to children. Of these services the Harwich Independent says: "Miss Greenwood has drawn phenomenal audiences. She is a winsome, womanly, logical speaker, uttering the message with the rare power of a refined, educated, consecrated woman. Never has the gospel been preached here with more sweetness, clearness and power."

Rev. Arthur Little, of the Second Parish church (Congregational) of Dorchester, Mass., formerly of Chicago, was married, February 1, to Miss Elizabeth Wales. Dr. Little is a firm friend of the W. C. T. U., and a wedding cake was presented by the domestic science department of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. "The Dorchester" was of dark, rich color, garlanded in "Maypole" fashion with white ribbon. The rule for making "The Dorchester" will be sent to any white-ribboner if a request with stamp is sent to Marion A. McBride, Arlington Heights, Mass.

The Clara Parrish Fund.

DEAR YOUNG WOMEN:—The money for this fund is coming in very slowly. I am sure you only need a word of reminder to stir you to new vigilance in this matter. On January 24 I sent Miss Parrish $25, the first I have been able to send since October. Last year the total receipts were $212.93, and this amount was contributed by eleven states, namely, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, Minnesota and North Dakota. Will not those states which sent no contribution last year make a special effort this year?

There are many ways by which this money may be raised. One very pleasant method is by giving a Japanese tea, and either charging admission, selling refreshments, or taking a collection. In addition to the decorations and costumes which make these teas so pleasant, could be given a literary program, consisting of papers on the life of Miss Parrish, her work in Japan, the peculiarities of the Japanese people, etc. A recent number of the Century magazine gave a delightful description of the morning-glories of Japan. Selections might be read from this article. Your own ingenuity will suggest many ways, but in some way I hope you will endeavor to raise money for this faithful worker who is giving her life to our cause in this far-away land.

Yours for temperance everywhere,
MARY E. CAMPBELL.

Y's at Work.

WEST VIRGINIA.

DEAR Y EDITOR:—The Y work in our state, I am sorry to say, is not flourishing as it might. Last year the secretary was not able to get a single report.

Our young women seem to be enlisted in the W. C. T. U's, and are doing excellent work there. Indeed, in many unions, the young women are the leaders in the work, and without them the W. C. T. U. would, seemingly, accomplish nothing.

Under the new plan of work which our dear Mrs. Boole has given us, I think we can accomplish more than ever before. By thus enlisting our young women, we may be able to awaken the listless ones to a full realization of their responsibilities, and to the fact that they are to be the future mothers of our voters; then they will, by active work, a keen interest in these problems of life, and thoughts made pure by prayer, prepare themselves for these responsibilities. What a change will then be wrought by their influence!

I know of no other place to so impress them, as in the W. C. T. U., or the Y Branch. May we not thus bring them to consecrate their lives to this glorious work?

LENI L. MCWHORTER,
Sec. Y Branch, Buckhannon.

THE young women of Roseville, O., have organized what they call the "Y. G. C.," or Young Girls' Club, but which has been nicknamed the "Antijag." The girls have signed a pledge not to accept the attentions of young men who are accustomed to the use of intoxicating drinks, and are making their influence felt in the little town where they live. For some reason the members did not seem to think it advisable to form a Y Branch, but the writer confesses that they would like to do more for the young men than their present organization permits. Such temperance principles must inevitably crystallize into a Y Branch and the boys can become honoraries.

World's Wave Crests.

JESSIE A. PITT, aged fourteen, is secretary of the Anna A. Gordon L. T. L. at Panama. She writes that the members attended service at the Wesleyan church on a recent Sunday, where a special sermon was preached to them by the Rev. Mr. A. W. Geddes. The American consul, Mr. Gudger, was present and the local authorities sent the Legioners a bodyguard of six policemen and one vigilante.

MRS. ELISABET SELMER writes: "I have the joy of reporting that besides the small branch of the W. C. T. U. already existing in Norrkoping, Sweden, another small branch has been recently organized in Stockholm and in several other towns we have gained members who are eagerly waiting for my returning there to try to secure members enough for organizing. In each town they are to form their laws and to work out their plans themselves until a real National W. C. T. U. can be formed through the representatives of a suitable number of branches. Till now, we are sorry to say, that no president for Sweden has been found, but we feel sure that God Himself will find out and send us the right person in His time; till then, the Swedish white-ribboners wish that I shall be the connecting link between the Swedish branches themselves and between these branches and the W. W. C. T. U. It had been my intention to stay in Copenhagen till March, but it seems as if God opens my way to Switzerland just now and then I dare not rest neither confine my work to Copenhagen, but shall go southwards, trusting Him for strength and capacity of working out His will."

News from the Field.

Minnesota.

EVER since state convention Mrs. Scovell has been in the field lecturing, encouraging and organizing unions, and in every way proving the wisdom of the women who elected her state president, proving, too, her own evangelistic spirit and revealing her source of power, even dependence upon the Divine Leader.

The evangelistic department, under its new superintendent, Miss Hitchcock, is advancing and gaining ground, and when it shall have been extended to all the unions according to her plans, it will be in reality what it always is ideally, the chief corner-stone of our work. So often the work presses upon all sides with such force that we are in danger of forgetting to "withdraw awhile," and this the half hour of devotional exercise to which our superintendent desires each one to pledge herself, will remind us to do. And who can estimate the abundant blessings which we shall bring down with us from the mount of meditation and prayer.

A sweet, sisterly letter from Mrs. Burgan of the lumberman work, tells of her department, one of the best in our state. Many outlying unions who can do but little, can send packages to the lumber camps, and it is one of the easiest departments in which to enlist people not members of the unions. Almost everybody will respond to requests for papers and magazines for the camps.

The new cigaret law proves very effective where tried. It provides not only for the fine or imprisonment of the seller, but also for the arrest of the user. Any officer who sees a minor using tobacco in any form, or to whom complaint is made by a citizen, shall arrest the offender, and if he is convicted he may be sentenced to five days imprisonment or a fine of ten dollars, the court having power to suspend sentence if the offender gives information as to where he secured the tobacco, so that teachers now have it in their power to act effectively. One teacher in this city tells of three boys who freely admitted that they had been smoking and chewing, but not until the new law was read and explained to them could they be induced to tell where they had procured their supplies. Confronted by this new aspect of affairs, one of the boys quickly wrote down a list of nineteen dealers who sold him the vile stuff, and another boy gave the names of twelve. It now behooves the unions more than ever to see to it that teachers are themselves awake to this subject, and that scientific temperance instruction is faithfully carried on.

Hennepin county union has found the annual gathering so helpful that for several years it has had a semi-annual gathering also. The one last fall was held in Camden Place M. E. church. A franchise parliament was held one hour, Dr. Cora S. Eaton, president of the State Suffrage Association, being one of the speakers. Rev. Mr. Sharpe, pastor of the church, gave an excellent Bible reading. Two papers on narcotics were read, followed by a spirited discussion. Superintendents of various departments gave five minute speeches. Matron Paine, of the city jail, thrilled all hearts with her account of work among the erring women. The evening was occupied by a matrons' contest, six speakers in the class, the medal being awarded to Mrs. W. F. Pratt, who recited "The W. C. T. U. and Aunt Columbia."

Princeton union has sent ten dollars to the Temple; given several books bought from the W. T. P. A. to the high school libraries, and are collecting "wrappers." They send THE UNION SIGNAL and White Ribboner to the pastors, and are carrying on several departments of work.

Crookston union had not held a meeting since last May until in January. The union had over $200 in the bank, received from the sale of some property they had owned, and the January meeting was called to make disposal of this sum and (perhaps) to wind up affairs generally. They voted to send $200 to the Temple, and then decided they were not ready to die just yet! So six women paid their dues and appointed a meeting for the next month, also planned for a union temperance meeting of the churches and an address by one of the pastors. May they live forever.

Euclid union has only three members, but they supply the freight train with literature once a week, send papers to the lumber camps and make the most of the temperance topics in the Christian Endeavor. Would that every community had three such women.

Duluth Central union recently held a social gathering, the president surprising the ladies with light refreshments. Plans were laid for a parlor meeting in the near future. The West Duluth union has held several meetings of unusual interest, one being devoted to the topic, "Coöperation Between Parents and Teachers," at which over forty teachers and many mothers were present. The meeting ended in a social hour, with refreshments. Another meeting on Sunday-school work was held, attended by Sabbath-school teachers. New Duluth union held a pleasant and profitable "Old Folks' Concert" early in the winter, and the Oneota W's and Y's a parlor meeting of much interest.

Lucy Hayes union of this city has sent twenty dollars to the Temple, and all the unions of the city are making more or less effort to help in saving our House Beautiful.

WHILE I have not many items to give this time, I intend to still "toot our horn," and perhaps the press superintendents of our unions will see I am determined to do my best and will send in reports.

At the last convention in Carrollton, the annual allowance for state superintendents was decreased and we were all wondering how to get out the most work with the least money, but our hearts were made glad the other day to receive word that each superintendent has had her "wages" raised and she will now be able to do better work, and more of it, too.

Miss Morris, state superintendent of contests, presented each of the young ladies who took part in the diamond contest at Carrollton, with a Christmas present of a solid silver souvenir spoon with the Crusade church in the bowl, and of which they are very proud. The first contest for Lincoln was held December 17, which was very successful; also the first contest for Fairfield was held January 4. Ridgeway, Maysville and Grant City will have contests right away. Blythedale expects to have a grand gold contest before the next convention.

"Resolved that whisky has caused more sorrow and destruction of lives than war," was the question discussed by young men interested in the work at Cassville, January 14, and which the union assisted to make a success.

The Good Citizen is a splendid temperance paper published at Gallatin, and is not afraid to tell what it thinks. Mrs. Dr. Pipkin, president of the Jameson union, is one of the directors.

Blue Ridge union held a New Year's reception which gained them friends. Bethany served a New Year's dinner which was profitable to them, and they received many kind words because of the excellent manner in which the dinner was served. This union, with the help of some friends, presented one of their members, who is poor in this world's goods, with an ear trumpet so that she can now enjoy the meetings, which pleasure she had long been deprived of because of being hard of hearing.

Mrs. Callie Hoover Howe has been doing grand work in the fourth district. The unions she visited are all enthused to greater work.

The Maysville Chautauqua is already making arrangements for the W. C. T. U. hour at its next Assembly. Mrs. Boleyn, who has charge of this hour, will try to secure Rev. Anna Shaw for one of the speakers. The directors of the Chautauqua were more than well pleased with the ladies who spoke for them last year, and are anxious for the W. C. T. U. to be represented again.

I would be very glad if the organizers, superintendents, and in fact every one who has a good item of the work in Missouri would send same to me. I want to do my best but must have your assistance.

NO report of the work in this state has appeared in THE UNION SIGNAL columns for several months, the state reporter, Mrs. S. E. Shorthill, having gone to Skaguay in September. As Mrs. Shorthill was a host in herself, being also press superintendent, state treasurer and president of the Tacoma union, she is sorely missed. With her went another valued worker, Mrs. Flinn, of Tacoma. But they carried the W. C. T. U. spirit with them, and when death came to a little child, the first to be taken from the new town, our two sisters visited the poor mother, trimmed the plain, pine coffin as daintily as possible, followed it to the grave and conducted the funeral services, there being no clergyman in the town.

At the recent meeting of the state executive, the vacancies caused by the resignation of Mrs. Shorthill and others, were filled; the department of Christian citizenship was taken up; our National treasurer's financial scheme was aired, approved and recommended to the local unions, and plans were set on foot for a general temperance council to be held next March in Seattle, and to which all temperance organizations in the state will be invited to send representatives. Report of White Shield Home was read, which was keenly interesting. Those in charge of the institution come in touch with many a pitiful romance which never finds its way into print. Of forty-four women and girls sheltered at the home, seventeen have married and are living quietly in their own homes, most of them having their little ones with them. Seven were married from the home. The girls are instructed in all branches of household work and an innovation has been tried with great success, that of promoting capable and earnest inmates to the position of nurse and assistant nurse. A grand religious spirit prevails, and the home is as the gate of heaven to many a storm-tossed and trodden-down soul.

From the local unions few items come in, and your reporter finds herself sympathizing with those Israelites of old to whom came the mandate, "There shall no straw be given you, yet shall ye deliver the tale of bricks." But it is not that our unions are idle, they simply neglect to report.

There are a few exceptions. Olympia is doing good service, having circulated and presented to the city council petitions against nickel-in-the-slot machines, and other gambling devices, licensing of saloons, taking fines from houses of ill-fame, also praying for a curfew law. Clergymen were asked to preach Neal Dow memorial sermons, and a memorial service was also held at the Salvation Army barracks, where many who never attend church heard of the life and works of the "grand old man" of Maine.

Tacoma union is active under its new president, Mrs. Alice Ridout, late of Olympia. They held a ten-days' prayer service during the World's and National Conventions. Three public meetings have recently been held in different parts of the city. Two California women, Mrs. Marshall and Mrs. Lickerby, have lately settled in the city, and much is hoped from their advent, as they are active and experienced workers. Miss Emma Page, state organizer, visited the union lately and lectured on mercy work.

Our indefatigable state president, Miss Mary L. Page, writes: "It is my purpose to visit every union in Western Washington before next convention. I have recently returned from our northern counties where I found a lot of lovely, consecrated women who are praying and working for the advancement of our cause. The Seahome union is doing excellent work. They were helping the Y. M. C. A. to get papers and magazines for their reading room. At a parlor meeting held the day I was there, twenty-five dollars was reported collected, with many good papers beside. The canvass for this money helped to call attention to the union, and was a practical answer to the question, 'What is the W. C. T. U. doing?' They are also arranging a plan by which the leaders of the Junior Christian Endeavor and Epworth League may coöperate with the superintendent of L. T. L. work. The union will furnish the L. T. L. manuals, and the leaders propose to give one lesson a month from them and one lesson a month on mercy. I shall watch with interest the development of this plan, for I believe it holds the key to the situation in many places where the children and grown people, too, are burdened with such a multiplicity of organizations that they feel there is no room for an L. T. L. This will be an economy of time and money, to say nothing of having in every church a leader for our special lines with children.

"At Mount Vernon I had the privilege of making two half-hour addresses to the Skagit County Teachers' Institute on narcotics, alcohol, mercy and school savings banks. I also held a woman's meeting, at which half the audience were men, two being ministers."

Miss Page also visited Whatcom, Bay View, Coupeville and Orting, holding meetings, encouraging the unions and giving a great impetus to the work.

Everett union has been making a specialty of the scientific temperance instruction department. Last year they offered prizes in each grade in the public schools, followed by a public meeting, at which the prizes were presented and the prize essays read. This was pronounced the best temperance meeting ever held in Everett. Its educative influence was beyond computation. This year the School Physiology Journal is sent to the twenty-three public school teachers, and recently a scientific temperance instruction reception was given to these teachers and the school officials. This also was quite a success, and the union has the pleasure of believing that the majority of Everett directors, teachers and pupils are in hearty sympathy with scientific temperance teaching.

JACKSONVILLE union has opened a Woman's Exchange where home-made bread, pies, doughnuts and all such appetizing things are for sale; besides articles of wearing apparel and fancy work—all the handiwork of women. May success crown the efforts of our busy sisters.

From Ocala, Mrs. J. H. Benjamin, press superintendent, writes of regular business meetings held, sending flowers to the afflicted, to churches and funerals, frequent visits made to jails and services held, papers and Bibles given to prisoners.

Mrs. Mattie J. Crippen, of Ft. Reid, for years the efficient treasurer of Florida W. C. T. U., after an absence of more than two years from the state, has returned to "fair Florida." Her white-ribbon sisters heartily welcome her home, knowing that she is "a tower of strength" to the cause we love.

Mrs. Kathleen Kennedy, an Illinois white-ribboner, has been in Tampa arranging to give one of her popular entertainments, part of the proceeds to be applied to the relief of the suffering poor of the city. Refugees from Cuba, who have escaped barely with their lives, come to us destitute. Many can not get work and many others have never learned to work, can not speak our language, and are certainly in a pitiable condition. The sympathy of all classes of citizens is aroused in their behalf.

The president and secretary of Tampa union, assisted by other members, expect to organize a Y Branch in Ybor city this month. Ybor city is a suburb of Tampa, its citizens principally Cuban. Much is being done to Christianize this people, and the W. C. T. U. is humbly trying to do a part.

Oregon.

CONVENTIONS evidently culminated in the state convention, and they have not had time to sprout again. I have but one for the counties to chronicle, that of Coos, down south, just preceding our general one. The reporter says it was "full of good things, amusing, cheering, serious and earnest." It was closed by a contest, at which Miss Pearl Hoyt was the happy winner.

I had to leave last time some state superintendents' reports unmentioned. They must now be brief, as other matter waits. Our superintendent for foreign work has left the state, and will be much missed, for she was full of enthusiasm and energy. She speaks of having distributed 5,000 pages. Mrs. Docia Macy has worked hard in the purity department; 250 meetings have been held and 35,000 pages scattered; 87 articles sent to press that were partly on the question, and 14 entirely so; the petition work was well attended to. Mrs. Dalgleish tells of 41 parlor meetings, which were almost invariably the net to take fresh members.

I can not give the date, but the superintendent for the Indian work, Mrs. Speer, sends a newspaper reporter's account of an Indian powwow held in the Umatilla Reservation, described thus by one of the Indians: "We are getting into the ways of the white man all right, for we have had a sure-enough temperance meeting. Chief Peo, Young Chief, No Shirt, Judge Cash Cash all spoke, and I made a speech myself."

Another issue of the paper speaks of the excitement caused on the Reservation by the tragic deaths of two of the Indians while intoxicated. A powwow was convened, and some of the speakers proposed a raid to demolish saloons where liquor was sold to Indians. One young squaw got up with a baby in her arms, and pointing wildly to the cemetery said: "See, the best of our tribe are planted there. The whisky seller looks for the good men when they have money, so he can rob them and us. He don't bother the lazy, no-good Indian who got no money." She went on in this strain for more than an hour and excited much enthusiasm. Another speaker said: "Most white women hated the liquor traffic. Let us ask them to help us; they have husbands and sons who are being killed like ours by the poison. If they won't help us, we must go and break the bottles in them bad saloons. Our men can't protect themselves, so the women must protect them."

Mrs. Rounds tells of 1,062 pledged to kindness in twenty-nine Bands of Mercy. She has distributed 15,781 pages. Mrs. Rounds has lately removed from southern Oregon to Monroe, in the Willamette valley, where she has just formed a union; curiously enough a saloon has cropped up almost simultaneously, so, as she says, organized effort is more necessary than ever.

Our new state organizer, Mrs. S. H. Spangler, is able to be much in the field. She visited her former home, Brownsville, (starting there an L. T. L.) where the women are very anxious to get rid of a saloon-y place just outside the city, that the frequenters have named the "Boomerang." From there she went to Waterloo, where the few faithful have been so vigilant that the liquor men say "they can hoodwink the men, but they can't do a thing with the women."

Mrs. Spangler has organized a union at Cottage Grove, with Mrs. R. V. Miller as president.

Mrs. Hoxter, of Portland, is out on a tour, interesting the unions in our Florence Crittenton Home, which, although friends have been very kind with their donations—particularly at Thanksgiving and Christmas—is in need of special help this year, having to struggle on with no state appropriation. Mrs. Hoxter has organized the first union in one of the Oregon mining districts which she hopes may prove a nucleus to a group of such. This was at Sumpter, with Mrs. W. E. Hahler as president.

The Portland Central union has been holding a series of home makers' conferences, well attended and interesting. They branch out and strengthen the hands of several city charities, such as the Men's Resort, where Mrs. Albee takes charge of the music as often as possible, and the sailors' mission, under the special charge of Mrs. Dalgleish. After a talk by Mrs. Additon at one of the entertainment evenings, nineteen of the boys signed the pledge. The Working Woman's Club, an offshoot of the Noon Rest frequenters, grows in strength and working capacity.

In our state corresponding secretary's notes I notice an interesting parlor meeting at University Park, Portland; a discussion of hygiene in the home at Albina, and a report of the splendid L. T. L. at Bandon, under Mrs. Scott. There are seventy-six members, and in the Mercy Band 108.

Gardiner union has lately held a matrons' contest, which was highly appreciated. Mrs. Criteser gained the prize, and $12.90 was dropped into the county treasury.

Before closing I should like to mention how the Astoria flower mission department grows plants of very varied nature. For instance, medicine, clothing and groceries at a cost of $16.10. Thanksgiving offering from the public school which resulted in a good Thanksgiving dinner for the needy ones. The committee have a trunk in their parlors for receiving donations from the public.

Sunday-school Department.

DEAR SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKERS: Our next quarterly temperance lesson appears March 20th. The lesson text is found in Matt. 14:1-12. Study also Dan. 5:1-31. The general temperance subject suggested by the lesson is, "The Evils of Social Drinking Customs." These may be traced in sacred and secular history as well as in society at the present time. In connection with the facts of the lesson this will be a fruitful subject. Seek to bring to your Sunday-school teachers and officers, facts and statistics and helpful literature on the subject. Attend teachers' meeting for this purpose and by personal effort endeavor to make this first temperance lesson of the new year one of the best. We are more and more convinced that the one great need in nearly every Sunday-school is better preparation for teaching the temperance lesson. We therefore suggest as the special work for March a union teachers' meeting. Local superintendents and temperance secretaries can easily arrange such a meeting, sending out invitations and securing the best person for leader of the lesson study. Let the temperance lesson be studied with the one purpose of making every temperance application possible. The general subject suggested above may be discussed. Relative points may be assigned to different persons for presentation, as for instance, "The custom of treating," "Liquor in the home," "Dangers of so-called temperance drinks," etc. Thus a most profitable evening will be spent.

We ask that you will continue your effort to increase our Sunday-school pledge chain. Enthusiastic work was done on Universal Temperance Sunday. Let it continue on each temperance Sunday. Send early for the pledge cards. Price twenty-five cents per hundred. We prepay postage on all orders for one hundred or less. We can do no more than this as cards are sold to workers at cost. Each new local superintendent should have our workers' package containing sample of all material used by the department. Price six cents postpaid.

We mention the supplement to The Young Crusader and ask that you will put it in the hands of all Sunday-school teachers and officers wherever it is impossible to distribute it to the entire school. Price sixty-five cents per one hundred. Send to the W. T. P. A., Chicago.

I beg your attention now to a very important item. Some fear is entertained by our World's superintendent, Mrs. W. F. Crafts, concerning the permanency of our quarterly temperance lesson. In view of this fact the department considers it advisable at this time to secure the signatures of pastors, Sunday-school superintendents, teachers and officers to the following resolution which may be copied and used, or we will gladly furnish printed copies in the form given below free of charge, only asking that you enclose postage with your order. Local superintendents, temperance secretaries and unions interested should send at once for this material. County superintendents can get knowledge of every Sunday-school in their respective counties with names of pastors and officers from the secretary of the county Sunday-school Association. Every Sunday-school should have opportunity to send signatures. Send all signatures to me as soon as received. By this effort we hope to fortify our temperance lesson at the next international Sunday-school convention.

I now have a pleasant announcement to make, and workers will please make note of it. Mrs. Dora B. Butts, who has served the department as secretary for the past three years and through whose efficiency much good work has been accomplished, has consented to become my associate. Her address is changed from Chicago to 345 Swan St., Buffalo, N. Y. Eastern workers will appreciate her residence among them, as she will serve them in many ways. Sample department literature can be secured of her, but all orders for quantities must be sent to me at St. Paul, Minn. Mrs. Butts will continue to keep the record of our co-workers, and all address cards of co-workers secured should be sent directly to her. She will also have charge of our National Sunday-school pledge chain. State superintendents will take note that they should send their state pledge chains to her.

We have had the good fortune to secure a capable and devoted worker as secretary of the department, Mrs. Della R. Mandigo, of Fargo, N. D., formerly a prominent state worker of Minnesota. She will prove a great blessing to us and to the work.

Ever yours in loving service,

Treasurer's Corner.

The ready responses that have been, and are coming to us from the local unions in answer to our appeal for a freewill offering for the work of the National have greatly cheered our hearts at Headquarters. They enabled us to send a special advance appropriation to our faithful superintendent of legislation, Mrs. Ellis, who is now in Washington at necessary expense looking after our interests during the session of Congress. We often feel and say, "How true and loyal the dear women are." We remember the time when Miss Willard asked each woman for ten cents to make up the $2,000 deficit, and within twenty-four hours after THE UNION SIGNAL was mailed the dimes began to pour in, and how they came, fifty, ninety, one hundred letters a day, until we had received $2,700; who would have believed it? Some said it was undignified to ask for ten-cent contributions, but it was a splendid exhibition of the love and interest of the women of the local unions.

In reply to our circular sent out a few weeks since explaining our business financial plan, some of the women wrote, "We are willing to do all we can for National and state treasuries, but we feel that a part of the percentage ought to go to the locals who do the work." Another wrote, "We will help all we can, but we should have more heart if the local treasury were benefited." We felt the force and justice of these claims and thought of asking the state treasurers to send on to the locals a part of their percentage. After thinking, talking and planning, we decided to extend our plan by adopting another article and to the locals we are to give the percentage and we hope to help them while they help us. We shall not ask the locals in this plan for one penny, but hope to put money in their treasury. Whatever strengthens the local union makes stronger the state and the National. You will soon receive the particulars of our plan. We feel sure every state president and all other state officers will rejoice that the hard working home women will be helped. This will add greatly to the work of the National treasurer, but we shall most cheerfully do this extra work. Miss Willard said at Buffalo, "Last year was a philanthropic year, this is an economic convention and we will look after our finances this year." We are very

Probably no one thing will more profoundly startle a man than to find out by actual proof what coffee drinking is doing for him. When he realizes that day after day the physical machinery is not working right, he naturally casts about for the cause in order to stop it before it goes too far.

But to locate the cause is frequently beyond the power of himself and even his physician. If such cases can be induced to drop coffee and other narcotic drugs like tobacco, etc., for a short period and use Postum Cereal Food Coffee, the truth is brought home in unmistakable terms.

The need of a pure cereal coffee for humanity was the active cause for the discovery of Postum. Plenty of "Coffee Substitutes" existed but their unpalatable taste prevented their use.

It required over a year of experiment to discover how to select the proper parts of cereals and roast them in such a way as to give the taste of a mild and high grade Java coffee and yet preserve the entire purity and food value.

Postum now has imitators that throw samples about, which claim to be pure "grain," "wheat" or "cereal coffee," but careful test and investigation shows that every article of that sort which has any distinctive coffee flavor, is simply a cheap, low grade adulterated coffee; a counterfeiter cares little what goes into a customer's stomach. The analysis of Postum is furnished the Pure Food Commissioners and Physicians of various states, and it is known to be absolutely pure and highly nutritive.

Ten days' use of the genuine Postum, properly boiled 15 minutes after boiling commences, tells surprising tales to partly sick men and women.

ambitious to reach a financial plane where our surplus at the close of a fiscal year will tide us over the first six months of the year, with their heavy expenses without the necessity of borrowing money and paying interest. Good business principles ought to prevail in a philanthropic society as well as in commercial matters. As long as we are on this mundane sphere, money is a necessity to success even in works of charity, philanthropy and church enterprises. So this year we have taken the keynote of our Chieftain and hope to sing a more cheery song of victory before the close of this present year and we ask the hearty cooperation of every woman and every union.

HELEN M. BARKER.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Many thanks, dear sisters, for the kind letters of sympathy which came to me during my sickness. I am once more at my desk, and I am sure you will all rejoice with me in knowing that I am in better health and strength than I have been for many months. Indeed, I can hardly remember feeling as much vigor as I am now rejoicing in. I am glad for the privilege of consecrating this new strength to our beloved work, and I am sure I may count upon you to aid in making it tell for the glory of God and the help of humanity.

I find many letters upon my desk giving cheering items of news of the work all over the country. I note with especial interest one from Mrs. Thurman written from New Orleans. She organized a union in that city less than a year ago, and has just revisited it. She finds that the work has not only been carried on by the union organized, but that, filled with the true missionary zeal, the women have gone out and organized unions in other parts of the city, so that during her visit she was permitted to organize the tenth union in New Orleans. Mrs. Thurman feels very confident, as must all who have looked into the matter at all, that the W. C. T. U. has a great work among the colored people of the south, that they only need help and encouragement to take up the work and carry it forward with vigor. I am trusting that during this year that help and encouragement may be given in larger measure than ever before.

Mrs. Unruh writes from Mississippi of good work that is being done there, three new unions with a membership of 150 having been organized since she entered the state and fifty members added to old unions. Mrs. Harford is still working in Kansas, and sending in reports of new unions organized with almost every mail. From the corresponding secretary of Iowa comes an admirable report of the work Mrs. L. G. Johnson did in the state from September up to the holidays. Miss Mix writes: "It does me good to get the reports of her labors for prohibition, purity, right relations between capital and labor and evangelistic work."

Not alone from organizers, but from state presidents and corresponding secretaries come words of encouragement, while the financial plan is being taken hold of with great enthusiasm. I believe we can prophesy one of the most earnest and aggressive years we have ever had as an organization.

Next week I hope to be so caught up with the accumulation of work that I shall be able to take time to make suggestions as to how this much desired end may be brought about.

Nat'l Temp. Hospital.

1619 Diversey Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The average number of patients in the hospital for January was about twenty, and there were no deaths for the month, which with so many, was rather unusual. The treasurer's report showed twenty-eight dollars received from all sources in response to the five cent call, but from "sounds in the air," we expect large returns from that call during the months of February and March. Much of real encouragement was reported at the last meeting of the board in regard to the increased interest of more physicians of high standing in Chicago. The staffs, aided by the board, are establishing a free dispensary in the basement of the hospital, to treat, at reduced rates, worthy poor. No better way to help those needing help on the lines of non-alcoholic treatment could be practically reached at this time. We hope for much good result from this department. The doctors kindly came to the front and assumed all necessary financial responsibility, which was not large. All departments in the institution are working together without friction; several very serious operations have taken place this last month, giving just that experience to our senior nurses which they need. The graduating exercises for five nurses will be held in Willard Hall the evening of February 18. We trust our friends will turn out in full force and fill the hall to its limit. A most cordial invitation is extended to all, and an interesting program has been prepared, time 7:45 P. M.

A letter from Moorestown, N. J., says: "At our county convention, held in Beverly last Thursday, we held a 'towel offering' for the National Temperance Hospital, which amounted to about two hundred towels. Miss Kate Lunden, who was at the hospital last winter, spoke at our state convention of the needs of the hospital, and through her suggestion you receive this supply of towels. We are now making our five cent collection all through the twenty-five unions in our county, in response to the call for the hospital's special need. I hope very much that we will be able to send you a good sum."

Thus patients, especially among our own women, after having received our hospitality go out, and through their personal effort, repay our care over and over again. The Y's, in response to Mrs. Boole's suggestion, are making preparations to hold hospital parlor meetings in April for our benefit. They are falling into line and sending their five cents, too. Any information needed in regard to these meetings will be given by Miss Cora W. Larimore, of Larimore, North Dakota, National custodian of the Y funds.

Mrs. H. E. Hammond, of Cleveland, O., writes: "Our city unions are taking hold of the hospital fund magnificently." Mrs. Forbes, of Connecticut, writes: "Our W. C. T. U. proposes to hold a public hospital meeting very soon, to raise money for our share of the debt and expenses." She says at the close of her letter, "I am doing my best to stir our state for the hospital;" there is no doubt but all the states will do their best. The call is so modest, the need so urgent, and the cause so worthy none will fail to respond to the necessities of the hour. Receipts were larger last quarter than for some time previous, but not yet up to the mark of entire self-support; indeed, actual experience teaches us that this is something not often reached in the hospital world. Christ taught His disciples that care for the sick was a Christian virtue in His lifetime. Are not conditions much the same to-day as then in this regard? Are we under less obligation now than then? This thought is worthy, we think, of those blessed with abundance of this world's goods. Where can we better put our money at interest than invest it in the Lord's vineyard?

Yours in the work,

(MRS.) MARGARET INGLEHART.

Organizers' Corner.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Since the Buffalo Convention I have been in my home state, having made lecture tours in two districts, besides devoting much time to local work. Meetings have been attended with varying degrees of success, but after years of this work one grows accustomed to the contrast between enthusiasm and stolid indifference, between well-planned and advertised meetings and those for which no preparation has been made, and the speaker arrives to find she must "rustle around" herself in order to secure an audience. I am not going to relate my adventures in this line, but rather to speak of a fact that is constantly being impressed upon me. It is that we have not half the young women enlisted in our work that we have a right to expect.

Of the need of them we are all aware. The intelligent, trained young women are of inestimable value to our cause, and even the untrained girl who is bright and lovable, may win to our way of thinking those who would not be influenced by science or method.

I believe that, after all, those over whom the mother-heart of the W. C. T. U. most yearns are the young men of the nation. But how few of these, comparatively, have donned the white ribbon. Let young women uphold our lofty ideals of manhood and womanhood, and lift our high standard of purity above the customs of society and we shall soon find "the boys" rallying to that standard. It is the Y. W. C. T. U. rather than the W. C. T. U. that brings the young men into our ranks as honorary members. If there were no other argument, this should be enough to cause every union to endeavor to organize a Y. Much of our work is especially suited to young people and the reason they are not doing it is because they have not been told how.

Surely the unions that are doing so much to instruct the children should not abandon them as soon as they are "grown up." The time of entering upon life's responsibilities is certainly the time when the trend of thought and action should be turned to things that are high and holy.

With an earnest desire that white-ribboners may love the girls "Y's-ly,"

"Vici" is a Conqueror.

The largest leather factory in the world is in Philadelphia. It is largest because it has greater demand upon it for the finished product than any other factory, and is often unable, even with an army of trained workmen, to keep up with this demand. This is the only factory where Vici kid is made. When Robert H. Foerderer invented the complicated process by which Vici kid is made from goat skins, he worked a revolution in the glazed kid trade. The beautiful finish of the new leather, its softness and its durability all marked it as a distinct advance, and orders poured in on him from all over the world. Even the odd name hit the popular fancy, for when he had gained the secret of making the leather Mr. Foerderer exclaimed with Cæsar, "Vici,"—I conquered. The praise of Vici kid rang in the ears of every one, even Li Hung Chang, and that comfort-loving statesman had several pairs of boots made from it for his personal use. Shoes for men, women and children are made from Vici kid; and in strength, lightness, beauty and durability the leather has fully met every demand upon it. A leather dressing has been prepared by Mr. Foerderer which is as much better than other dressings as Vici kid is better than other leathers. This dressing was intended to keep up the high standard of Vici kid, but the Vici dressing is equally good for other leathers, making them soft and keeping them from cracking in all kinds of weather. It is worth while to write to Mr. Robert H. Foerderer, Philadelphia, and ask him for a free copy of "Shoeology." It is beautifully illustrated and crammed full of interesting facts.

The Scientific Catarrh Inhaler, which treats local catarrh with medicated air, is an invention which should be welcomed by all sufferers from this disease. It is of course equally efficacious for pains in the head, resulting from catarrh, or deafness, or buzzing and roaring in the head, bronchitis, sore throat, asthma and hay fever. These local diseases are best reached and most quickly and effectively cured by local application. The medicated air penetrates all the minute cells of the parts affected, and spreads itself out over every membrane and is absorbed by every tissue. Hence the disease is reached in all its hiding places. It is superior to any similar remedy offered to the public for cold in the head. It is also so simple that any child can use it.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN once received a letter asking for a "sentiment" and his autograph. He replied: "Dear Madam: When you ask from a stranger that which is of interest only to yourself, always enclose a stamp. There's your sentiment and here's your autograph, A. LINCOLN."

MAMMA.—"Why did you strike little Elsie, you naughty boy, you?" Dick.—"Well, what did she want to cheat for, then?" Mamma.—"How did she cheat?" Dick.—"Why, we were playing at Adam and Eve, and she had the apple to tempt me with—and she never tempted me—but went and ate it up herself."

Changed His Mind.

While attending a convention last month the subject of distributing literature was being discussed when one of the sisters gave this unique experience. She is president of a new union recently organized by one of our National organizers, an earnest worker, and I will give it as nearly as I can in her own words. "A short time ago," said she, "a friend who is a physician made us a visit. He is an intelligent gentleman, eminent in his profession and a man of very positive opinions. During the conversation he learned that I was a member of the W. C. T. U., and he seemed greatly surprised. He had no use for the organization, said it was the work of the devil and women seeking notoriety. I tried to answer him, but I was new in the work, he was very positive, and I hardly knew what to say.

"A few weeks after he returned and said he had come to offer me an explanation and to apologize to me. After leaving our house he was going to T. and had to stop a short time between trains at C. In the depot he saw a wall pocket with W. C. T. U. on it, and after his talk with me he thought he would look at the contents of the wall pocket and see what we did believe.

"The first thing he found was a paper called THE UNION SIGNAL. 'It was the best paper I ever read. I was so interested in it that I put it in my pocket and read all the way to T. I made up my mind I was wrong. The W. C. T. U. is the work of God, and not of the devil. That paper tells of a grand work you are doing, and I felt I must come back and tell you to go on; never give up the W. C. T. U. work.'" And so our sister urged the distribution of literature, especially of THE UNION SIGNAL, to convert the unbelieving.

This morning's mail brings us a list of subscribers from an energetic New Hampshire white-ribboner, and gives ground for belief that the work in that state will have a fresh impetus this year, for it reads as follows: Pastor M. E. church, Pastor Congregational Church, Pastor Baptist church (three in one town) pastor Baptist church, pastor Congregational church (two in another town) all secured by the efforts of one individual. What an immense amount of aggressive work could be accomplished if each union would make its special work this year placing the names of ministers of each denomination on the list of THE UNION SIGNAL. Financially considered, would it not be a paying investment, for when the man whose influence is beyond that of any other in the community preaches temperance from the pulpit results upon the great work of reform will be felt throughout the community.

Thoughts for Mothers.

Mrs. E. M. Van Osdel:

DEAR SISTER:—A word about your little book. I like it, having read your heart before, as in "labors abundant" we trod the path of mothers' work together. "Thoughts for Mothers" is just what I expected it would be, full of choice thoughts and tender love, so true to your ideals of home and mothers, so careful to detect and expose the unguarded danger placed in childhood's pathway. May it carry its blessed message of warning and love into many, many homes of this and other lands.

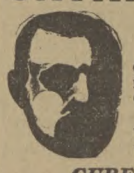
A TRIAL PACKAGE
FREE TO ALL.

Youth's Companion, of Boston, The Great Family Paper, Tells Thomas Taylor About Gloria Tonic.

SENT FOR A FREE SAMPLE AND IS NOW CURED OF RHEUMATISM.



THOMAS TAYLOR, GENESEO, ILL.

Thomas Taylor, of Geneseo, Henry County, Ill., some time ago read in the Youth's Companion that John A. Smith would send free samples of Gloria Tonic, the famous specific for Rheumatism to all who would write. He had tried almost everything known and here was something he could try for nothing, so he sent for the sample. As he had been suffering continually for six months his joy may be imagined when even the free trial treatment gave him relief from the intense pain he had suffered. It is needless to say that he sent for the full treatment immediately, and he recently wrote: "Thanks for the relief I received. I had not been without pain for six weary months until I received the trial package of Gloria Tonic. It is wonderful."

Mr. Taylor's experience is identical with that of many others. In fact thousands who have tried these sample packages have become firm believers in the remedy as the only certain cure for rheumatism. Anyone may have a trial package by sending their name and address to John A. Smith, 157 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.; send for it, by all means. If you have only a slight touch of Rheumatism now and then, it will pay you well to try this marvelous remedy.

It will be mailed free, prepaid. Write at once.

THE Oklahoma executive officers are looking forward eagerly to the coming of Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp to help them increase and strengthen the work there.

MEMBERS of the W. C. T. U. of Kentucky, will present to Miss Christine Bradley a cut glass, silver-mounted bottle to be used at the christening of the battleship Kentucky.

OVER three hundred signed the pledge during recent meetings in Devil's Lake, N. D., and eighteen new members were added to the union. Mr. A. C. Rankin conducted the meetings, giving many practical addresses.

THE W. C. T. U. at Spokane, Wash., has commenced holding public meetings at the Working Men's Home on Sunday afternoons. The different young people's societies take turns in furnishing the program. This union is to edit five columns of temperance matter in the Western Home Journal.

AT a medal contest held in Nat, Ala., by Miss Jessie M. House, contestants and leader had to walk five miles down the mountains and back, over rocks and mud. At a contest in Oklahoma a young lad walked six miles alone at night to be present and speak at a contest. Such enthusiasm and devotion is worth untold influence to any cause.

THE W. C. T. U., of Peacham, Vt., has subscribed for nine copies of the school Physiology Journal. One for the superintendent of public instruction and one for each teacher in the public schools of the town. Also a temperance paper for every pupil suiting the choice of paper to age of the pupil. The papers go direct to each one through the post-office.

A BANQUET was given in Lincoln to the members and visitors of the agricultural and stock-raising associations. No wine or spirits of any kind was served. It was the subject of public remark that with the large and promiscuous crowd of visitors from many states no one gave evidence of intoxicating drink, establishing the fact that temperance sentiment is advancing among the substantial men of our country.

AT a convention of the Northwestern branch of the W. F. M. S. of the M. E. church, composed of delegates from the four states of Montana, Idaho, Oregon and Washington, held in Olympia, Wash., October 7 to 10, the state president of the W. C. T. U. was presented and asked their co-operation in temperance and social purity, these twin evils which do so much to hinder the cause of missions. A ringing resolution for temperance and purity was passed.

MRS. MARION B. BAXTER is now in Nebraska. Sunday, the 23d, she filled pulpits morning and evening in Lincoln, and in the afternoon spoke to a great audience in Red Ribbon hall. The people came in crowds, and fully two hundred persons stood through her address, which was enthusiastically reported in a full column in the Nebraska State Journal. Red Ribbon club is more than twenty years old and is a mighty power in Lincoln, and counts among its members many men and women around the nation.

MRS. S. M. PERKINS, president of the twenty-fifth district, Ohio, recently held a convention in Macedonia, and organized a union there. The convention was entertained most courteously by the Congregational church. Two clergymen assisted in the services. In the evening Mrs. Perkins gave a suffrage lecture, subject, "Are Women Citizens." The twenty-fifth district is composed of three counties, Cuyahoga, Summit and Medina.

MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, president of the Illinois W. C. T. U., spoke on "The Battle for Bread" at the twenty-second anniversary of the Philadelphia W. C. T. U., in the West Arch Street Presbyterian church, giving many instances to show the utter waste of the liquor traffic. The report of the president, Mrs. H. H. Forrest, showed 255 active members, that over $9,000 had been received for the building fund and that $5,000 had been paid on the mortgage on the Willard, the union's headquarters.

MRS. EMILIE UNDERHILL BURGESS, of Highland, N. Y., National lecturer and organizer, has just done excellent work in Bucks county, Pa. She has visited twenty unions, delivering twenty-nine lectures, besides addressing four Sunday-schools, two Christian Endeavor societies, and one day school, and giving two afternoon talks. She has organized one new union, gained about forty members, and secured several new subscribers to the state paper and THE UNION SIGNAL. Wherever she has spoken hearts have been touched, doubting minds have been convinced, and old members have been inspired with new life and strength for the great work yet remaining to be done.

FOR over six years Van Buren county has enjoyed the privileges of the Michigan local option law. The liquor element have tried several times to defeat it but have each time failed and the last time by such an overwhelming defeat, that the ladies wishing to have a more active part than they could in the Anti-Saloon League, organized the Anti-Saloon Daughters, first at Paw Paw and then at South Haven. The W. C. T. U. did their full share of work also, not only as an organization, but as individuals working in other societies. Mass-meetings, rallies and parades were the order of the day. Every school district in the county was reached by temperance speakers and the county snowed under with printed matter. The result was a grand majority for local option, all the townships but two going dry.

MRS. HELEN DICKINSON HARFORD has just finished 18 days' work in the first district in Kansas. She organized three new unions, enrolled 130 active and 80 honorary members, secured 30 pledge signers, and this was done in 36 meetings. She goes now for a month's work in the second district. Her address is Ottawa, Kansas, care Mrs. L. B. Smith.

FRANCES E. WILLARD

Born September 28, 1839. Died February 18, 1898.

The Triumph Over Death.

Miss Willard's Translation the Victory of Faith.

Last Hours of Our Beloved Chieftain—Welcome Rest to Her Weary Spirit.

THE blow has fallen and every heart is bowed under it, yet through the dark cloud of sorrow shines the clear ray of thanksgiving for the joy and rest that has come to our National president. Last week THE UNION SIGNAL gave the first messages of warning that sounded a note of alarm through the white-ribbon ranks; we faced not only the possibility, but the probability that our leader was to be taken from us. A letter from Anna Gordon dated February 12 gave the first intimation that her illness was serious, and read in part as follows:

Our precious Frances has been going through a siege of influenza for three weeks; we thought she would be up again by this time and much better for the rest and quiet in bed, but I grieve to say that she is extremely weak and her condition for the last three days has been serious, for while the same symptoms in most other persons would not be alarming, in her case they certainly are, for she has a minimum of strength with which to combat disease. I have had a trained nurse from the first and to-day am asking for a consultation with Dr. William Draper, for all that love and skill can by any possibility suggest, must be done for this beloved woman.

On February 13 Miss Gordon wired to Headquarters:

Frances suffering extreme exhaustion. Condition critical, not hopeless; improvement to-day.

This was followed on February 14 by a message which read:

Vitality remarkable; we have two trained nurses, two skillful doctors, and best of all, our Great Physician. Will wire frequently.

Later in the day she added:

Thanks for all your loving sympathy; God comfort us. Still hoping, but very anxious.

The next day our hearts were cheered by this message:

Slight change for the better at six last evening. Favorable conditions continue this morning. Heart's love to you all.

Under this same date, February 14, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, National vice-president, wrote to Headquarters from her home in Portland, Me.:

Your hearts are grieved and anxious, as is mine, over the critical illness of Miss Willard. I have held myself in constant readiness to go any hour if Anna thought I could be of any help. I have so wired her. I am praying, hoping, believing.

Later in the same day she wrote, on board the train en route to New York:

I am going to Anna, to comfort and to help if I can. I cannot believe God is to so afflict us. I am hoping, believing that she is to recover.

At this time a report went out through the daily press to the effect that Miss Willard was suffering with cancer of the stomach, which tended to increase the burden on anxious hearts everywhere. Mrs. Stevens, immediately upon her arrival, corrected this in the following message:

Disease not cancer of stomach. Drs. Hills and Draper deny it. It's exhaustion following grip. Hopeful. Love.

Feb. 15 she wrote:

I reached here at midnight. The telegrams have told you that the change for the better came at six last night and she seems to keep about the same; retains the little nourishment she takes and is nearer conscious than she has been. I have seen her only as the drapery was drawn aside. The dear, pale, death-like face, and the pitiful little voice—it is all heartbreaking—but if God will only restore her—I believe He will. She has the best nurses, a most devoted and skillful doctor; nothing left undone to save her. We know all about the prayers at Headquarters. God bless and hear and answer.

The next day, Wednesday, she wrote again:

I have just wired you that we are encouraged. The doctor is devotedly attentive, the nurses the same; if love and skill can keep her she will stay. I will, of course, wire you if there is any positive change either way. I am sending out letters to all the members of the National executive, for I know how anxious they are. Lady Henry cables every day such tender messages. I have not yet spoken to her; the doctor said I might, but I thought I would better not. She moans incessantly, and turns her head from one side to the other constantly. She seems conscious; knows people and says some wonderful things. It is a great battle for life; I believe life here will win.

Thursday morning messages came as follows:

No decided change. Weak from pain and sleeplessness; still hopeful.

A general call to prayer was sent out from Headquarters, and at the noon hour Willard Hall was filled with a vast audience, the cry of every heart being, "Spare her if it is Thy will." Prayers were offered by Mrs. Stevenson, Mrs. Barker, Mrs. Metzgar, Mrs. Fry, Miss Hood, Miss Shontz, and every appeal for her restoration found an answering echo in the audience. It was felt that the last effort had been made and our Chieftain rested in the shadow of the wings that were to bring healing or a summons home, according to God's will. The gathering dispersed, each one to wait in silent prayer for the next message that should come over the wires. It came at three o'clock, and brought some measure of comfort.

Sleeping quietly after long insomnia; still hoping and claiming restoration.

There was little of rest or sleep that night for the devoted comrades who knew that the crisis had come, and both hoped and feared for what the morning might bring forth.

THE FINAL SUMMONS.

At three o'clock in the morning the news that the loved one had passed over came to Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson from Miss Gordon in the following words:

Our precious leader has entered upon the activities that are not succeeded by weariness. The last of her household, she has been welcomed by Christ and His angels to be with her loved ones in Heaven's home, sweet home. Let us follow her as she followed Christ. God comfort us all.

This was followed by a message from Mrs. Stevens:

The unfavorable change came about seven o'clock. Services here Sunday; Evanston Thursday. God pity and comfort us.

HER LAST HOURS.

In the early evening of the 17th Miss Willard grasped Dr. Hills' hand and requested that he tell her exactly what to expect. Dr. Hills had previously informed her that unless she gained strength she could not recover. He then told her the exact truth—that she was failing so rapidly that he could not promise her that she might see another morning. To this Miss Willard responded that it was well. Throughout the evening she seemed to fully realize that she could not live the night out and was fully reconciled. Indeed, she had said over and over again during the last few days that she would welcome the end; that while she was fond of the work to which she had devoted her life, and would like to continue, she was weary and would welcome that rest which she knew meant to her another and a better and a happier life.

Turning slightly in her bed after she had heard the doctor's answer to her query Miss Willard called Miss Gordon to her and gave her some final instructions concerning the work of the W. C. T. U. Her thoughts even at that moment of great solemnity were not of nor for herself. They were for her fellow human beings and for the organization of which she has so long been the ruling spirit.

At her bedside were her niece, Mrs. Katherine Willard Baldwin, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Miss Gordon and Dr. Hills. She was conscious up to midnight, and just before breath departed she opened her eyes and seemed to recognize those about her. She pressed Miss Gordon's hand and smiled faintly. In another moment her soul had fled.

After her death a message came to Miss Gordon from Lady Henry Somerset saying that if there was any hope of seeing Miss Willard alive she would sail at once from England. Later, when the sad news had reached her, Lady Henry cabled, "When will she be laid away?" and again, "Get a heart of white flowers and lay them on her heart." To Headquarters Mrs. Ward-Poole cabled: "Lady Henry overwhelmed with grief; will send you message later."

Friday morning Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson and Mrs. Helen M. Barker left for New York to be present at the services there and escort Miss Willard's remains back to Chicago.

THE LAST RITES.

During the day of the 18th Miss Willard's body was removed from the Hotel Empire, where she died, to the home of Mrs. Baldwin where it remained until Sunday afternoon when funeral services were held at the Broadway Tabernacle.

As the procession, led by the Rev. Dr. E. S. Tipple of St. James' M. E. church, entered the tabernacle and passed up the center aisle, the organ played "Chopin's Funeral March." Dr. Tipple read the burial service, "I am the resurrection and the life."

The casket containing the loved form was covered with a white silk banner, studded with golden stars, and the insignia of the organization to which she had given her life. The sides were sashed with deep white silk ribbon, caught in a large bow with a clasp of gold at the foot of the coffin. The inscription bearing Miss Willard's name and the dates of her birth and death was inside the lid.

The church was crowded, among the attendants being many women from neighboring states, representing the state unions. A great number of floral tributes had been received and these, together with palms, were used as decorations in the church. In compliance with Lady Henry Somerset's cabled request, Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson secured a heart of pure white roses and laid it upon Miss Willard's heart, an eloquent tribute from the faithful friend across the water.

Miss Willard's request that her funeral service be simple was carried out. The hymn that is always sung at the conclusion of our W. C. T. U. deliberations, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds Our Hearts in Christian Love," was read by Mary T. Burt, president of the New York union, and was sung by the congregation. Following this was the reading of the fifteenth chapter of I. Corinthians by Dr. Charles H. Payne, secretary of the board of education of the Methodist Episcopal church, and Bishop John P. Newman, of the Methodist church, then offered prayer. Following this was sung the hymn,

> Gently, Lord! Oh, gently, lead us
> Thro' this vale of smiles and tears.

This is the hymn that Miss Willard requested to have sung to her as she was dying, and concluded the services. It was this hymn, Dr. Tipple announced, that Miss Willard herself many years ago caused to be changed to what it is now, familiar throughout Christendom. Originally it read:

> Gently, Lord! Oh, gently, lead us
> Thro' this gloomy vale of tears.

At the conclusion of the service the remains were taken back to Mrs. Baldwin's home, and at nine o'clock Monday morning the sad journey to Chicago was begun. In response to a request from the citizens of Churchville, N. Y., Miss Willard's birthplace, a halt was made there and her body laid in state for a few hours to give her friends there opportunity to take a last farewell of the beloved leader.

Arriving in Chicago Wednesday morning, the casket was taken to Willard Hall and placed in front of the platform, from which, but a few weeks ago, she spoke cheery, hopeful words to the assembled throng. At this writing she lies there, calmly resting amid the familiar scenes in the room which her name has honored. There are no trappings of woe about her; all is fragrant whiteness, emblems of her pure life on earth and the immortality upon which she has entered. Many who have known her personally, many more who have known her through her work, pass beside the casket, and looking upon the serene face, go forth resolved to take up the burdens her hands laid down at the Divine command, that she being dead may yet speak through them.

In accordance with the order of Mayor Harrison, the flags of the city fly at half-mast in respect to the memory of Chicago's most honored woman. At Washington, D. C., a similar tribute will be paid on the day of her burial, and at Evanston, her home, the flags have spoken their mute message since the hour of her death.

Wednesday evening the remains will be taken to Evanston, and from the train her fellow citizens will carry the casket to Rest Cottage, that the last night of her visible stay with us may be spent in the home that will be hallowed by her memory. Thursday morning at 10:30 o'clock the funeral will take place from the M. E. church of which she was a member, and with all the honors that love can bestow, the mortal body of Frances E. Willard will be laid away in the vault at Rosehill cemetery to await interment beside her mother. Hundreds of messages have come from every quarter of the globe, bearing tribute to her worth, breathing hope and comfort to those that mourn. As soon as practicable a special memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL will be issued, giving all the details of her last days with us, and the eulogies paid her by the world at large.

THOU art not far whom I may meet in thought
As through unmeasured space my soul doth glide,
To find nor land nor sea possesses aught
To hinder my free flight to thy dear side.

Thou art not far whom I may meet in dreams;
How oft within those misty realms thy smile
Dissolves perplexity, till that which seems,
More blessed is, than that which is, the while.

Thou art not far whom I may meet in prayer,
When in world-weariness my soul would fain
Find rest in God, at that same altar-stair
Lo, thou art kneeling, and we meet again!

What closer fellowship could these replace,
What life remain 'twere worth our pains to share?
Are they not rather parted, face to face,
Who never meet in thought, or dream, or prayer?

CHAPTER II.

THEIR Chinatown experience soon died in their memory, but the little mother and her babe lived on. Day after day she sat cuddling her tiny baby with strength hardly sufficient for the task and studying the little hands that some day must have it so hard, pitying the little face with a noticeable mark upon the low forehead, but still more pitying the whole tiny frame. Why should this child have been a girl?

One day she went out upon the beach where the three or four other women of the village were sorting fish and mending nets. They made room for her upon a rough bench and chatted monotonously on as their fingers flew. A newly arrived Chinaman, conspicuous in his dress so far superior to that of the Chinese residents, the bright colors of which gleamed in the sunshine, passed by and, smiling furtively, muttered something underneath his breath.

That night a bitter thing happened in that Chinese village. The little mother awakening full of concern for her infant found it was not beside her. She sprang from her narrow bed, her blood freezing within her. Where could it be? Her brain whirled, and she leaned against the wall. Was it really so? The little baby unconscious of and totally unable to influence its fate, with the awful, awful curse of sex against it, gone from her, stolen away where she could never again look into its little bright eyes, hear its plaintive cry, minister to its wants and feel its tiny hands upon her breast? She could rend the very skies. In her desolation she stretched forth both arms for help. But there was no help, no known God for this despairing woman. The awful fate of so many of her sisters filled her mind and she uttered a terrible cry of agony.

With a feeling of frenzy she hurried to the door. It was locked from without. Her heartless, remorseless husband had then planned it all, a truth which did not occasion any surprise to her. With a deathlike feeling overpowering her she clung to the door and shook its light lock. To her astonishment it sprung open. She dashed across the threshold and out into the night where she stood alone in the dark, deserted street. The blackness appalled her. To whom should she go? Which way should she turn? She was alone and helpless in the world and she stumbled on over the loose, uneven sidewalk.

In the last house on the street a light was still burning and when she reached the open door, never hearing the clinking of the gambling game within she dashed in, up to the knot of gamblers and despite their hard, set faces, begged for their assistance, touching their very garments in her entreaty.

One or two of the men paused for a moment in their game and gave the woman a careless glance. The rest kept indifferently on and presently one of the dealers spoke.

The woman's husband owed a heavy bill to Wong Len. To pay this debt the father had given his baby girl to Wong, who arriving that morning to obtain his security, had accomplished his mission and departed.

Another cry, terrible in its tones of agony, an uplifting of the thin hands, made more slender by long suffering, and the heartbroken woman rushed back into the night. She must, must find her baby, she must fly to it! She could not outlive the night, the years to come, with this child so much worse than dead, the drudge, the slave, the chattel of a high binder. Where should she go? The world seemed black infinity. Already her little baby, innocently sleeping in the arms of its enemies, was miles and miles from her. Should she leave this village even by night she would be pursued, to be brought back to only a harder fate. Should she wander pleadingly through all the Chinese villages and cities in the world she could never again regain her stolen baby.

Her thoughts crazed her. She ran down the narrow street to the edge of the open square reserved for drying fish, and for a moment standing upon the rocky ledge built against the tide leaped out into the dark. But the tide was out, the water merely lapped against the edge of the beach and she fell to the stretch of sand. Half stunned she rose and staggered on to a projecting cliff and feeling some pursuing presence hurried to the cliff's sharp point. Just as she was going to hurl herself from here down into the black, rolling water, a strong hand clutched her shoulder. Debts were heavy and hard to meet this year. She, too, was a slave!

The sun rose and set month after month, year after year above this Chinese village. Bright little brides and happy grooms traversed the same path another bride and groom had traversed years before in the same little settlement, beside the broad, quiet sea that alone listened to and answered many of the unhappy ones who dwelt upon its shores. But the little mother and her babe had long left its shores forever. No sight of sea or sky or sun ever lit their darksome ways. Slave life behind Chinese walls is not brightened by the light of this world or softened by the hope of the next.

The little mother, now unrecognizable, with quite as hardened an expression, quite as much of half smothered hate in her face as the painted faces of the other occupants of the den that imprisoned her.

At first, for a long time, when peering through the dingy wicket, half hopefully, half despairingly she had watched the thoroughfare below for a little face with soft, bright eyes and broad, flat cheeks. That particular day never came, but another came in its place.

One morning one of the women told her that another slave had been brought to their quarters. She was now in the narrow room next to theirs. The mother pressed one hand upon her knee and muttered something to herself. Since she had been here three young slaves had entered and grown old and haggard before her. And now another.

As she sat thus musing a door was quickly opened, a young girl of fourteen or fifteen was let into the room, the bedizened face of the old woman in charge appeared for a few minutes in the doorway, the door was quickly shut again and the girl stood by herself looking about her.

The mother looked up at the little figure before her. In a moment a flood of excitement swept over her and staggering up she fell at the feet of the young girl.

Through all these fourteen years she had carried in her tortured heart the image of her baby with—yes, this same little birthmark on its forehead, the same sunny eyes, the same plump, round cheeks. Alas! alas! Do helpless mothers meet their children thus in America?

This very year the bride who had walked the street of the fishing village in California again visited the Pacific coast. A fair daughter accompanied her now, too young and dainty to visit Chinatown, as her father and mother were determined to do under the escort of the police.

As they passed through one of the many alleys a wild, hard, painted face peered at them from one of the firmest wickets and the officer said, "One of the worst of the horrid creatures here. She murdered a young woman in the same house last week, quite a pretty young girl, too."

The American matron looked pityingly upon the debased creature before her, little dreaming that the poor heart that bled behind that wicket had throbbed in pure mother love, had bled in dreadful sorrow and now felt only peace that a grave in the dishonored soil of a pauper cemetery held her loved one safe from her own awful fate.

Elizabeth Thompson, the Philanthropist.

BY ELIA WILLARD ROWELL.

[Mrs. Thompson was a teetotaler and prohibitionist; she aided almost every great reform. When our National Convention was held in the Metropolitan Opera House in New York city in 1888, Mrs. Thompson presented us with a beautiful flag—designed by herself and costing $300—to represent peace and the union of all nations in the work of human brotherhood. The flag has been prominent among our decorations at every Convention since. I had reserved a box for Mrs. Thompson that she might enjoy the presentation, but she was so unassuming that we could not induce her to be present. A few weeks after the Convention she said to me, "If I gave you ten thousand dollars for your press department this next year, could you use it?" I told her we would try, but she had a pitiful illness soon after (as a result of which her property was placed beyond her control), and although still living, this beautiful woman is unable to participate in the work of life or even to mingle with her friends. She travels from north to south each year, accompanied by her attendants, is always in lovely surroundings, and does not suffer, but we have seen the last of her until we meet her in the Better Country.—F. W.]

IT is sad that one whose life was a continuous chain of deeds to benefit humanity should pass from the memory of the world's people and leave no record of the work accomplished. Elizabeth Thompson lived the most unselfish of lives, and as our beloved leader, Miss Willard, writes, "is one of the noblest women in history."

It is fitting that one who received largely of her teaching and kindness and who was associated with her daily for several years, should write a page of her life that others might read and feel inspired, perchance, to follow in her footsteps. That my readers may better understand the sweetness and depth of character of this noble woman, I will briefly outline her early life.

Elizabeth Rowell was born in the town of Cabot, Vt., seventy-five years ago. Her parents were honest, industrious people, and from the first the young Elizabeth knew the hardships of New England frontier life, for that part of Vermont was then little more than a wilderness. She was taught to be brave and industrious. She was ambitious, and at twenty years of age went to Boston to find employment in a larger sphere, and secured a position to learn the art of dressmaking.

Here she met Mr. Thomas Thompson, then one of the wealthiest men in the United States, and from a lowly life she entered, without preparation, a home of culture and wealth and became a leader in one of the most exclusive circles of American society. Beautiful in form and feature, brilliant and clever in mind she certainly was. I have been told by a famous courtier who knew her then that she was one of the most attractive, brilliant and remarkable women of the time.

But this life of pleasure and adulation did not suffice for her. It soon became tiresome, and she would slip away to visit the poor and sick whenever opportunity afforded. Her husband did not oppose her generosity, but he could not bear that anything diseased or unclean should approach her. She dressed richly to please Mr. Thompson, who bestowed the most costly fabrics and jewels upon her, but I have often heard her say, "From the time that I could write my name on a check for almost any amount, I ceased to have any personal desires." After Mr. Thompson's death in 1869, she never re-entered society, save the first winter of the Hayes administration, when she several times assisted the "lady of the White House" in receiving.

When I entered the family in 1876 we went to New York to live with Mrs. Thompson. I was a simple country girl of sixteen years, who had always been in the school-room; she took the kindliest interest in teaching me, and it was then that I saw her great work among the poor. So anxious was she to have me learn, that we had not an unoccupied hour of the day. There were lectures by Stephen Pearl Andrews on "Universology," and Steele Mackaye on "The Delsarte System of Philosophy," talks by Porter Bliss, the imprisoned minister of Peru, and Mme. Blavatsky, the theosophist. Always searching for truth, she delved in every direction where a ray of light pierced the darkness. She taught me how to sew, mend, darn, make buttonholes, dust and a thousand necessary duties of life. I wrote precepts, read and learned pages of useful knowledge. Two or three times a week she would take me to visit her poor people and this I greatly enjoyed; she was such a bounteous giver I felt as if I had a part in it all.

Her purchases were made by wholesale, rolls of cloth and flannel, hosiery and under flannels in hundreds of pairs. With a large supply in her cab she would make the rounds, giving here and there as she found need. No doubt she was often imposed upon, but she relieved a vast amount of suffering. Every one in want had her sympathy and so far as possible her assistance, but it was to the miserable outcasts of the slums, the children who were born, bred and taught in vice and crime, the poor wretches from whom all others shrank, that her help went forth most freely.

Into the foul tenements that clustered around Paradise park and Baxter street, where misery and crime walked unmasked, and police protection was a necessity, this woman went at least once every week. Into homes that were but a mockery of the word, homes where drunkenness, poverty and disease had wrought their worst; into rooms with cellars dark and damp, where on a heap of straw poor wretches would be lying, their only watcher Death, Elizabeth Thompson went, a very angel of mercy bringing food, fuel, clothes, medicine to the occupant. I have seen her take the poor little children half naked, perhaps, and drugged with liquor, away with her to homes where they would be well cared for. Women who had fallen, the most abandoned and the lowest, I have seen her take by the hand and talk to them as one only could talk who saw beneath the miserable humanity the soul that God had given them.

Not only did she work for individual cases, but she studied every problem, investigated every theory whereby the masses might be raised to a higher plane of life. Kindergarten schools for the children of the slums was a favorite plan of hers, and I believe it would have been carried out long ere this had not health deserted her. It was her purpose to have these schools on a sufficiently large scale to accommodate thousands of the slum children and to locate them in a healthy part of the country, where the children could have pure air, learn to work out of doors and indoors and have plenty of good, simple food.

Elizabeth Thompson was a temperance worker for years before I knew her. She published several pamphlets and small books on the subject—notably one called "The Figures of Hell," which consisted of statistics, carefully compiled, showing the enormous losses of the people from the liquor traffic. But she did not stop here. One of her favorite ways of working for the cause was to go into the parks and talk with the miserable wretches she would find sitting on the benches. Often she has taken them with her to the stores and fitted them out with clothes and found work for them.

She gave large sums to different inebriate asylums and houses for the reformation of drunkards, she published books for various authors treating of dipsomania, etc., and aided the temperance work in every way she could. I remember a few weeks before she was stricken with paralysis, Miss Willard was to lecture in our city and spent several hours with Mrs. Thompson. After her departure Mrs. Thompson said to me, "If ever you are in trouble, and I am not here, go, or write, to Miss Willard. I have every confidence in her," and added that she intended to give the W. C. T. U. $10,000 through our honored president. She presented the World's W. C. T. U. with a beautiful symbolic banner at the Convention in New York in 1888. Thus she worked "for God and Home and Native Land," and yearned to do more had health remained.

Mrs. Thompson's daily routine was simplicity itself. She rose early, breakfasted at seven o'clock, dined in the middle of the day, and often her supper was a bowl of bread and milk.

She was fond of art and had a fine collection of paintings. At the time of Mr. Thompson's death he had the finest private art gallery in America. She purchased the "Proclamation of Emancipation" from the artist, Frank B. Carpenter, for twenty-five thousand dollars, and presented it to Congress, in recognition of which she was given a life seat on the floor of the House of Representatives, being the only woman who has been thus honored.

She founded the town of Longmont, Colo., and in Kansas gave six hundred and forty acres of land and three hundred dollars apiece to many poor settlers. At the time of the Boston fire when her losses were heavy, the only question she sent to her trustees was, "Are my tenants suffering, if so provide for them," and she sent a sewing machine into every family that could make use of one. She nursed her nephew through the small pox and was the refuge of her family in every time of trouble. She gave ten thousand dollars to the committee of investigation at the time of the yellow fever scourge in the South. When stricken with paralysis in 1889, it was found there were twenty-nine poor families dependent upon her support. Most of these were aged couples, or widows unable to support themselves and children.

Within a few years Mrs. Thompson has been adjudged insane. Her work is over. She is but a helpless invalid bereft of speech; but "she hath done what she could," a grand work for humanity. The influence of her life has softened, brightened, helped many lives, and though to us she now is lost, yet by faith we see a bright to-morrow for her and the race she has so greatly loved.

Immigration.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS, PH.D.

[March Theme in Topic-a-Month Course of Reform Studies.]

1. PLANS for restricting immigration must not violate the brotherhood of man. The first exclusion to be accomplished is the exclusion of race prejudice from ourselves. Recent alien labor laws are mostly unconstitutional and un-American as well as un-Christian. A Pennsylvania law, to put an extra tax of three cents per day on all alien laborers (that is, all foreigners not naturalized) was in 1897 decided unconstitutional by the state supreme court, but not until a large number of the 140,000 immigrants thus threatened with this annual tax of ten dollars had hastened to become citizens only to save money. It would be strange, indeed, if they should not sell a suffrage thus thrust upon them.

2. We should exclude immigrants that would be likely to corrupt our own people, for instance, Mormons, anarchists, and criminals, on the same principle that we should avoid evil companions.

3. Inasmuch as there is no present prospect that the ballot box will be protected against illiterate immigrants they should be excluded to protect our imperiled suffrage. Write to Senator H. C. Dodge, Washington, D. C., for pending immigration bill and his report upon it and other documents. The opposition is a threefold alliance of the steamboat companies, the beer brewers and the Roman Catholic societies. It is the only bill favored by the Bureau in which the Catholics do not coöperate.

4. Appeals should also be made to judges to use their great powers to exclude from naturalization all unfit applicants.

5. Judges should all be asked to deliver courses of lectures on the constitution and on the duties of citizens to candidates for naturalization—and young Americans about to cast their first vote might well be invited also.

6. So far as unfit immigrants get in (as they will in spite of all laws), the churches must Christianize them rather than move away from them.

7. Especially must we civilize and nationalize their children in our public and Sabbath-schools. In 1897 the Roman Catholic authorities transmitted to the churches of that order in the United States the following significant ruling, which shows how strongly the children of foreigners desire to become American: "First, Children born in America of foreign parents whose native language is not the English, are not obliged, when of age, to become members of the parish to which their parents belong; but they have the right to join a parish in which the language of the country—that is, English—is used. Second, Catholics not born in America but knowing the English language, have the right of becoming members of the parish in which English is in use, and they can not be compelled to submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the rector of a church built for people who continue to speak the language of a foreign country."

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

THE Echoes have reached a heart in Connecticut and back they come to Willard Hall in these words: "I write you to-day from a full heart. Whenever I read in the Echoes of some stranger happening in to one of your meetings I follow him in prayer, and ask my Father to hasten the day when my brothers also may seek that place of prayer."

One day Dr. Henry received a letter while upon the platform, written by a man, a stranger. "I was in this room yesterday. I am not a Christian. Your words pierced my soul. I want Christ. He alone can save me. I want to meet you at the close of this meeting." Needless to say our hearts and voices went out in prayer for this prodigal looking toward the heavenly home.

Evangelist V. D. David is again speaking in Willard Hall. He manifests the same degree of earnestness and vigor as when he first came to us three months ago, notwithstanding the fact that besides this noon meeting he speaks twice a day in other places, to say nothing of the calls he receives, and the house-to-house visiting he does, thus coming in touch with private as well as public life in America.

One day before Brother David began to speak, I invited the strangers who were in the room to stand. About fifty responded. Then I asked them for a word of testimony. Many who stood told from what state they came, and it seemed that some state from every section of our country was represented at that noon meeting.

A pastor from one of the city churches sat beside me on the rostrum. He turned and whispered, "How long are you going to keep Brother David here?" "The Lord only places the limit," I replied. "Keep him just as long as you can," he said; "you have no idea what an influence is going out from this place. It is stirring Chicago and the whole land."

. . . . . .

One day after the audience was dismissed and nearly all had passed out a man came hastily down the aisle and met me as I came from the platform. The fumes of liquor were upon his breath and he could scarcely walk with steady step. "I want to be free from this. Oh, I want to be free!"

"Do you want to give yourself to Christ now?"

"Yes, I want Christ." I called Brother David, who was just leaving with a pastor from Cincinnati, O. They both returned and we waited with this victim until he yielded all to Christ

"My wife has been pleading with me to come to this place." His face lighted up; he looked a changed man.

Brother David said, "Do you want money?"

"No, I have money. I have a home. I am going right home to tell my wife. I shall give up the business I have been engaged in. I will be a man with the help of my Redeemer and Saviour," and he hurried away.

And as I sped over the forty miles of railway which I traverse twice each day, weariness was forgotten in the joy of service.

ABBIE FRANCES B. CHURCH,
Leader Noonday Meetings.

Correspondence.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"The sea is his and he made it, and his hands formed the dry land," and after the damp, tropical heat, incident to an Indian Ocean voyage, we were devoutly thankful the land had been made ready for us. For days no one had ventured to hum, even in the most absent-minded way, of a desire for "a life on the ocean wave, a home on the rolling deep," and the promise of an early landing on the 22d put fresh courage into the most wilted of our number. By 2 A. M. we came to our anchorage, and immediately there arose a perfect babel of voices, coming up from the little boats which quickly surrounded us. The dawn revealed the magnificent breakwater with a lighthouse at the end, and Colombo, "the gem of the Indian Ocean," with all its oriental loveliness spread out before us. Landing by the little boats seemed rather trying but it was soon accomplished, and once ashore you are in India and perhaps its most attractive part. Many things combined to bring up Heber's hymn, "What though the spicy breezes blow soft o'er Ceylon's isle?" and the old longing of my girlhood to tell the story of Christ in heathen lands came back with intense power. What could I, an utter stranger, hope to do in the few days at my disposal? It was good to feel the work was the Lord's and His servant had only to be ready and watchful.

Prof. S. G. Lee, of the city college, with whom I had corresponded, soon called on me and offered assistance. Being the holidays his school was closed, but I visited the place and learned in various ways of the beneficent work which he has undertaken. Himself a Tamilese, he is a striking example of what Christianity can do for that dusky race, uniting as he does rare intellectual and spiritual gifts, consecrated to the Master's service. His brother, who is associated with him, and all the teachers are Christians, and must be abstainers from liquor and tobacco. Students are fitted for Cambridge or other universities, and the college is open to all races and creeds, and the commingling is plainly shown by face and dress in the picture which I am taking to Miss Willard. An hour's Bible instruction is given daily, and Professor Lee says, "Had I plenty of room I would take the Tamils and Singhalese for Christ in ten years." The present urgent need is for a suitable building and the amount required is only £1,000. What an opportunity to make an Easter offering to the dear Lord. I am asking that it may be laid upon some one to aid in this matter.

Christmas came, though it was difficult to realize it with a temperature verging on 90°. Of course the day was kept by Europeans and Eurasians, and even the indigenous races had their own way of celebrating. My Christmas box, which Miss Pemell, of Sydney, had sent by the Austral, was released from customs and forwarded on the head of a coolie, arriving in time for me to share the good things with a number of friends. A ten days' gospel mission had been opened at the bungalow of a prominent Christian worker, whose salvation from drink a few years ago was a modern miracle, and I was privileged to speak on three successive evenings, beginning at Christmas eve. This made an introduction for me and plenty of invitations followed. The Wesleyan Industrial School for Burgher children interested me exceedingly. The girls are taught needle and lace work and the boys carpentry and blacksmithing, and other trades. I spoke to them through an interpreter, and found them very bright and responsive. Visits were made to the prison, the opium stalls and dens, Prison Gate Mission Home and the rescue work of the Salvation Army. I spent one Sunday several miles out in the country at a self-supporting mission among the Singhalese. The native pastor met me at the station and took me the rest of the way in a "bullock bandy." Entertainment was given in his home and an opportunity to speak to the Sunday-school and to give the morning sermon, the pastor acting as interpreter. It was a never-to-be-forgotten day, especially the communion service participated in by these hundreds of people saved from idol worship.

I gave the address at a union service for Christian workers, also at the New Year's anniversary of the Y. M. C. A. The secretary, Mr. Heib, an American, was most kind, also the editor of the Ceylon Observer, and through their assistance I was able to hold a public meeting for the purpose of presenting our W. C. T. U. work. The Lord was manifestly with us and over twenty names, active and honorary, were taken for membership. Mrs. Leavitt's visit is remembered, also Miss Ackermann's, but the changes incident to mission life and the unpopularity of the total abstinence question prevented the permanency of the work. We moved carefully and with much prayer, especially as to those who should accept the responsibility of leadership. It would take too long to recount how the president was secured, the one woman of all others most desired. Dr. Lucile Leslie, who is in charge of the Lady Havelock Hospital for women and children, the Government Dispensary for women and children, the female department Ceylon Medical College, and holds several other important positions, said, "You will see I have little time at my disposal, but I will do what I can to help the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union for Christ's sake." Then we have Mrs. Louis Heib, an American sister, for secretary (her mother is a loyal white-ribboner in the United States); her heart is thoroughly with us, and though her hands are well filled, she will find time to serve, I am sure. Other names were given, and while they will complete the organization and move off slowly, I believe it will abide. Mention Ceylon definitely in your prayers and with such faith that these dear new workers will be given not only time and strength for our work, but a real, spiritual uplift through it. I was sorry not to go to Jaffna, but it would have required more time than I could spare. The Leech sisters have done good work and there are American missionaries with whom we can correspond.

Last evening I spoke for the Good Templars, who seemed pleased with the prospect of new workers and are most cordial and helpful. This is the last of ten services and to-day I am packed for a fresh start, as the Ophir has come, and we must be off. I have not written of the visits to temples and mosques, or of the trip up to Kandy, seventy miles by rail, through a country abounding with palms and luxuriant foliage, and many other things of interest I have omitted. These were incidents by the way, thoroughly appreciated and always to be remembered, but the work, personal and public, was what I had prayed for, and for which I now give thanks most joyfully.

"Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name." Amen and amen. Lovingly yours in best of bonds,

(MRS.) J. K. BARNEY.

The Work of a New Union.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—Thinking it might interest your readers to know what a little band of women and men who have enlisted under the banner of the "white ribbon" has accomplished within the past twelve months, I will write as briefly as possible something of Design W. C. T. U. Design, a small village in Pittsylvania county, Va., on the Danville and Franklin Turnpike, at its intersection with the main road to Chatham, our county seat, consists of five or six dwellings (several occupied by colored tenants), two stores, a church, schoolhouse, postoffice and blacksmith shop. It is two miles from the corporate limits of Danville. Within the last six or eight years there was at one time three bar rooms at this place and five on the road to Danville, being eight within two miles; one at a time these have closed up, until at the time of which I write there were only three, one at Design, another within a quarter of a mile, and another one mile toward Danville. The last few years the people of our community have been thinking more seriously of this condition of affairs and several projects for relief have been attempted, but failed.

During the Christmas holidays of 1896 there was a temperance meeting called at our church. There was a good attendance; and before closing it was proposed to organize a W. C. T. U., and names were secured of both ladies and gentlemen. A meeting was appointed at the residence of Mrs. G. W. Chisholm, of Design, on the 6th of January following. On that day we organized. To all of us the work was entirely new, and but for the kind assistance of our sisters of Roberts union, we would have been somewhat at sea. Our faithful president, Mrs. G. W. Chisholm, did all within her power and we were in earnest about closing the bar rooms near us. Knowing that at the April term of our court application for license would be made to continue them, we at once began plans to circumvent them. At a regular meeting of our union in February, there was a paper read to that effect, and it and a petition were sent to our judge, Hon. James L. Treadway. Mrs. Chisholm and Miss Evelyn Smith took upon themselves the task of securing signatures to the petition, driving over the entire community and getting the names of the best people of our neighborhood. The petition signed, a committee was appointed to interview the judge and present it; this they did, driving eighteen miles over a rough road on a rainy, cold, March day; but, oh, the good accomplished by that drive! It may well be compared to "Paul Revere's Ride." We obtained of Judge Treadway and Mr. Hughes Dillard, our county attorney, all needed information, and at once began to marshal our forces.

At the April term of court application for license was made by C. W. Aldredge whose saloon was a mile from Design. He thought himself secure with his brother-in-law, a lawyer, and the firm of Cabbell & Son, of Danville, and his near neighbors to say that he was a good man, and that his was a suitable place to sell whisky; but the Lord be praised! his own witnesses defeated him. There was conclusive evidence produced by our side, and after examining about twenty witnesses for the license men, and nine on the opposite side, which consumed all of the day, our counsel, Mr. N. H. Massey, of Danville, submitted the evidence in a short speech. Cabbell, Jr., spoke nearly an hour, after which the Judge refused to grant the license. This was a red-letter day for us. There was a delegation of ten ladies from Roberts Hall Union and six from Design who volunteered to go and see the case through. We met at the hotel at Chatham and went in a body to the court room. This excited no little interest; it was not customary to see sixteen ladies, marching two abreast, up into the court house. It was soon noised abroad, and many spectators came in during the day and surveyed us as we sat in the jury box all day, listening to the evidence. It was a new experience to us, and as one of our sisters of Roberts Hall truthfully said, it was then that we saw what we had to overcome. This was but the introduction to our year's work.

At the May term H. G. Bernard made application for the same place; it seemed to be unnecessary for us to go on this case, but the Judge said that "each application must be heard on evidence." Another long, hot drive to Chatham, Mrs. Chisholm and myself being the only ladies who went on this occasion, accompanied by our husbands and one or two more of our honorary members who were witnesses. We were both quite feeble in health, and the drive over and back in the day was very fatiguing. We were successful in this case also. But Bernard appealed to the higher court which was held in Danville in June. This was our "Waterloo." The liquor men resorted to every means by which to procure evidence. They summoned nearly fifty men from the surrounding country and seemed determined to defeat us. We had only seven witnesses. The hearing of this case consumed the whole day, and to the writer it was one of unutterable suspense, as in company with another lady and member of our union, I sat in the office of the court house waiting to see if our evidence be needed.

At 5 P. M. court adjourned with Judge Whittle's decision that "our people needed protection and should have it." I was almost wild with joy. So much depended on this trial. The Judge said the time had not come, and he hoped never would in Virginia, when a question of revenue should predominate the rights of citizens. This ended the Bernard-Aldredge case, for, as the Danville Register expressed it, Aldredge was "the power behind the throne." I would like to mention in this connection that Mr. Aldredge was our magistrate, this being a strong point against him. By these means we had disposed of one man and one place. There remained several more, as others were waiting to see what Aldredge would do before attempting for themselves, but all of these were victories for us.

About the first of November one of the whisky-sellers, who had not applied for license (seeing the result of the other cases), began preparations for a distillery within one-half mile of Design. We were somewhat discouraged by this, but hoped and prayed that we might be enabled to do something to prevent it. Our loyal young secretary, Miss Evelyn Smith, suggested a petition to the commissioner of internal revenue. She secured and circulated the petition, and sent it in with the records of our courts, begging for relief. I do not know that this had any effect, but the distillery is somewhat at a halt, everything being in readiness, but it has not commenced operations at this writing. Great credit is due the unions and individuals who helped us. Being so much occupied by our lawsuits and other matters, it was impossible for us to take up definite lines of work until lately.

Yours in the work,

Vivisection.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—Whilst agreeing with you, and thanking you for your good work in the past, I venture to ask you to give the vivisection question greater prominence in your paper. It is almost impossible for me at this day to tell you anything new about the question, yet I feel that it is one of the most important before the public mind. It is only by those professing to take an active interest in the various reform movements constantly hammering the details of vivisectional tortures into the minds of those with whom they come in contact that we can hope to make any progress whatever. Notwithstanding all our efforts in the past, vivisection has increased year by year, both in England and America. We must show a more solid front, and adopt a much more active program if we wish to stop the practice. What we want is a strong body of determined, active workers all over the world who will pledge themselve to seize every opportunity to push the question to the front. This could easily be done if the various humane organizations would adopt anti-vivisection as one of their principles and work the subject thoroughly.

I have often been surprised at the inconsistency of many societies which are supposed to exist solely for the purpose of protecting the rights of animals. They will spend pounds in prosecuting a poor carter who has overloaded or flogged his horse, but when it comes to the slow, deliberate torture inflicted by the so-called scientist in the laboratory, they calmly tell you that they leave that matter to the scientists, as they are the best judges. Why not leave the other matters to the carters, and cattle-drivers; and so treat all men alike? If a vivisector says such and such an experiment was necessary, they thank him for having the courage to perform it. A poor carter may argue that it was necessary for him to work his suffering horse in order to provide food for his little ones, but the prosecution is only pushed with greater vigor; he is looked upon as a hardened monster, because he knew the horse was suffering. Let us be honest in this matter; if we profess to protect the rights of animals let us do it right along the line, in the laboratory as well as in the street. It is sheer mockery to recognize and patronize one form of cruelty, whilst we condemn and punish people for others. Most, I may say all, anti-vivisectionists are opposed to all forms of cruelty, whether it be of the street, the hunt or the laboratory. I wish we could claim all so-called humanitarians as anti-vivisectionists. I think we are too exclusive; we are very apt to leave certain things to others to do, but if we all did a little, how very easy these things would be. Has THE UNION SIGNAL and the great organization of which it is the representative done all in its power to stop these hellish cruelties of the laboratory? I think myself that more could have been done had the spirit been willing. May we beg of you to unite with us and keep this subject constantly before your readers?

I am, yours truly,
ARTHUR WESTCOTT.

Local Union.

QUESTION.—When it is advisable to have written instead of printed petitions, who prepares them, the president or the corresponding secretary?

ANSWER.—The corresponding secretary.

Q.—If endorsed by the union, which secretary signs for the president, the corresponding or recording secretary?

A.—The corresponding secretary, as a rule, signs all official documents with the president.

Q.—When circular letters of superintendents of departments appear in our official organ, with the request that they be read at the next local meeting of the union, who presents them?

A.—I do not know that there is any fixed rule with reference to this, but it would seem the natural thing that the superintendent of that department should present the letter of her higher officer. In case this department has no superintendent, or in case the superintendent is absent, it should be presented through the corresponding secretary.

Q.—Through whom should the business which comes through the corresponding secretary be presented?

A.—Through the corresponding secretary as her title itself implies. The duties of the recording secretary are to keep the minutes of the meetings. The duties of the corresponding secretary are to attend to the correspondence of the union.

Q.—A sister writes that she has recently heard a doctor state that alcohol is in the universe, as a part of the universe under natural laws, and asks if this is so.

A.—Alcohol is certainly in the universe under natural laws, as are other products of death and decay. Alcohol is the product of fermentation, and fermentation is a natural law. But to argue that therefore alcohol is necessary as a beverage, or to urge that it comes into the universe as a part of God's thought for humanity is to show one's self ignorant or indifferent as to the laws of life. Decomposition is a natural law, but one should not therefore argue that decayed fruit or decayed meat should be eaten. Why, then, should alcohol, the product of decay, be used as a beverage? To say that God put alcohol into the universe, is to make a statement equivalent to saying that he placed death there. Death came as the result of sin. Alcohol is the product of vegetable death, and plays in no sense a necessary part in normal life.

Q.—Suppose a W. C. T. U. woman, whose highest wish is to honor the Master, holds a mortgage on a house and the owner of the house opens a saloon, what course should the mortgagee pursue?

A.—This is one of the things which can only be answered in the higher tribunal of the personal conscience. There can be no infallible rule laid down to govern such a case. Certainly a white-ribboner can not be responsible for the saloon if it was opened after the mortgage was taken out, and yet I can readily see that to be connected in any way with such a building must trouble one's conscience and be possibly a source of stumbling to others in the community. I would suggest that the sister do all in her power to open the eyes of the man as to the enormity of his conduct. If he will not be influenced, then I am sure fresh light will come to her as to what should be the next step.

Q.—When we changed from district to county work, the local union had in its treasury eight dollars in ten cent dues for the district. Ought that eight dollars to be given into the county treasury and used for county work, or should it be used by the local union for its own work; in other words, ought this eight dollars to belong to the county or local union?

A.—In one sense the county union is the successor to the district, and yet they are in reality distinct and separate organizations, and the county could not claim dues belonging to the district. It would be a very courteous thing to give a part, if not all of the district dues into the county treasury, but I can not see that there is any legal obligation to do this. In other words, the local union is as competent to vote the disposition of that fund as of any other in its treasury. It could be voted to the county, state, National, World's, or be kept in the local treasury.

Let me not be ashamed, O Lord: for I have called upon thee. Be of good cheer; It is I, be not afraid.—Psa. 31:17; Matt. 14:27.

THE news that has been heralded through the newspapers that our beloved Chieftain, Miss Willard, has been sick nigh unto death, will arouse in the hearts of tens of thousands of white-ribbon women, deep sorrow, love and sympathy. But thanksgiving will be blended with it all, that God has mercifully spared our great leader to us a little longer. She went to New York with the purpose of giving the balance of the winter to work for the Temple. She was there but a few days before the grip laid its malign hand upon her, and for three weeks she has been suffering in its grasp. About the last letter she dictated was one intended to be sent to persons outside white-ribbon ranks asking for subscriptions to the Temple. Below we give an extract from it:

Much more is pending in this enterprise than might at first appear. It is the only attempt yet made by women to concentrate in architectural forms the thought and purpose of home protection. From this has come those graceful and beautiful outlines that endear the Temple to every eye that rests upon its harmonious and symmetrical proportions. Money has come from every quarter of the globe to help raise its beautiful walls. It is the shrine of the home people, to which little children have given their hoarded coins, and toward which the eyes of the aged have turned with loving hope. I do not believe we can overestimate what it would be to have the Temple pass into the hands of the brewers, as they have vowed it should, and that they would make of Willard Hall a beer tunnel. Knowing that faith without works is dead, I have already given the birthday fund of $3,000, presented me by white-ribbon women, and have publicly put my home in jeopardy for the payment of the bonds. I have consecrated this, my fifty-ninth year, to try to help clear off the $300,000 worth of Temple Bonds, so as to have the record of our white-ribbon women worthy of the successors of those Crusade mothers, whom history will hold in hallowed remembrance.

As I write this (February 15), with the precious life of Frances Willard hanging in the balance, I appeal to all white-ribboners to do their part, and so relieve our Chief from her self-imposed task for the Temple. Could she know that every W. C. T. U. woman from the highest officials to the poorest and most humble in the ranks were a unit at work doing their part towards raising the $300,000, how relieved she would be, what a weight it would take from her heart, how much it would do to set the life currents beating in her feeble frame towards health and strength. Think how it would cheer her on her bed of languishing if the white-ribboners who could afford it would snow Miss Dow and Miss Johnson under with five dollar checks, and those who could afford it with checks for a larger amount. Those who cannot afford to give anything themselves let them send out to their friends the fifty-cent subscription cards, each raising two dollars in this way. If all would take hold with a will and do this we would have the $120,000 we are still short, raised in no time, Miss Willard's burden lifted, her little patrimony and home saved, and the $300,000 bonded indebtedness wiped out. Can not we do this? If not, why not?

Let me tell you what two women have done that is worthy of all imitation. Mrs. J. W. Shaw is a member of the Chicago Central union. She sent out forty subscription cards, and she has returned $16. So far, this union has sent in $66 from cards. Mrs. L. P. Scrogin, Lexington, Ill., was deeply anxious to help the Temple. She wrote: "I went to my husband and told him about it, and he handed me $100 to send you, which I inclose."

All matters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send a two cent stamp to her either for a subscription card, Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago.

. . . . . .

Those who prefer to send money to the fund Miss Willard is raising for the Temple should make their checks payable to Miss Cornelia M. Dow and send to Miss Dow, Portland, Me.

A Snow Man in Distress.

BY M. L. W.

A SNOW man stood in our back yard,
His face was all awry,
For he tried to scan the heavy clouds
As he cocked up his weather eye,
And he winked and blinked with a troubled face
At the snowflakes hurrying by.

"O dear!" he sighed, "where are those boys?
How could they run away,
And leave me here in a driving storm,
This dreadful winter's day,
Hello there, girls! I'm taking cold,
Please bring an umbrella, I say."

The Serpent in the Cider.

BY HELEN CASE ADAMS.

MY three little friends, Minnie, Grace and Laura, were spending the afternoon together. They were staunch little temperance workers; not satisfied with simply attending the meetings of the Band of Hope, they gathered their friends together and organized a company of soldiers. They wore the funniest of uniforms, not forgetting their pretty badges of red, white and blue. They carried their banners high, marched in good order and sang their temperance songs loud enough to be heard far and near. I am sure they tried to do all the good they could, and well deserved the name of "Faithful Workers."

On the afternoon of which I speak the spirit of fun or the spirit of mischief seemed to possess them, and like some older people they thought they would like to see how near they could come to doing wrong and yet not cross the line which divides it from the right.

The apples were ripe and rosy, and it was suggested that they should press them for the juice. After a good deal of discussion it was decided that it would not be cider, and there was no more harm in drinking the fresh juice than in eating the apple. When they appealed to me I said, "I do not think the fresh juice more hurtful than when taken with the apple, but the principle is wrong. It is never right to see how near you can come to doing wrong." However, the children were not to be convinced, and with merry laughter bounded away to begin business in earnest.

A large smooth stone and a flatiron managed by Laura did duty as a press, and with these the shining apples were soon crushed, while Grace with her little hands wrung out the tiny drops from the pulp. A section of sugar-cane from a fishing rod served as drain-pipe, and carried the juice into a cup held by Minnie. So after much toil they succeeded in extracting about a tablespoonful of the precious juice. It looked very innocent in the little china cup, and you would never have suspected that a serpent with glittering eyes and poison fangs, or an adder with the sting of death lay coiled at the bottom. But I will tell you presently how I found them there.

My three little friends were very merry over their success, and laughed a great deal as they passed the cup from one to another, each taking very small sips till the cup was drained.

But I noticed they often repeated to each other, "We are not breaking our pledge. It isn't cider, it is only apple juice, and it can not be wrong."

I could but wonder if conscience was not whispering to their little hearts, which made them so anxious to convince themselves and each other that they had been doing right.

The next day was the Sabbath and the little ones gathered in the class room for Sunday-school. Now I must tell you that among all my little boys there was not one who had been more bravely outspoken or more truly consistent in our temperance work than little Roy. Imagine, then, my astonishment when at the close of the lesson one of the teachers whispered to me, "Roy says it is right to drink cider, for the leader of the Band of Hope says so It isn't any worse to drink the juice than to eat the apples."

Was not this the very argument Grace had used again and again? And Grace and Roy, as I well knew, did not long disagree on any subject. I now came to see that the hour's frolic of my three little friends had not ended as I supposed it would, but was even now working evil in my temperance Band. I had been striving to build up a wall of protection about my dear children from the pure principles of the Word of God, with Christ for the foundation stone and the strong watch-tower.

I now saw that a loophole had been left in the wall, and all unseen the slimy serpent had entered in and choosing one of the brightest of the band had left the poison of his cruel fangs in the heart of my little Roy, undermining noble principle and poisoning the pure springs of truth in thought and action. Roy was not to be silenced whether in the right or wrong and would not fail to carry with him an influence that would be felt among his little friends, and not easy to be overcome.

Like "The little foxes that spoil the grapes," little steps aside from the right lead into the broad paths of sin and sorrow.

MIRA came in one day with a smiling face and showed me a box of candy she had had given to her. After a few days she told me she didn't like her candy, for it had wine in it. Afterwards she said the more she ate of it the better she liked it; she wished she had some more.

"That is what makes so many drunkards; a little poison always wants company."

"Well, I don't think I'll have any more given me, and perhaps I won't eat them if I do."

"I would not eat anything that had poison in it."

"Is alcohol real poison?"

"What is poison?"

"Oh, those horrid things like arsenic and Paris green that kill rats and bugs; I would not touch them for anything."

"They kill rats and bugs; alcohol kills men; which is the worst?"

"Do you think it kills many?"

"About one hundred thousand a year, we are told; alcohol not only poisons the body but poisons the mind and poisons the heart. How quick it makes one crazy, how surely it hardens the heart. No other poison does that. Don't you think it best to keep clear of it?"

"Oh, yes, of course, but I didn't think a little in candy would do any hurt."

"That is just the way every drunkard begins, by taking a little that he thinks won't do any harm. So he drinks till his body and soul are poisoned. Would that man, who, a few miles from here last week, killed his wife, the mother of twin babies but three weeks old, have done such a deed if his soul had not been poisoned with alcohol? No! The paper said he was not bad only when crazed with liquor; then he shot himself. Who cares for the twin babies and the little boy and girl? Not the one who sold him the liquor or who voted for its sale. This did not make much sensation I think a dog show would take more space in the daily paper. But there is a Book where these things are noted and one day it will be seen who helped and who hindered; who said 'Flourish the saloon' and who said 'Down with it.'"

A Winter Episode.

"THAT water is too cold!" now cries
The small boy in the case,
As mamma heartlessly applies
The liquid to his face.

"Ow! Wow!" he howls; "I'll freeze!
I'll freeze!
Br-r-r-r! Let me go, I say!"
Then wanders forth into the breeze
And makes snowballs all day.

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—This month you will have heard a good deal of the two men whom our nation delights to honor, Washington and Lincoln. Many of your schools have perhaps had exercises commemorating their birthdays, and I am sure that your hearts have been filled with patriotism and pride in recounting the deeds of these national heroes. Was there not also a stirring ambition, a desire to be and do something grand for our country and humanity? But, you will say, there is no opportunity for such deeds now! That is a great mistake, my boys and girls, for so long as our high officials bow in deference to the claims of mighty King Alcohol, and millions of poor souls are slaves to the appetite for drink, there is work for every one of you. It may not bring you glory, but every blow you strike for temperance is a blow in defense of home and country, and some of you will be generals in the army of reform that looks for its recruits to our L. T. L.

Lovingly yours,
AUNT MARY.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a boy eleven years old and I would like to become a member of the Cozy Corner. I am glad to say we have no saloons in this town. Our doctor has a drug store but does not sell liquor. I want to correspond with some of my cousins to get better acquainted. ALBERT SMITH.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—Nellie Wait spoke of a flower for the L. T. L.; perhaps you think a boy don't like flowers, but I do. I think the pink rose is nice because it is like a girl's rosy cheeks. I go to school and have lots of fun. The teacher's name is Miss Holiday. We have a Holiday all the time. RAY GOODFELLOW.

Victory.

BEFORE this reaches the eyes of white-ribboners most of them will have learned that Miss Willard has passed beyond.

The heavenly portals swung open for her at one o'clock A. M., Friday, February 18. The telegram sent to Mrs. Stevenson, National corresponding secretary, from Anna Gordon was received at three o'clock A. M., and read, "Our precious leader has entered upon the activities that are not succeeded by weariness. The last of her household she has been welcomed by Christ and His angels to be with her loved ones in the heavenly 'home, sweet home.' Let us follow her as she followed Christ. God comfort us all."

For days the National Headquarters and UNION SIGNAL office have been filled with anxious faces. Prayers have constantly ascended from overburdened hearts, at first crying out, "It cannot be," but at the noon service of prayer in Willard Hall on Thursday, Christian resignation said, "Not my will, but thine be done." This morning, Friday, there is a new theme. After the shock had passed each individual strain came to be that of thanksgiving for Miss Willard. More than one had followed her during the night in thought and prayer. They had not slept as even the weary disciples did when the Master went to pray alone, but had held on to her in an agony of supplication, and had felt the ebbing tide of life go by, the chill of death's cold stream come on, and with her beheld as in a vision, the gates unfold, and had caught a breath of Heaven as she swept calmly through. So it came about that instead of unutterable gloom one spoke to another in notes of praise to God, singing in their hearts, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost forever more for the triumph of our blessed leader over death and the grave, and for the "rest that remaineth to her," and so the white flowers and ribbons were hung at the entrance ways in the Temple.

Frances Willard is greater in death than in life. Her works do follow her. She had tugged and wrestled with her mighty task, she had pleaded and prayed, she had sacrificed and sanctified all that she had to the cause. She did not even spare her own life. She had no thought for the body. It grew more and more transparent, more ethereal. The bright flame of devotion consumed it even as the burning soul of Saint Francis of Assisi consumed his body. At last the beautiful but frail tenement gave way and the still more beautiful soul leaped into immortality.

Brave, devoted, heroic Frances Willard, hail! but not farewell, for thine will continue to be the welding spirit which shall bind the ends of the earth together in a compact against evil, stronger than death and the grave and as sacred as our vows to heaven; thine the transforming spirit which shall blend all differences, keep all hearts in unison, and which shall inspire and transfuse the whole organization with love as never before—love for our holy war, love for fallen humanity, and above all, love to God, the Father of us all, to whom be glory and honor forevermore, that "He giveth his beloved sleep," and "hath brought life and immortality to light."

Irreverence.

THERE is no longer the matter-of-course looking up to age and the "cloth" that once was so prevalent. The veteran may still be venerated, but not much simply because of the years he has lived. A minister may still be highly respected, but not so much simply that he is a minister of the Gospel. Nineteenth century impertinence insists upon asking "why?" Even the toddler looks up into the wrinkled face with a cool, critical, fearless stare. The day is passed when youth stood in awe of position or experience. The time is gone when the mass was subdued in certain presences. It is obvious that there is not now the unquestioning acceptance of the authority of those who wear the insignia. In fact, the youth of to-day are more unsparing of those in high places than of others; and exhibit no hesitancy as to their own competency to criticise them or the propriety of so doing. The man in a station or at an age that once would have exempted him from the carping of the multitude is now subjected to keener, freer analysis than a common associate once had. The beardless youth prides himself in pertness; he delights to shock. A man's virtues do not hide his faults from the sharp eyes that have just taken a nap. The pastor must be almost more than human to be revered as he once was—with plenty of quite common failings. The pulpit is down on the level nowadays and old age is old fogyism.

Many regret the former beautiful reverence of the child for gray hairs and for the preacher; they miss in the present hopefuls the old becoming attitude.

The tendency of questioning everything and of mocking at anything is towards sacrilege; doubtless it engenders and encourages that conceit which moves in the direction of disputing even the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. The haughtiness of spirit that refuses to the visible representatives the obeisance which long usage has accorded them, often leads to insubordination as to the authority and validity of God and revelation.

It is not pretty, nor graceful; it is not seemly. Loss in humility is no profit to the beauty of the morning of life. The expression of dissent is not so proper to intellect that is just beginning to bud.

But unlovely as this is, and ungracious, it is not an unmixed evil. While it results in youth being less easily led by good, it makes them also less readily swayed by bad, influences.

Smooth, vile men cannot so easily lead astray those of this independent type. They are not so often the tools and victims of scoundrels. With them presumption is shorter-lived; the impostor has a hard row to hoe; the adventurer sooner finds himself stranded.

The most unlovely, the most angular, features of the present irreverence are only temporary; characteristics of the transitory period merely; the extreme natural to the revolt against the extreme intellectual bondage of former centuries. The elastic mind will return in time to equilibrium; the pendulum never rests at the end of the stroke.

Dr. Lyman Abbott's Liberty.

ON a recent Sunday evening, Dr. Abbott in answering a question about the damnation caused by the use of wine, said: "The first principle is liberty," and then illustrated the "principle" by the time-worn argument of no man having the right of prohibiting the use of meat to his neighbor even though he himself felt the use of it to be sin.

'Tis remarkable indeed, that so nearly coincident with the utterance of Plymouth pulpit, there should be a few men gathered at the Wesleyan banquet who could so well illustrate the doctor's logic (?) A group of men met for the best of purpose, find, as invited guests, some who, exercising their personal liberty, order the bottles on, even though they know how all others present will regard their action. But what matters, since they pride themselves as making up the number who cry: "Give me liberty or give me death"?

There are some things which are precious along with liberty, namely: Consideration for the feelings and welfare of others. But the tipplers at the Wesleyan banquet put liberty above all price, even the price of putting to mortification the entire Methodist denomination. The health and wealth of the nation should be classed with the precious gift of liberty, but so long as a class of men occupying Plymouth or other pulpits wish to use wine on occasion, what matters it if the world be damned?

The value of a young man to society and the nation, to say nothing of the precious relation in which he stands to his parents—than which nothing is more the gift of God—the young man, we say, needing every safeguard which God and good men can provide, why consider him while liberty needs such careful protecting?

The wives and mothers of our land, thousands of whom need no second purgatory for the mortification of the flesh, why consider them so long as society leaders must have liberty? Oh, liberty, precious bird, we pray God in heaven to direct thy flight that thou perch only on banners carried by men, who, cheered on by so precious an emblem, strike blows for God and native land!

What the men of this nation need is the liberty to do right, that liberty which God has, which makes it impossible for Him to do wrong. But men who are slaves to custom or to appetite, feel they must have liberty after their own order, and mistaking license for liberty, trail liberty in the dust. Such men may, like the warning examples of Scripture, serve the purposes of God.

Purity in Art.

A CONTROVERSY has been going on between the Detroit W. C. T. U. and the county supervisors' building committee concerning two nude female figures, representing Light and Knowledge, designed for the new county building. As we understand it, the W. C. T. U. asked that the statues be removed and something else substituted for them. A committee of five was appointed by the supervisors to report on the subject, two of whom were ladies, but not W. C. T. U. women, and they reported favorably to the use of the statues. The white-ribboners claim that the figures are a violation of purity in art, and that the law of the state is on their side. This being so, times will likely be lively in Detroit. If the request was a proper one, which we believe it was, then the women should stand firm in their demands upon the ground of purity, of morals, of real good to mankind, and not because people differ in taste, or because somebody might or might not be shocked. The real question is, will "Light" and "Knowledge" as they are designed be harmful or helpful to the highest and holiest interests of the family and the state? If helpful, then let them stand; if not, let something else be substituted; but if this can not be secured, then, as Dr. Mary A. Willard, first vice-president of the union, said, let them be clothed, not, as she is erroneously quoted as saying, "in the ordinary drapery that women wear," but in some classical or simple garments in accord with the thought expressed and with what ought to be universal good taste and they will not be offensive to modest women.

The Murderous Cigaret.

NO one should be disturbed in his or her work against the cigaret because of printed defenses of the little murderer, or the sneers of physicians, dealers or users. The very fact that a "medicine man" will print a twelve page tract to show "by incontestable proof," according to his words, "that every argument used by those who clamor for the suppression of the traffic in cigarets is based upon transparent falsehood or absurd misconceptions, easily penetrated by the light of science," etc., etc., and then make no effort to show that there is an absence of the most dangerous element of all, viz., nicotine, proves to what straits the trade is put. The "medicine man" will have to do better than that, for if an awakened mother read twelve pages to prove the movement against cigarets to be only popular prejudice, and that there is no arsenic in the wrapper, and that they are made from well-selected, clean tobacco leaf, and twelve pages more of history as to how the cigaret came to be, and twelve pages more of interspersed criticism of the laws and lawmakers and of school directors and superintendents and of all scientists who do not glorify the cigaret, and then twelve pages of chemists who concur in asserting that "no arsenic was found," "no opium was found," and "no drug or poison foreign to tobacco was found," and twelve pages more to deny that cigarets ever made any one insane, and twelve more pages to set up the straw man and knock him down again with platitudes and revilings and sarcasm for the poor, benighted schoolteachers, mothers, lawmakers and scientists who want to prohibit children from using cigarets—if the awakened mother should read miles of such stuff and tons of it (which she won't do) her view of the cigaret would be very little modified, for she knows that nicotine is the greatest enemy in it, and her mind will not be diverted from that, by praise of the paper or the tobacco. It is too late in the day for the trade to bulldoze the public so easily. Especially is this true when there are notable instances of their own condemnation by their own witnesses:

"The published report on the cigaret by the Chicago Board of Health is charged by Dr. Reynolds, head of the department, to be a fabrication of the tobacco trust for its own base ends. This report has been published even in British medical journals, and great surprise has everywhere been felt that the Chicago Board of Health should commend the cigaret as the most harmless form in which tobacco can be used." And so it all turns out to be nil.

Prof. Cass L. Kennicott, the chemist of Chicago who is widely quoted as having found the fourteen brands of cigarets, said to have been examined by him for the Chicago Board of Health, free from all injurious drugs, except nicotine, comes out over his own signature and says: "The interviews credited to me in the daily papers are not authorized, and are, I believe, published to advertise." Suppose they were found free from everything foreign to tobacco, so long as tobacco is there the little murderer is there.

But here in a periodical before us is one of those queer things that looks like an editorial, a double column set up in large type, well paragraphed and leaded, a delight to look upon typographically, and probably paid for at the highest figure, which says after much about William Tell and Napoleon and boards of health, "The cigaret owes its popularity to the fact that it can be smoked with impunity. It contains no nicotine, and the riced paper in which it is wrapped turns out to be a substance which dissolves into thin air, leaving no trace in the tobacco whatever." The writer of this would go up head as the champion liar were it not for the distiller who recommends his whisky on account of the absence of alcohol!

All who care to do so can obtain reliable testimony in their own midst to the effect that tobacco is a poison, that it stunts the growth of the young and injures their nerves, retards digestion, blunts the intellectual faculties and damages the heart; the list of reputable scientists who testify to the same and even worse things is practically endless.

Charles Buckley Hubbell, counselor at law and president of the New York board of education, says "Legislation on the cigaret question can be readily secured and it furnishes a substantial basis upon which to found the more promising work which is based upon creating a sentiment against this vice."

If the Terry bill now before Congress is passed, it will give police power to the states to shut out cigarets in original packages, and this will encourage other states to pass prohibitory laws as Iowa and Tennessee have already done. Teachers, preachers and white-ribboners should write at once to Hon. G. W. Ray, the Capitol, Washington, D. C., telling him that they want the Terry bill to pass. It is the terror of the tobacco trust. Good laws, anti-cigaret leagues in the public schools, and the instruction now given in our school physiologies, ought to unmask and dethrone the cigaret, and they will.

Creating a Demand.

THE falsity of the old contention of the liquor trade, that they merely supply a demand that exists for the intoxicating liquors they deal in, is shown in a report of the proceedings of a recent meeting of the Dublin Distilleries Company, printed in the Wine and Spirit Gazette (England):

The report of the company showed that no dividend was available for the ordinary shareholders, and after enumerating some adverse circumstances as partially accounting for the unsatisfactory result, says: "It was absolutely essential for them to create a demand for their whisky." As one means of creating a dividend-providing demand for the whisky, Dr. Corby, of Cork, said, "he thought their whisky was not properly advertised." The chairman confessed that they spent between £4,000 and £5,000 a year in advertising, and "their sales had decreased in England." And yet we are told the innocent traders in liquor only meet a demand that exists.—The National Advocate.

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

Mr. M. W. T. Burdick has been lecturing in Georgia. The Macon News says he has done much good in that city. "His earnest, burning words have not been in vain. He is the enemy of the traffic but the friend of humanity."

Since the plea "For a Pure Home Life," appeared in THE UNION SIGNAL columns by Miss Belle Mix, inquiries have arisen as to literature on the subject. These will be answered if addressed to Miss Belle Mix, Danville, Iowa.

Mrs. Alice Danner Jones, of Canton, O., daughter of John Danner, one of Ohio's leading prohibitionists, gave an interesting lecture lately, at Damascus, O., on "Talent in the Homespun." She is a strong advocate of Christian temperance, and speaks in the interests of the W. C. T. U.

Miss Slack kindly sent us one of the first copies of the report of the World's Convention at Toronto, Canada. Miss Willard's address occupies fifty-seven pages, and is worth more than the price of the whole. This, and the report of the secretary, are invaluable aids to all workers.

Prof. A. A. Hopkins, of Hornellsville, N. Y., is giving lectures and readings from his own works in New York and Pennsylvania. "The Cost of a Boy," and "The Boy and the State" are two of his subjects. He discusses reforms and works under The Economy Lecture Bureau, Hornellsville, N. Y.

Miss Lucy Page Gaston went before a subcommittee of the Chicago school board, as a representative of the Christian Citizenship League, to urge the adoption of their new cigaret leaflet, published at 153 La Salle street, Chicago, as supplementary reading for the public schools. Miss Gaston is editor of the anti-cigaret department of the Christian Citizen, which is the organ of the League, and is pushing her work vigorously.

In a new magazine, The Pen or Sword, published in Chicago in the interests of peace, our National superintendent of that department is honored with a fine page portrait, a biographical sketch, and this sentiment under the portrait: "Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, by her rare, executive ability, her self-denying labors, and her generous liberality in the cause of peace and arbitration throughout the world, has made for herself an enduring place in the hearts of all who love peace."

"The original agitation in regard to the advancement of women in Germany, began," according to the New York Tribune, "at a meeting called in her parlors by Mrs. Mary B. Willard, sister-in-law of Frances E. Willard, who has since been the high counsel of its leaders although she has kept herself in the background." The Tribune says, "Mrs. Willard is the sun of the intellectual solar system of the women of Germany; she warms and lights the movement from her home in Berlin. She is a quiet, unassuming woman, but has a clear head, a strong character, and is thoroughly respected by everyone."

Mr. Harry Palmer, at the head of the News Review Co., East Liverpool, O., does not permit a line of liquor advertising in any of his papers at any price. He will not take a piece of job work in which whisky or any intoxicants are mentioned, nor print programs that take whisky advertisements. Whisky rings have boycotted him and time serving liquor advertising politicians have abandoned him so far as business is concerned, but nevertheless he is succeeding admirably. His wife stands by him and good and true men give him patronage. Brother Palmer has the commendation and congratulations of THE UNION SIGNAL.

Young Woman's Branch.

Y's at Work.

DEAR Y EDITOR:—The Y's of North Dakota are not idle if they have been silent so long. Cass county, the banner county in the state, having eight unions, and our intrepid Mrs. Tousley as leader, held a most successful and enthusiastic two days' conference in November. They are furnishing a room at the Florence Crittenton Home, to be known as the Cass county room. Each union contributes certain articles, but by a special fund the larger pieces of furniture are to be supplied. They have held one medal contest which netted them over thirty dollars.

We have four new unions since our annual report was sent in. Hon. A. C. Rankin is doing a grand work in our state. At Larimore fifty-six new members were gained, most of which were W's, only a few coming to our ranks, but we are just as happy over results as if all were ours.

Our new organizer, Miss Cora Larimore, is planning a campaign for her own county, and we hope by spring will have perfected a county organization. Steele union writes they have gained ten regular and fifteen honorary members, are holding meetings every week and all the members attend. They have fitted up a room for headquarters and are planning to put into it basket ball and reading matter; they have one honorary who is fifty-eight years old.

A most excellent program was sent out to the unions by our fellowship secretary for foreign mission meetings, which were to be held in January. I have not heard as to results. Special meetings are to be held by all our unions in February, the collections to be sent to Clara Parrish. She has sent us for these meetings one of her most beautiful letters, which is by actual measurement twenty-one feet, seven inches long. She also sent a picture of herself, taken at Hakodati on her northern trip; it is in a garden, she the central figure, surrounded by a large company of natives. I fancy she looks thin and worn, but there is the light of faith and a great purpose on her sweet face. I hope to give a good report of our meetings for her in my next letter.

(MRS.) HATTIE K. PIERSON,
Secretary Y Branch.

MISSOURI.

FOR the first time this year the Missouri Y's make their bow to the rest of the sisters. In our case silence has not meant inactivity, for while we do not number so many organizations as some states, we have the quality. We are endeavoring to increase our membership this year and to urge all to pay dues. Several new Y's have been organized since the National Convention and the prospect is good for several more.

The Olney Y reports good work and plenty of it along contest lines, all ages being enlisted. They are systematically following out the "Course of Study" and growing because of knowledge of the work.

The Cole Camp Y held a pi social (printers' pi being used) which was a decided success. Observed Crusade day by a matrons' contest; are preparing a boys' class to contest soon and also a Milkmaids' Convention; rendered "Ten Nights in a Bar-room" and organized a Loyal Legion. Who says Missouri girls are not workers! Can not give details of work in other places, but this is sufficient to show that "we are still at it," and accomplishing something. Next time I hope to send more.

Yours for a pure young womanhood and manhood,

NELLE G. BURGER,
State Sec. Y Branch.

WISCONSIN.

THE flickering blaze of Y work in the old Badger state has in no wise died out; more living fuel is gradually swelling the late small quantity, so that, in another year, we trust, the illuminating power of the work among our dear girls shall have increased to such proportions that all who behold their labor will wonder at the results of unlimited possibilities of earnest, youthful hearts in a loving service.

The Green Bay Y bears the distinction of being the banner society of the state. The girls have done nobly in the past, and now hope to eclipse all previous records under the directions of their new and zealous leader, Mrs. G. Nau. The work undertaken, with but few exceptions, has been almost wholly along educational lines, they having conducted contests and held literary meetings for the benefit of the young people of the community. But the work which lies nearest the hearts of the girls is that which relates to our Eau Claire Home. They have a furnished room at this home, providing such comforts as they are able, and how richly do they feel themselves recompensed for their meager efforts, as from time to time they hear of the wayward girls who first turned their thoughts and hearts to better ways of living during their stay in this quiet resting place.

Our ever faithful Miss Hagerty, of Milwaukee, recently organized a new Y in that great beer city; and who can say that this organization may not be the nucleus of a mighty force which shall have for its ultimatum nothing short of the entire extermination of all sinful institutions in that city.

We learn also that an active leader has been pushing our work in Tunnel City, that has resulted in the organization of a new and vigorous Y in that locality. We anticipate glowing reports of good work done by this zealous, energetic union.

Thus the good work goes on to ever greater victories we trust, in the name and strength of our Leader.

(MRS.) LOUISE HELMUTH UREN,
State Y Sec.

INDIANA.

DEAR Y EDITOR:—Our general secretary, Mrs. Ella Boole, informs me that she has grouped the states, and Indiana is asked to send something for THE UNION SIGNAL in February. It is with pleasure that I tell my sister states and workers about what the Y's are doing.

We have eight unions and two Y Branches; one of them, the Goshen Branch, was only organized July 15, 1897, and at the state convention, in October, was awarded the state Y Banner for having the largest per cent of paid up members. Mrs. Amanda Kauffman, an earnest, consecrated woman, is their leader as Y secretary.

We are proud to have, as Y secretary of the Central union of Indianapolis, our beloved Mrs. Mary E. Balch, whom many of you know is our state corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U. Now, dear sisters, what excuse can you offer when such busy women as these take up Y work.

Miss Mary Hadley, our state W. C. T. U. vice-president, organized a new Y at Terre Haute, December 12, with nine regular and five honorary members; thus, the good work is spreading over new fields. Our standard for Indiana is 500 Y's by next state convention, so we can have a delegate to the National; we now number 116. We have faith enough to believe that God will wonderfully bless us.

We have sent to the several unions a copy of "Annual Leaflet" of the Y Branch of the National, also one of Rose M. Wood-Allen's "Open Letters" upon White Shield work, urging all to present the purity pledge for signatures. I believe a generous distribution of pledge cards will help to create a temperance sentiment.

Personally, to each Y of Indiana I send hearty greetings; may this be the best year, because souls shall be saved from drunkards' graves, and purity and temperance clasp hands.

CLARA M. SEARS,
State Y Sec.
106 W. 14th St., Anderson, Ind.

Notes.

A NEWLY organized Y at Wheaton, Minn., recently gave a necktie social which netted $11 as the substantial return. The money will be expended in buying supplies for the union.

A NEW Y has been organized at Fitzgerald, Ga., with the following officers: President, Miss Maud Stewart; secretary, Miss Dora Wightman. The W's had opened a reading-room, which they have turned over to the Y's, who promise to make a success of it.

THE Y's were given an hour at the county convention in Clinton county, New York, and filled it to the edification of all. This has become a regular feature of the conventions in this county. It brings in new voices and new talent, and the bright young faces of the Y's are an inspiration to the older workers.

THE Y's at Schenectady, N. Y., are in a flourishing condition. A church near by having lost its pastor by death, the Y's were invited to fill the pulpit on Sunday evening. They formed a temperance choir, arranged a nice program in which about six members, active and honorary, took part, and presented the work so acceptably that they were invited to come again.

IN the interests of purity, the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Jersey has passed resolutions denouncing the use of the bicycle—single or tandem—on Sunday, and the members have pledged themselves not to go riding on that day. They also declare themselves against Yale University, because liquor is sold in sixty-six bar-rooms within two blocks of the campus, and promise to exert all their influence to dissuade their brothers and other young men from entering upon a course in that institution.

THE Y's of Camden, N. J., celebrated their fourth anniversary January 20. The Y's have pleasant headquarters in the building owned by the W's and have just completed furnishing their parlor. One of the honoraries did the artistic papering and all were out in full force for the anniversary meeting. The state secretary, Mrs. Raphael, assisted with the program, and Miss Thomas, Pennsylvania's new secretary, and Miss Frances Jones came over from Philadelphia with a delegation of Y's. The celebration was a great success and the audience was impressed with the fact that the young women are important factors in the temperance reform.

Columbian Y Fund.

SINCE convention have only received the following: Honolulu Y's, Hawaiian Islands, $5; Mrs. H. M. Packard and friends, New York, $2.50. The year is rapidly passing and I hope to hear from many unions soon with contributions for this worthy cause.

World's W. C. T. U.

Canada.

PRINCE Edward Island, the smallest province in the Dominion of Canada, is progressing favorably in almost every department of W. C. T. U. work in which it is engaged.

Mrs. C. W. Strong, president of the provincial union, has visited a number of local unions and given the World's Convention report at public meetings arranged for this purpose. During the month of January she visited Elmsdale, Alberton and Kensington, and was assisted by the various ministers of the respective committees. Her word pictures of the principal features of that great Convention and her character sketches of the foreign delegates who attended that unique gathering were very interesting and much appreciated. At Elmsdale six new members were added to the roll at the close of the meeting.

The department of mothers' meetings is encouragingly prosperous in this province. Mrs. Holman, provincial superintendent, writes: "The interest in mothers' meetings is increasing in every union. A well-conducted meeting arouses the mothers to the responsibilities as well as to the very great privileges they have, and an eagerness is shown for literature on the question of child-training. The success of the temperance movement depends largely on the self-control of our boys, and mothers are realizing that earnest study is needed on their part to be able to guide and instruct their children. Numbers are finding the New Crusade just what they need."

The scientific temperance instruction law is not just satisfactory in its operation here and the W. C. T. U. purpose asking for an amendment at the next session of Parliament, so as to make it compulsory to both teacher and child.

The local union at Kensington has a small lending library. The books are principally on Social Purity by Dr. Wood-Allen.

Preparations are being made for the coming plebiscite campaign, and already local unions have been requested to contribute to a fund for literature to be used on this occasion. We expect a hard fight but we know wherein our strength lies and we are trusting for victory.

World's Wave Crests.

(Translated from a Finnish daily newspaper.)

REV. JAS. H. BEATT, Presbyterian minister at Rockburn, Canada, writes the Montreal Witness in very complimentary terms of the work of Mrs. Ardill, one of the Australian delegates to the World's Convention, who is now lecturing in the provinces.

THE "Domprost," Rev. G. Dahlberg (the one next in rank to the bishop of the diocese), in Abo, Finland, recently called a meeting of the people of the rural communities for the purpose of allowing them to publicly express their opinion on the question of beer-selling in their city. The attendance was enormous, and the people unanimously expressed the wish that beer might be taken away, "it being a curse on their homes and happiness."

(From a Swedish Journal.)

THE temperance work and the interests of temperance in general have reached so high a point in Sweden that it was agreed by the four greatest temperance societies of Sweden at their convention last summer to issue a call for a great international temperance congress to be held at Gothenburg, beginning July 2, 1898. At first the intention was to invite only the Scandinavian countries and Germany, but later it was deemed advisable to extend it to all the countries of Europe. The plan is that the congress proper last two days when addresses will be received from the most prominent delegates from foreign countries. Then will follow special conventions of the various societies where good opportunity will be given the guests to visit all the sessions and take part in the discussions. For the necessary arrangements a committee has been appointed which will do its best to give a cordial reception to the invited guests and delegates. The invitations are signed by prominent members of the four great temperance societies of Sweden.

News from the Field.

North Carolina, No. 2.

AFTER the return of our president from Toronto and Buffalo, the local union in her town had an echo meeting at which she gave an interesting account of the many things said and done at the two great Conventions. We wished at the time that members from the different unions throughout the state could have been present. But on looking over the reports as they came from time to time, we note that the members elsewhere have caught the inspiration from the president's letter in the Tidings, and renewed their zeal in the work.

Our state paper, The W. C. T. U. Tidings, the success of which we were just a little doubtful of when the first issue came out, has safely stemmed the tide and is now on firm footing. Much credit is due Miss Victoria Richardson, the editor-in-chief and business manager, for the success of this paper.

At a recent meeting of the state executive, held in Charlotte, it was decided that two prize banners are to be awarded at the next convention. One to the Y's and one to the L. T. L's for the greatest increase in paid up membership.

Charlotte union seems determined to keep ahead, and carry off all the banners. They are organizing the county, having several unions doing effective work. The matrons' and the L. T. L. medal contests have been a success in every way. Three hundred names were recently added to the roll of the Loyal Temperance Legion.

At Stateville they are increasing in membership at each meeting. The Y's at Marion have had two medal contests and are preparing for another. The three branches are doing splendid work at Cleveland, Rowan county. They have paid up their state dues. These three unions have been organized since the Convention.

Asheville union lost their president, Mrs. E. A. Moorehead, who had served them so acceptably for two years. She goes to Macpelah, N. C. Her place as president is being ably filled by Miss Mamie Peebles, one of the graded school teachers. The union recently gave a temperance drama. They have already made excellent financial reports to the state treasurer.

Henderson, Elizabeth City, Fayetteville, Durham, all report the temperance sentiment growing as a result of the medal contests. Greensboro has an active Y at Bennett College. The members of Salisbury union have organized several unions in the county together with the Y and L. T. L. branches; also held a county convention with gratifying success. They have taken up the course of study in THE UNION SIGNAL and are delighted with it.

An "Art Exhibition" was given on the 31st of January complimentary to the Y's of Salisbury; the exhibition was beautiful, interesting and educative. A handsome sum was realized. The Y's have taken up a regular course of study, "Alcohol and Hygiene."

Mrs. F. V. Hunt, state superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, is an active worker; she is bringing her department right to the front.

South Dakota.

COMPARED with older and more thickly populated states, South Dakota may not make much of a showing, but when that difference is taken into consideration, South Dakota is keeping up her end.

The Spearfish union is not large, but it is keeping its principles before the public. A profitable parlor meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Gunsolly the last of November.

The Meckling union about the same time held a Demorest silver medal contest, that was of benefit to the union in more ways than one.

The fourth annual convention of the Bon Homme county union was held in Springfield, December 14, with a good program of papers, talks and reports. The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. Jane Brann; corresponding secretary, Miss Mary Seccombe; recording secretary, Mrs. Mary Jewell; treasurer, Mrs. Lulu B. Monfore.

A new union has been organized at Bijou Hills, Charles Mix county, with the following officers: President, Mrs. C. Wilson; corresponding secretary, Mrs. W. A. Prater; treasurer, Mrs. C. Lane.

The union at Rapid City held a very pleasant and successful parlor meeting the Tuesday after Christmas, at the home of Mrs. C. W. Brown. The program consisted of a paper on the Temperance Temple, a talk on the same subject, and several items concerning the Temple. The proceeds, five dollars, were sent to the Temple fund. This union has taken up the "soap" project, and will work it with all the vigor possible. A superintendent has been appointed, Mrs. E. J. Clift, who is surely the right person in the right place. The Rapid City union also has the plan for a curio collection parlor meeting under headway.

New Hampshire.

IT is with great satisfaction that we report the growth and circulation of our state paper, The Outlook. In past years the support of this has been quite a drain on the state treasury, but last year it was not only self-supporting but reports a small surplus. The editor gives much credit to the advisory committee and the assistance of the rank and file, but we well know the success is largely due to the faithful work and painstaking ability of the editor, Miss Clara E. Rowell, Franklin.

New Hampshire is still ringing with the echoes of the National Convention. Mrs. A. B. Jones, of Manchester, one of our delegates, has given her report eighteen times in the three months, and so ably, that she has many other engagements to fill.

In these days of anxious shifts for money to carry on our work, we would note the success of the Somersworth union, who have established an annual "chicken pie dinner" on New Year's Day, the proceeds from which serve in large measure to carry on their work during the year.

The Franklin union has raised fifty dollars for the Temple fund by interesting the Sunday-schools of the town in the subject and entertaining at a W. C. T. U. reception the children who were successful in filling the wheels.

Boscawen has sent many useful articles to the Mercy Home, and keeps a well supplied box of literature at the railroad station; they also report public temperance meetings held quarterly. Lancaster observed temperance Sunday by sermons in the leading churches, reports a distribution of food and clothing among the poor at Christmastide, a box sent to Mercy Home and a wide-awake lecture by Mrs. Keith, of Worcester. superintendent of work among railroad men.

For several years at the request of the Claremont union, the pastors of the different churches call upon their people for a penny collection the first Sunday in February, the funds thus raised being devoted to the purchase of temperance literature; the plan has proved a very successful one.

Portsmouth union sent a valuable box to Mercy Home at Christmas. They are putting a literature box in the station, and have sent a petition to our congressmen to work for the passage of the anti-cigaret bill. In department work we note the success of Mrs. C. W. Hardy, superintendent of mercy. She is one of our younger women, and her earnest work is telling for good in this valuable department. A Band of Mercy has just been formed at Pike Station.

THE state and especially the Evanston union, has suffered a great loss in the death of Mrs. A. V. Quinn, one of the oldest residents. In pioneer days she started a little mission Sunday-school, and two of the little girls attending it are now grand Christian women. She was for many years the president of the Evanston union, and while a resident of Phœnix, Arizona, was president of the largest union in that place. A husband and three grown sons survive this noble woman, to whom the entire community extends profound sympathy.

The Evanston union keeps wall pockets supplied in twenty-one cabooses which run out of that city.

The Laramie union is to have addresses for working women at its next meeting and an intelligence office for that afternoon. Soap wrappers are being collected in Laramie, and a few members have paid in to the hospital fund.

THE fourteenth annual convention of the New Haven county W. C. T. U. was held December 9, in Ansonia. Another department of work was added, that of work among miners. Our state president received the Chautauqua salute, and responded in her cheery way. Other visitors were present, who all helped to make the convention an enjoyable as well as a helpful occasion. The county president spoke in behalf of the state paper, and gave out envelopes for subscriptions. Reports of superintendents showed good work in their respective branches. Two Y's were represented, one of them by the young lady who won the first gold medal in the Demorest medal contest.

A pleasant feature was the introduction of local presidents. Volney B. Cushing was the speaker of the evening. His address on the "Modern Triumvirate" was a masterly one and listened to by an appreciative audience.

The Meriden union recently received a treat in the form of an address from Miss I. A. Leonard, for three years a teacher in Hawaii. She spoke on the "Manners, Customs and Habits of Hawaiians," and illustrated her lecture with paintings and curios. This union has continued to keep our work before the public by general meetings of various sorts. The afternoon of December 26 was devoted by the union to the entertainment of the flourishing L. T. L.

This comes from New Haven: "A teacher in one of our schools related the following: She was talking of the evil effects of tobacco. One of her pupils remarked that he knew a boy who wrote to a cigaret manufacturer (who offered premiums) asking this question, 'What will you give me if I will smoke two thousand?' The answer came, 'We will give you a coffin.'"

New London W. C. T. U. gave a "Pilgrim Supper" December 21. The guests were served by lineal descendants of John Robinson, Miles Standish, John Eliot and other Pilgrims, Revolutionary and missionary heroes. In connection with the supper was a sale of useful and fancy articles. Successful, of course.

The Pawcatuck L. T. L. gave a very pleasing New Year's reception, and on that occasion presented their superintendent, and the lately retired state superintendent, with substantial tokens of their good will. Books were given to about forty pupils for unbroken attendance for three months, and larger books to five who had the same record for eighteen months. Beautiful holiday cards, bearing holiday texts, were given to all the persons present. The Legion was never in a better condition than now. It numbers about 175 pupils.

The bazar of the Pawcatuck W. C. T. U., December 13, was a decided success in every way. The day being favorable, the attendance was large both afternoon and evening. The Pawcatuck ladies maintained their well-earned reputation as bountiful providers of good things for both the inner and outer comfort of their many friends. Arrangements for this bazar were begun early last summer by the chairman, and plans were well carried out by her able corps of assistants.

THERE continues to be much excitement over prohibition in many localities. At Nacogdoches this state of feeling ran so high that several street encounters was the result. Luckily for the antis two or three cases in the courts for pistol carrying was the only outcome. Fortunately for the prohibitionists of Whitesboro, Mrs. Stoddard gave a temperance address at that place on the eve of election; as a result local option prevailed. Eight convictions for violation of the local option law in Johnson county have been affirmed by the court of criminal appeals.

Bailey, Copeville, Farmersville, Plano, Gordon, Benbrook, Nevada, Gainesville, Mount Calm, Newberg, Mexia, Blooming Grove, Gatesville, Hillsboro and Comanche are some of the many places visited by our zealous president since the World's and National Conventions. New unions have been organized at Commerce, with Etta Booth Mayo as district press superintendent, and at Granburg with Mrs. W. J. Moore, as press superintendent eighth district. From Mrs. Stoddard's "bits" in our state paper, I learn that Greenville and Lafkin unions decided some months ago that the church ought to do W. C. T. U. work and they disbanded to give them the opportunity. Months of patient waiting has proved the fallacy of this move and Lafkin reorganized with the determination to stay organized. Greenville women have decided with Mrs. Stoddard that the church don't, can't, and never will do it so long as its voters keep the saloon licensed over against the sanctuary, and its praying members believe that a rousing temperance meeting will hurt a revival, as was the case at Farmersville. Our leader gave a parliamentary drill at Tyler, to the federated clubs. This is worthy of note, as a majority of women in our state outside of the W. C. T. U. think it rather unwomanly to even know how to make a motion, or to present it for consideration after being made, and until recently the gavel was not permitted in the clubs of Houston; we were called to order by a bell—it always made me hungry—which is considered more ladylike. Through the efforts of W. C. T. U. women, many of whom belong to the reading clubs and press associations, parliamentary law has come to be recognized as "an aid to self-confidence and the only way to preserve the rights of all."

The eighth district held a convention at Stephensville, in September. The fifth district one at Dennison in November, at which Mrs. Stoddard made an address. A literary and musical program was interspersed with an address by Mrs. Schimelphenig, district president, and papers upon W. C. T. U. topics. Mrs. Stoddard will hold a convention in the ninth district in February.

Many unions have sent letters to their respective representatives in Congress asking them to vote and use their influence for a bill now before that body, to forbid the issue of permits or licenses to sell liquor in local option localities. Some reply, "that the government must have the revenue." Hon. Thos. H. Ball, the member from the first district, in which Houston is situated, in response to a letter from the corresponding secretary of the Central W. C. T. U., approved and signed by district president, and officers of the Central, said, "It will give me pleasure to comply with your request to support the passage of an act by Congress to prevent the issuance by the United States government of liquor licenses until license has been taken out by the state."

At a recent meeting of a charitable organization in this city, the temperance women achieved a triumph. A benefit was to be given. A souvenir program was decided upon, and a committee appointed to solicit advertisements to cover expenses. The chairman, asking for instructions, wished to know if advertisements should be solicited from saloons and breweries? Without waiting for the presiding officer, a chorus of voices responded, "Of course! They'll pay the best prices." Instantly a white-ribbon woman arose—the widow of an ex-congressman and former president of the association—and addressing the chair, protested against such a course, stating she would withdraw from the association if that method was adopted; another white-ribboner remarked there would be no need of the proposed entertainment were it not for these victims of the product of saloons and breweries. Two ladies, wives of private bankers, and a Roman Catholic lady, entered a protest, and upon being put to a vote, the motion, "That we do not," prevailed.

The Liquor Dealers' Association of this city has disbanded, and distributed the amount left in the treasury among the various charitable organizations, the Florence Crittenton Rescue Home coming in for a share. Referring to this, one lady observed that the action taken by the association was a "distinction without a difference." A white-ribboner replied that she believed in the Roman Catholic creed of expiation, and on that ground voted to receive the money.

The "Watch Tower" in THE UNION SIGNAL of the 13th gained in some way knowledge of our president's accomplishments since convention and of our state prison superintendent, Mrs. Lizzie Johnson's action at the National Prison Congress that met in Austin during the month of December, and made mention of facts, so I refer my readers to THE UNION SIGNAL of that date. Not one report was sent to me for December or January, so my letter this month is late.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The shadow of a great sorrow is upon all our hearts to-day, and yet the shadow is lightened by the rays of a hope and faith that will not give way to fear. As you all know, through THE UNION SIGNAL and the daily press, our great leader is lying critically ill in New York City, and for some days past the chances of her ultimate recovery have seemed very small. She has been suffering for weeks from a severe attack of the grip, but the matter has been kept from the public, as any report of her illness has, heretofore, been so greatly exaggerated that it has reacted unfavorably upon herself, besides increasing so largely the amount of correspondence in her own and Miss Gordon's hands,—a correspondence which is at any time so large as to be a burden to one strong and vigorous. We could not help feeling some anxiety, still there seemed no immediate cause for fear.

On Monday, the 14th, however, a telegram was received at National Headquarters which filled our hearts with the deepest apprehension and, although more hopeful word has since come to us, the burden of intense anxiety is not yet wholly removed. All that can be done by human skill is being done for Miss Willard. She has two trained nurses, two skillful doctors, Miss Gordon is with her constantly, and on Monday, the 14th, Mrs. Stevens went to her help. We at Headquarters could almost find it in our hearts to envy those who are in New York. It is so much harder to await news from a distance than to be upon the spot; and yet we must not desert our places of trust so long as we are most needed here, so we are trying to do all in our power to carry on our beloved work, holding ourselves in readiness to go to New York at a moment's notice, if need be, and yet praying and believing that this blow will be averted, and our great Chieftain be spared to us for many years.

Dear sisters, I am sure I need not ask you to pray at this hour. It is all we can do—to pray and believe. The first thing we did at National Headquarters was to call a prayer-meeting and I do hope every local union all over the land has done the same. It does not seem as if God could so bereave us. Let us hold to His promises with a mighty faith and may He in His infinite mercy grant that before these words shall meet your eyes the good news, "out of danger," will have been telegraphed all over the country and our hearts shall be singing doxologies of praise and thanksgiving! But, whatever the outcome may be, let us not forget that God still lives and reigns; that His work is greater than any individual worker, even the greatest, that, in the hour of darkness His light shines. We can not believe our leader is to be taken from us, but, if God sees not as we see in the matter, then He will give to the great organization into which she has been pouring her life's blood for so many years, the strength and faith to go on in its divinely appointed mission. While writing I have just received this telegram from Mrs. Stevens: "Much encouraged this morning. Hope on. Pray on," and have wired back the "Praise God" which I am sure is in all your hearts.

Miss Belle Kearney expects to be in the North after June and will fill engagements for Chautauquas, schools of methods, county and district conventions or public meetings of the local unions as the case may be. Miss Kearney needs no indorsement from us or to our constituency. She is one of the most brilliant of platform speakers and wins friends, not alone for herself but for our cause wherever she goes. Her trip through the West last year won for her golden commendations and we congratulate the northern states that they are to have the privilege of securing her services during the coming summer. She may be addressed as to dates and terms at her home residence, Flora, Miss.

Mrs. Mary B. Wood, of Ithaca, N. Y., state superintendent of drinking fountains, writes to ask what other states have taken up that department. As I am unable to answer the question I give it place here in my column, requesting the various superintendents, if there be others, to write to Mrs. Wood, 119 Cayuga St.

From Mrs. S. A. McClees, our former superintendent of work among soldiers, comes a most cheering report of the work that is being carried on in Oakland and vicinity. Mrs. McClees is evangelistic superintendent of Alameda county and also of the Oakland union. She is conducting a series of Bible lessons, which, from the list of subjects, must be of exceeding interest. She has also presented the union with two dozen books as the nucleus of a loan library. Among the books are "Glimpses of Fifty Years," "Woman and Temperance," and other important works on temperance, Prohibition and woman's work. This is a suggestion which might well be followed out by others who are interested in making the work of the local unions more intelligent and zealous.

Three special suggestions come to me for the coming months. They are not strikingly original, but may serve as "line upon line." 1. Let each woman, so far as possible, attend all the meetings of her local union and feel that she herself has something to do to make those meetings of interest. 2. Hold frequent public meetings, varying the public lecture with the parlor meeting, medal contest, parliamentary drill, mothers' meetings or the many variations possible in our many-sided work. 3, and as a means to make possible the many other things which might be suggested, do all in your power to push the financial plan as explained to you in letters sent to each local union by the National treasurer. Money is not an end but it is a most necessary means to all the ends we are seeking to compass. This plan makes it possible for you to put money into the treasuries of National, state and local unions and thus makes possible more literature, more copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, more public meetings, more and better organization, better legislative work and indeed everything we are seeking to accomplish. Therefore, let us make this a real financial year in order that, through better financial conditions, we may be enabled to accomplish better work in every direction.

Yours in faith and hope,
KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Treasurer's Corner.

With a great shadow hovering over us, that threatens to bring darkness and sorrow to our hearts, I take my pen for the weekly chat with the white-ribbon host. Every thought is a prayer for our beloved leader, who in pain and weakness, lies so near to the portals of the world unseen. We recall her years of devotion to our cause, we recount the sacrifices she has made, the victories she has won, and we cry out in agony, "We cannot spare her." The terror in our hearts drives out every other sensation, and every plan, every enterprise seems so trivial compared to the issue of the great battle for life in the little quiet room in that great eastern city so far away. It seems almost sacrilege to think or speak of work, of money, of plans, yet loyalty to her demands that we be faithful, as she was ever faithful, doing our duty though our hearts are weighed down with a constant anxiety that brings tears to our eyes. So we, with heavy hearts at Headquarters, have tried to do our work, believing we could show our love for our Chieftain in no way that would be so pleasing to her as in being steadfast and faithful to the cause she loved and for which she has given her precious life. We are hoping and praying that it may be prolonged. "Let us flee to the rock that is higher than we." We have no other refuge in times like these.

HELEN M. BARKER.

Organizers' Corner.

DEAR ORGANIZERS AND CO-WORKERS:—You will pardon my neglect to fill my space in this column when you know that I have been ill since Christmas day and was yesterday brought to the Gleason Sanitarium in Elmira, where I am hoping to gain strength more rapidly and so take up my work again.

The secretary of the Board of Organizers requested me to give an account of myself, and of my ideas on "How to Give Permanence and Promote the Growth of New Unions." It was my privilege to organize four new unions in Buffalo after Convention, which are doing good work, and four more have since been organized, making eight new unions as result of our Convention, with more to follow. From there I went to New Jersey and held meetings for five weeks, and when you work among the women of New Jersey you will not wonder that they have adopted as their motto, "New Jersey shall be redeemed," for they cannot be excelled in earnestness and enthusiasm. During my stay there we secured one hundred and ninety-seven active, and one hundred and forty-seven honorary members, organized three new unions and one L. T. L. I expected to return for four more weeks, but my illness obliged me to cancel the engagement. My name will not appear on the Honor Roll this year, as I expect to go abroad some time during the year for the World's W. C. T. U., and you will only hear from me through the Organizers' Column.

In order to give permanence and promote the growth of a new union, we must first see that the treasurer collects all dues as early as possible after organizing in order to give every member a personal interest. Then we must give every member something definite to do. When a member will not accept an office or superintend a department, induce her, if possible, to become an assistant to a superintendent. If she will not do this, place her on one of the following standing committees: The literature loan committee, under the supervision of the superintendent of literature, to lend our choice leaflets and booklets to persons outside our organization, who will be more sure to read them than if given them, because they are expected to return them, therefore can not lay them aside and forget them; the pledge committee, under the charge of superintendent of evangelistic work, to secure pledge signers among those who decline to become members of the organization. No one can refuse to lend a leaflet or to secure a pledge signer, and when you have induced one to do that much you can, with a little tact, lead her into broader fields of action.

Every superintendent should correspond with the county and state superintendents of the same department that she may secure from them plans of work and literature. Every union should hold its meetings regularly and as frequently as possible with an interesting program, as many persons taking part in the meeting as time will allow. These meetings should never exceed one hour and a half, and one hour is better. The program should be previously arranged and advertised, the first part devotional, the second, business, and the third the discussion of some phase of our work. Discouragements should never be talked over further than absolutely necessary to better the condition. Public meetings should be held as often as possible, securing the co-operation of all pastors and honorary members. Draw out and develop the timid members and the union will not die. State and county officers should advise and instruct in these matters until the new union is thoroughly established.

Attention is called to the advertisement of the Western Novelty Seed Company appearing elsewhere in this issue. This is a concern favorably known, and there is every reason to believe they are the right kind of people with whom to form business relations.

Miss Emma White, of 824 Nicollet Ave., Minneapolis, offers rare bargains in flowers, as will be seen from her advertisement in another column, and also from her tasty and artistic catalogue which she mails free to any address. Miss White reports that she has a great many patrons among the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL.

The Medicated Croup Necklace Company have sent to this office for inspection one of their medicated croup necklaces. It is for the use of children and is recommended to prevent croup. The manufacturers are very enthusiastic about it, and have received many letters, not only from mothers, but from physicians commending its use and speaking of its good results in cases where it has been tried. It is believed to be an honest remedy, and all those who have children who are troubled with this terrible disease would do well to send to the company at Oakmont, Pa., for printed matter on the subject.

Seems a broad term for any one firm to adopt yet the widely known seed house of PETER HENDERSON & Co., 35 & 37 Cortlandt Street, New York, supply every want of the cultivator, both for the greenhouse and garden. In their handsome and comprehensive catalogue for 1898, will be found offered, not only "everything for the garden," but all things needful for the farm as well. Our readers will miss it if they fail to send for this gorgeous catalogue, which may be had of PETER HENDERSON & Co., this year, free, on receipt of 10 cents (in stamps) to cover postage and mailing. This firm no longer supply their seeds to local dealers, so to obtain the genuine "HENDERSON'S SEEDS" you must order direct.

CHILDHOOD, ITS CARE AND CULTURE, by Mary Allen West. Chicago, Ill.: Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Price, $2.25.

"Childhood, Its Care and Culture," is a large and valuable book gotten out by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. The book is dedicated "To the fathers and mothers and friends of the little men and little women of America, by one who loves children." The frontispiece is Gabriel Max's beautiful Madonna. The motto of the book is "Childhood of to-day is the Nation of to-morrow." "There is no more important work than its care and culture, physical, intellectual, spiritual." The author says in her introduction: "Every human being is a peculiar thought of God," says Pestalozzi. To impress parents with a sense of the dignity the responsibility and the privilege of parenthood and to help them in some measure to rightly "think God's thoughts after Him" in training their children, is the object of this book. To the parent is offered the solemn alternative of working together with God in realizing the ideal, or of marring beyond recognition through ignorance, neglect or wantonness. The full harmony of human nature can only be produced when its due weight is given to every side and the higher nature draws the others up to equal perfection with its own, to develop the higher nature and bring into subjection to it the lower, thus making peace in a realm where without this subjection there is no peace, is the parents' work. It is not a book of sermons or didactic teachings, but one that the author says has grown naturally out of the rich soil of a thousand homes. "During twelve years my work took me constantly into the homes of the people. Hundreds of homes scattered far and wide over the entire country opened to me hospitable doors and took me into their very hearts. From these homes I have gathered many of the thoughts given in this book."

The Bible reading for March is furnished by Miss Cassie Smith, one of our well-known National evangelists. Subject, "Thoughts on God's plan of work and equipment for workers," the keynote being, "Not by might nor by power but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." The writer emphasizes the practicability of the Spirit's power, and says that the W. C. T. U. is in danger just at this point. We fail of best results because when in our "do-everything policy" we forget that it is God who worketh in us to will and to do. We make a mistake when we substitute doing for being. God has chosen us to be workers together with Him—to suffering as well as to joy.

What the L. T. L. Leaders Say.

In her circular letter to Junior Legions, Mrs. H. A. Metcalf, New York's state L. T. L. secretary, says:

"The Young Crusader is the National Organ of the Junior L. T. L. published by the W. T. P. A., Chicago, Ill. It is a very bright paper and should be in the hands of the Legioners everywhere to inspire and enthuse by keeping in touch with other Legions the world over."

The Granite State Outlook, Miss Anna B. Ruddick, state L. T. L. secretary, adds this testimony:

"I think one thing is very important, that all who can, whether in L. T. L. or not, subscribe for The Young Crusader. The editor is making a special effort this year to make it interesting to youth of all ages, and the W. T. P. A. has made a very generous offer. We wish each L. T. L., or union, or both, would get up clubs of ten or more, as it is good literature to distribute."

The Young Crusader is improving continually.

The Responsive Reading for March deals with "Christian Citizenship and Legislation," and is written by Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, National superintendent of that department. She shows how this department is closely associated with other lines of W. C. T. U. work; tells how to become informed with regard to laws concerning women; speaks of the measures pending in Congress in which white-ribboners are specially interested, and explains why petitions should be sent, how to secure and forward them, with many other details our women want just now to know about. This is a most important Reading along the line of immediate effort for white-ribboners, and we can not urge its use too strongly upon local unions throughout the country.

The beautiful song, entitled, "Gambling for Gold," which was dedicated to the W. C. T. U., is selling by the thousands at 40 cents per copy; to all white-ribboners at 15 cents each. Order at once of Standard Music Co., publishers, Danville, Va.

A book of programs for entertainments, suitable for evening socials by local unions, church societies, etc., has been issued by Mrs. H. E. Kramer, 132 Ash St., Akron, O. Price 50 cents.

More than ordinary care is exercised in accepting advertisements for The Union Signal.

Nat'l Temp. Hospital.

1619 Diversey Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Mrs. Inglehart has honored me by asking me to fill the hospital column in this issue of THE UNION SIGNAL. There are few requests to which I could more cheerfully respond. Having been myself an inmate of the hospital for a short time two years ago, I know something of the care and skill it extends to those who seek refuge within its walls. I know, too, how important are the basic principles upon which it is built; how necessary it is to the success of our organization that the absolute tenableness of those principles should be demonstrated. The drink curse is intrenched behind no stronger rampart than the belief which exists in the minds of so many good people that alcohol is necessary as a remedial agent. Bravely has our little hospital stood in the breach against this error, and much has it already been able to do in combating it, but greater things are in store for it if we are all faithful to our trust.

I had not visited the hospital since it has been under the present management, and so decided to look over the field again and see if I could report an advance or find any special cause on which to base my plea of loyalty to this important interest. Therefore, I turned my steps for a little time yesterday, toward 1619 Diversey Avenue. The location is a charming one, and I never enter the broad grounds that I do not find myself earnestly wishing that they were the property of the hospital board, and that enough money were in the treasury to warrant the erecting of a building suitable to our needs, and more in line with the most scientific methods of medicine and surgery. A hospital on the North Side of Chicago is greatly needed, and our own has become so well established, and is so favorably known, that it would seem a great pity to think of moving to any other site, if the building now occupied were such an one as could properly represent our great society and still greater principle. From the first, however, the Diversey avenue building has been regarded as only a temporary housing, and while the very large proportion of the patients that have recovered bears witness to the truth of our principle, and to the skill and care afforded by the hospital staff, it is still not at all such a building as should be used for that purpose by a great society like our own. In my own case, having just returned from the magnificently equipped sanitarium and hospital at Battle Creek, I found my heart coveting just such a perfect equipment for our very own; but that will come some day.

I found many improvements since my stay in the hospital, chief among them being the renovated operating room. This room has been painted throughout and rendered, so far as possible, thoroughly antiseptic. Glass operating tables and hardwood floors are, of course, necessary to make this complete, but the excellent location is a mighty factor in removing the possibility of asepsis, it being so near the lake and in a part of the city where pure air is not a rare guest. The superintendent, Miss Kellogg, a graduate of the Illinois and Cook County Training School, is thoroughly alive to the importance of having everything in line with the most advanced science as indeed, are the entire staff of attendants. I did not see the resident physician but I had a very pleasant chat with the cheerful matron, who took me through the carefully kept domain of dining room, kitchen and laundry. These are located in the basement and a free dispensary is about to be opened there which will, without doubt, be an important factor in bringing our work before the people of that vicinity. The rooms for patients were nearly all filled but I went into the few vacant ones and found them all comfortable and attractive. Indeed, although there are many improvements I could wish to see as a part of our Hospital, improvements which abundance of money alone can secure, I am yet sure that we may safely recommend it as a place where the best of skill and care will be given to inmates and I am equally sure that, when the new building shall be built, it will be built in harmony with the latest dictum of science upon the care of the sick.

And now, what is our own share in this matter as individual white-ribboners? It is one for which we need not seek long without discovery. It has been outlined again and again in these columns, nevertheless, I venture upon repetition. At the last National Convention a committee was appointed to devise ways and means whereby we, as an organization, might help the National Temperance Hospital. That committee brought in a report urging the local unions to collect five cents per capita from each individual member and send the amount at once to the treasurer of the Hospital board, Mrs. Calista Bigelow. This is, in each individual case, so small a thing as to seem hardly worth considering, and yet, it is the "many a mickle" which makes the "muckle." Five cents! the price of a car fare. Walk one day when you had intended to ride and you will be the better for the exercise and the Hospital will be the better for your gift. Better still, walk two days, or three or four. As Mrs. Barker says, out of her wide experience, some are sure to "forget," therefore we who remember must give for ourselves and for the forgetful ones as well.

Dear sisters, I am sure I need not urge this upon you further. The cause carries with it its own plea. We are not asking you to work for an enterprise which is outside the scope of our work, but one which carries with it our basic principle of total abstinence.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Important Notice.

A call has been issued for a National Pure Food and Drug Congress, to be held at Washington, D. C., March 2, 1898. "Adulteration has become so general that remedial legislation is demanded to protect the health, morals and business interests of the people. Our foreign trade is threatened, and unless checked, every honest man will, ere long, be compelled to quit business."

The above is from the official call, issued by Alexander J. Wedderburn, secretary of committee.

We must protect our food supply at all hazards; we must stand firmly for the manufacturer, whose goods are raised to and held at a high standard. Drugs, and this covers patent medicines, should not only be pure and of first quality but compounds should have ingredients on label.

Laws are useless unless enforced. Will you help protect your daily food, that which must develop and sustain the body?

You can not vote on this if you desire to, but your father, husband, son, brother and friends can. You can instruct your representatives, and so demand and secure home protection for your daily bread. Will everyone interested send her name on postal for pure food law to Marion A. McBride, superintendent domestic science Massachusetts W. C. T. U., 171 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions secured by Miss Willard or offered by those who are especially interested in the effort being put forward by our National president to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow's address is Portland, Me. She is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, and the one who was his home-maker in all his later years, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it is by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and the request of Miss Willard that she has accepted the foregoing trust.

IT is hoped that as soon as possible a biography of our great leader condensed from "Glimpses" and brought down to the present time, will be issued by the one in all this world best fitted to prepare it, her constant companion for twenty-one years, Miss Anna A. Gordon. The National Officers have formally invited Miss Gordon to prepare this biography, and we make the announcement thus early, in order that loyal white-ribboners, who will be anxious to secure the best possible life history of her whom we mourn, may anticipate its publication, and not furnish material for other sketches which may possibly be issued from unauthentic sources.

LILIAN M. N. STEVENS,

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON,
Cor. Sec. National W. C. T. U.

THE last official act of our beloved leader was to issue a call, which appeared in THE UNION SIGNAL of February 17, inviting "the coöperation of Christian churches, the Christian Endeavor Society, the Epworth League, the Baptist Young People's Union, the National Temperance Society, the Good Templars, the Prohibition party and all other temperance, religious and philanthropic societies" in celebrating March 20, the birthday of General Neal Dow, as Prohibition Day. In the midst of our crushing sorrow, it has seemed to the General Officers that nothing could be more fitting than to observe this day as a universal Memorial Sunday to her whom we have lost. She was the foremost promoter of prohibition, and there is, therefore, nothing incongruous in the blending of the two thoughts. We therefore call upon all unions to observe with fitting ceremonies this sacred day, and may God sanctify our loss by making its observance of infinite blessing to our cause and to humanity. May the work she has laid down be taken up by countless consecrated hands until victory shall be assured!

Miss Willard's Funeral Obsequies a Fitting Tribute to Her Glorious Life.

WHEN THE UNION SIGNAL went to press last week it was too early to give an account of the ceremonies of Wednesday.

The funeral car came into the Michigan Central depot, Chicago, Wednesday morning at nine o'clock, where the precious casket was received by a guard of honor and escorted to Willard Hall. Between a line of guards, composed of the women who knew her well, it was borne slowly, reverently, down the marble lined corridor to the room that is peculiarly identified with her work. To those who waited within, her last triumphal entry to the platform from which her voice had a hundred times carried comfort, hope and encouragement to the hearts of her listeners, was heralded by the sweet strains of "Rock of Ages" sung by the women who escorted her. A hush fell over the assembly as each heart bowed before the majesty of death that calmed even the individual grief. Tenderly she was laid down and forming in a semi-circle about her the comrades of many years sang, with breaking voices, "God be with you till we meet again."

Willard Hall, with its wealth of associations, never looked so beautiful. The air was heavy with the perfume from a million flowers, that in every fanciful design of floral art covered the platform, clustered about the marble pillars and decked the gallery. There were garlands of fern and smilax, and the draperies that were twined about the columns and windows were white as the lily that the emblematical figure of "purity" carried in her hand.

For a brief interval the company retired, leaving Miss Gordon and the funeral director alone. When they returned the casket was uncovered and they saw again the face that a few weeks before had smiled upon them, as the last good-by was said. Arrayed in a dainty gown of white silk and lace, she lay as if in a dreamless sleep. From the little satin slippers to the pillow that cushioned the weary head, all was a vision of purest, softest white. A spray of lilies of the valley was loosely clasped in one hand, and Lady Henry Somerset's token of lilies of the valley and cape jasmine had been laid over her heart.

A small table at the head of the casket bore a white floral lyre bearing at its base the words, "Home Guard," the floral offering from Lady Henry Somerset, the Crusade Bible and the gavel Miss Willard used in conventions. On the foot of the casket rested a beautiful sheaf of white hyacinths, lacota leaves and bleeding hearts, the offering of Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, and on the floor beneath them stood Miss Willard's traveling grip and handbag, the latter crowded full of letters and telegrams, mute evidence of the varied interests that the weary hands had laid down. Every available inch of space on the platform was filled with the floral tributes of friends and societies, which will be enumerated later. Miss Willard's portrait hung on a background of white, wreathed in smilax and with pendant white ribbons. From the left, in mid air, came a flight of white doves, one hovering directly over the casket, its outstretched wings emblematic of the pure soul that had fled.

At ten o'clock the public was admitted, and Chicago has never seen such a spontaneous tribute of respect as the multitude laid at the feet of this woman who was the friend of all. It was a tribute of love—that of these people. For an hour before the little funeral procession came to the cross-surmounted portal of the hall there were crowds waiting for admission, and for another hour they patiently stood on the wet pavement, with the cold wind sweeping in sleety gusts against them, before they gained admittance. From that time until the grief-laden coffin was brought out in the evening the dense stream of men and women entering and passing out was unbroken. Many stood in line for hours, and through it all there was no evidence of morbid curiosity. The beautiful decorations were a secondary matter to the desire for one last look upon the dear face of the one who slept long and well.

All day long there were strains of sweet music floating through the room, furnished by a choir of fifty voices; the familiar hymns that Miss Willard loved best, "He Leadeth Me," "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," "When the Mists Have Rolled Away," were interspersed with beautiful solos and other selections. At the noon hour a brief service was held. Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, World's superintendent of Y work, spoke tenderly of our fallen leader; prayers were offered by Mrs. Annie O. Rutherford, president of the Canadian forces, Mrs. Moses Smith, a Crusader, Mrs. Frances Beauchamp and Mrs. S. M. I. Henry. Mrs. Lucy Thurman, superintendent of work among colored women, paid especial tribute to the greatness of heart that enabled Frances Willard to take into her active sympathies all creeds and all races. Mrs. Louise S. Rounds gave a beautiful quotation from Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

At four o'clock those in charge were unwillingly obliged to direct that no more people should be admitted, and many hundreds turned away disappointed.

Bishop John H. Vincent offered the final prayer, and the hymn, "God be with you till we meet again," was sung.

Arriving at Evanston by train, the pallbearers who had acted in the ceremonies at Chicago, transferred their charge to the students of the Northwestern University. Six of their number took the casket tenderly upon their shoulders and bore it to the waiting hearse. The cortége then formed, a guard of students following the hearse on foot to Rest Cottage, the National officers and guard of honor bringing up the rear in carriages. The short journey was soon made and the little cottage resounded with the notes of "Home, Sweet Home" sung with faltering voices, as the students bore the still form of Frances Willard, into the home she loved so well.

THE LAST DAY.

Thursday morning in Evanston dawned in bright winter calm. For a week, cloud and wind, rain and snow and sleet, had held stormy sway, but the last day of public tribute and farewell was glorious with sunshine.

At the door of Rest Cottage—truly a place of rest for that quiet form so often wearied in the stress of life—was tied a wreath of evergreen gathered by the L. T. L. of Oberlin, O., from a hedge planted by Miss Willard's father.

In the quiet parlor, all unwearied by the passing of the silent throngs of Wednesday, she lay—"at home" for a little time. Death was kind. Though he had claimed her earthly house for almost a week, he had laid no mark upon the quiet face that had met him with a smile. But it was the first time that this most gracious of all hostesses had failed to greet her guests at the cottage with outstretched hands and ready heart of help and love.

The decorations were not many, but significant. In the bay window, which was banked with palms, hung a wreath of violets and roses from the Catholic Little Sisters of Visitation, of Evanston. On an easel stood a bas relief of Madam Willard and a picture of her daughter—face to face now and forever. In the fireplace was a cluster of fragrant green bearing this card: "Sweet-brier that Frank planted, Churchville, N. Y."

The atmosphere of the little parlor breathed naught but cheer and the brightness that was always associated with the presence of its mistress. Friends passed quietly in and out until the hour set for the final services had arrived. The words of the familiar hymn, "How Firm a Foundation," came sweetly and clearly through the room, then, standing beside the quiet form of her friend and leader, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, of Maine, prayed tenderly, with breaking voice, again the quartette sang, "Gently, Lord, oh, gently lead us," the benediction was pronounced by the venerable Professor Emerson, of Beloit, Wis., and the precious burden was once more taken up and borne out of the home that had been to the last, "Rest" Cottage.

AT THE CHURCH.

Despite the tens of thousands who on Wednesday had gathered to look upon Miss Willard's face, reverent, patient, thousands gathered in and about the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Evanston for the funeral service. Love had outloved itself in lavish expressions of tenderness, through flower and fern and palm and draperies of symbolic white.

The words of the solemn processional were read by the Rev. Frank M. Bristol, pastor of the church, who led the long line of mourners. Following, came representatives of the Northwestern University, President Henry Wade Rogers at their head. Then came the casket borne on the shoulders of six pallbearers, students of the college. All eyes and hearts turned to the pearl-gray casket, and it is doubtful if many ears took note of the low organ tones, or the words of life and resurrection read by Dr. Bristol.

"I wonder if she knows," was the tender, unspoken question of many a heart, as the coffin was placed before the altar, amid such a scene of holy beauty as even she for whom it was, had rarely seen in life. On the floor beneath the casket was a rug of roses and violets, and forming a radiant arch over the beloved sleeper was a rainbow of spring's blossoms—violets, the tender blue of hyacinths, the living green of smilax, pale yellow daffodils and the deeper glory of the crimson-touched tulip—a bow of promise shining through the clouds. She has gone beyond the glory of the rainbow, but for the comrades who follow, the "everlasting covenant" remains.

Beneath the rainbow, and caught away from the casket by a hovering dove, was a broad white ribbon bearing in silver letters six short sweet words, the last spoken on earth, and may it not be the first enraptured cry of the soul set free from mortality: "How beautiful to be with God."

The rainbow-arch was the design and gift of Anna Gordon and Miss Amelia Pemell, World's superintendent of flower mission work. It was fitting that the one whose heart has known its dearest joy in strengthening the hands and lessening the burdens of Chieftain and friend, should at the last surround her with the emblem of God's promises, and that the department whose mission is comfort should thus "speak comfortably" of life and hope to all who mourned.

From the rose-crowned pillars that supported the arch, around and within the altar, up to the open Bible on the pulpit, beyond to the music stand of the choir, were flowers, the fairest that could be found—wreath, cluster, pillow, harp, gates ajar, anchor, crown, massed blossoms, pots and boxes of "growing things abloom," trailing vine, fern, evergreen. It was a picture never to be forgotten, but the heart of it all was a gray casket enshrining the outward form of her whose life was ever of the simplest. The air was sweet with the breath of the coming spring, but sweeter far was the fragrance of her pure, gentle spirit, that was so near to each mourner that day.

Bishop Bowman, of the M. E. church, offered prayer and the choir sang Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar." How often have we heard our Chieftain pray:

> "And may there be no moaning of the bar
> When I put out to sea!"

a prayer that found its answer in the holy life which at its close knew no tempest of soul.

President Rogers, of the University, was the first speaker. His theme "Miss Willard as an Educator," recounted the history of the days when she was Dean of the Woman's College, and emphasized her rare qualities as a molder of unformed mind and character.

Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, state president of Illinois, spoke of "Miss Willard as a Patriot." Favored was Illinois, she said, in holding the sacred dust of the nation's grandest man, Abraham Lincoln, and its greatest woman, Frances E. Willard. "Pray you in this her home and in this her church," she appealed, "that the flag she so loved shall no longer give protection to the business she gave her life to destroy!"

Dr. Bristol read the Crusade Psalm, and never did its anthem of praise and prophecy seem more harmonious with events. The congregation sang—as best it could, for voices choked with tears—the Crusade hymn,

> "Give to the winds thy fears,
> Hope and be undismayed!"

Then Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman in tender speech, bore witness to "Miss Willard as a Leader." "Frances was a great leader," said this other leader who knew so well of whom she spake, "because within her little hand she held the hearts of all who followed and drew with irresistible charm those who had not the courage to follow."

Dr. J. F. Loba, of the Evanston Congregational church, offered prayer, thanking God "for this life, which in the midst of perplexity and doubt, saw clearly that the only way of salvation for the home, the city, the state, the country and the world is the path of purity and righteousness and temperance."

Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson spoke of "Miss Willard as a Friend," but none could tell how many in that vast audience knew from personal privilege what a dear friend was she who, as the speaker so beautifully said, "lived in the sunshine of the commendation she gave."

It was most touching and peculiarly significant when Miss Johannsdottir, of Iceland, tendered in broken accent and with breaking heart a testimonial of the Chieftain's fellowship in other lands. "Through her, women all the world over are sisters," she said. "Over her grave we can stretch our hands to each other and make our life as she hoped we might make it, and so carry her work on."

Then Miss Johannsdottir read the hymn, "A charge to keep I have," as though she were indeed, for her part, taking solemn charge that hour to bear forward a sacred trust, and the congregation sang the meaningful words.

Dr. M. L. Terry, of the Garrett Biblical Institute, read a beautiful original poem, and the choir sang "The Homeland."

> "There's no sin in the Homeland,
> And no temptation there,"

sang the sweet voices, and there could be naught but a song of praise for the one whom sin had so grieved and who had given her life to lessen the temptations of others.

True and beautiful was the delineation by Dr. C. J. Little, president of the Garrett Biblical Institute, of the public life and characteristics of "Evanston's chiefest citizen." "Frances Willard," he said, "never held public office, but her scepter touched two continents, and she will shape their future from her grave. She might have lived longer if she had learned to spare herself, but then she might have lived less."

Dr. C. F. Bradley gave splendid tribute to the "Woman and Friend," and never was there in all her capacities, public or private, a more womanly woman or a more friendly friend.

The closing hymn was one which Miss Willard had asked for when she was nearing the end—one often sung around the family altar at Rest Cottage: "Gently, Lord, oh, gently lead us"—the Methodist Hymnal has it, "through this gloomy vale of tears," but she had, years ago, revised this second line, and it was sung as white-ribboners sing it:

> Gently, Lord, oh, gently lead us,
> Through this vale of smiles and tears.

Then Dr. Bristol pronounced the benediction.

When all had been said—how immeasurably less than could have been said!—it was time to say good-by, the old-time "God be with you," the "hail" that is ever folded within the "farewell" of those who are in Christ. Once more the long, silent procession filed past the beloved form, lying, oh, so still in its resting place. Who shall describe the scene? One common sorrow and one common love had made one common rank. It was a sublime leveling up. Grief was as pungent and majestic on the face of the laborer as on that of the student. Dark African features were touched with the soft light of reverence that crowned the fair white brows of maidens. Crusade mothers, infirm with the weight of years, lads and lasses from school, aged men, some who crept painfully by on crutches, little children lifted in parent-arms to look upon the sleeper—for nearly two hours the line moved slowly on, all too fast for the love that wept to linger by her side. But at last the coffin lid was lowered, and God only knows what it shut away from them that remain!

The white-ribbon star spangled banner had draped the casket-home of our leader's wearied body all through its week's journeyings. "It is washed in our tears," wrote Kate Lunden, and when they lifted it for the last time before the beloved form was borne out on stalwart shoulders, fresh tears fell and hearts were baptized anew to "the work."

> "This banner of world-circling love ere shall wave
> In the name of our Christ, who is mighty to save."

Down aisles and stairs, out to the waiting hearse, the crowd followed, to stand in the cutting east wind until the line of carriages containing the relatives and near friends, the pallbearers and guard of honor had passed from sight.

At the cemetery—beautiful Rosehill—its pure white covering of snow dazzling in the sunshine, the vault was decked with evergreens, and branches of living green strewed the pathway to the entrance. The pallbearers, for the last time, took up their precious burden, and after a brief, simple prayer by Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, the casket was placed in an outer case of dark oak clamped with burnished copper. The floral offerings were deposited by weeping friends and then the ponderous, bronze doors shut her from their sight—no, not her, our beloved, but the precious clay, the outgrown garment of the flesh. A few months later it will be placed beside that of her mother.

One by one, in twos and threes, by carriage and street car and railroad train, the friends dispersed, and it was a beautiful thing they saw. Sunset had begun—so long had they lingered about all that was visible of their beloved comrade—and in the western sky hung a rainbow! There had been no storm, only the gentle rain from sad eyes had fallen. Shall we not say that He who weeps with His weeping children, had set the bow of promise in the heavens to cheer and comfort? May we not take it as a message from Him, and from her, to "Look up, not down"?

Our Queen.

BY MILDRED MERLE.

IN calm, serene and perfect rest,
The ribbon white upon her breast,
She lies, our queen o'er earth renowned,
And yet, till now, a queen uncrowned.
She swayed her golden scepter, love,
Her dower from the heavenly dove,
So gently that, about her feet,
Sister and brotherhood did meet,
Both learning how, with courage grand,
To toil for home and every land.
The while we drop the silent tear,
We feel her spirit hov'ring near;
Loved queen, bend o'er us from above,
Still sway thy golden scepter, love;
Still the white-ribbon banner wave,
Above the land we'd die to save!

How John Henry was Cured.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

JOHN HENRY DICKSON slipped down the back stairs from his little room up under the eaves and quietly sauntered away down the well-worn path to the woods.

Mrs. Dickson was sitting in her pleasant, rag-carpeted sitting-room slowly rocking to and fro in her old-fashioned, yellow rocking chair, the very picture of contentment. But her thoughts were busy about John Henry. "He's all I've got," she was thinking to herself, "and he's a good boy and a son to be proud of, only"—and a shade of anxiety crossed her kind, motherly face—"only if it wa'n't for his falling in with that lazy, good-for-nothing Tom Hatch, and being in his company so much of the time! And his learning to smoke—that makes me uneasy, and I know he's learned it from Tom Hatch. Smoking ain't the worst thing he could do, but it's bad enough, and he's too good a boy to be spoiled by such a habit. I've talked and talked to him, and he's owned up to it, but he ain't promised to quit. I'd a sight rather he wouldn't promise than to promise and then break it, but I do know that if he does make up his mind to quit he'll stick to it."

The patient-faced woman went on with her sewing and her silent thoughts about John Henry, rocking to and fro in the cool, shady sitting-room, but she did not see or hear John Henry as he went down the path to the woods. In John Henry's hands were a box of cigarets and a box of matches. He was going to meet Tom Hatch in the woods for "a quiet smoke" and a long, lazy afternoon. "Mother, she don't like my smoking," thought John Henry rather sheepishly, "and so I won't let her see me. It don't hurt a fellow, not a mite, and I know it. Mother, she's old-fashioned, and of course, all the women are that way; they don't like smoking, don't believe in it, and can't bear to see a fellow enjoy himself. She ain't ordered me to quit, and I guess she won't—that ain't her way—but I'm going to quit myself after awhile—it'll be easy enough—easy as falling off a log. I just want to show Tom Hatch that I ain't tied to her apron-strings like he says I am, and that just because I was so sick the other day trying that first one I'm going to back out and let him crow over me!"

"Hello, old man!" said a lazy, drawling voice as John Henry came to a cozy, sheltered spot close to the river. Tom Hatch lay on his back, the very image of what the Italians call "sweet doing nothing" but which an energetic Yankee would call "downright laziness." Tom Hatch was lazy—he certainly was—but he was not really bad or vicious.

The two boys stretched themselves on the grassy slope by the river's edge and John Henry hospitably passed his box of cigarets. This was all as Tom had planned, for he himself seldom had any pocket money to speak of, being too lazy to work, while John Henry, who was of a more ambitious turn, did odd jobs here and there among the oil wells and picked up many a dollar in that way.

John Henry lived in the oil country bordering the banks of a small river which formed a tributary to the beautiful Allegheny several miles distant. All around his home rose towering derricks eighty feet high and the throb, throb of the gas in the boilers at the various pump-stations was always in the air. At times, too, for several weeks there would resound through the wooded valley the mighty pound, pound, pound of the steam driver at work drilling a new well.

John Henry and his mother had grown to love these sounds. Oil had been discovered on their small farm in sufficient quantities to insure the widow and her son a good living, and the royalties she received made it unnecessary to worry for the future. Friends had urged her to leave the little farm and come to town to live, but Mrs. Dickson refused. Better for her boy, she thought, to grow up among the hills and woods of the beautiful safe country than to run into all the temptations of town life. And too, she had grown so fond of her comfortable home and its pleasant surroundings that she did not wish to leave. Other families, drawn there by the oil interest, had made at least temporary homes for themselves near her, and being a neighborly body, Mrs. Dickson had speedily made some excellent friends among them.

Farther up the river the great red iron tanks were situated, dozens of them, each holding its two thousand barrels of oil as it was pumped there from the refinery, a few miles distant. The great round things made, to some, an ugly blot on the landscape, but to others the red color, dull or bright, according to newness, harmonized with the greens of the surrounding hills and really added to the effect. But at least from a commercial point of view the huge red tanks were highly acceptable and spoke of industry and wealth.

John Henry and Tom Hatch, indolently enjoying themselves that hot July afternoon in their shady retreat, did not notice that the sky had become overcast with black, threatening clouds and that one of those sudden thunder-showers with which western Pennsylvania is familiar was about to break. At the first peal of thunder the boys sat up and stared at each other. "Let's make a break for home," suggested John Henry, "it's going to rain."

"'Tain't going to rain here very hard," said Tom, lazily, "let's stay here—no danger of being struck by lightning—not half so much as if you was scootin' for home. Ain't you ever heard that if you're runnin' you'll draw the lightnin' quicker'n if you was sittin' still?"

"Yes, I've heard that," said John Henry, "and I've heard, too, of folks that was too lazy to come in out of the rain."

Tom took this retort with his usual good-nature, and leaned back comfortably on one elbow. "Let's stay. I don't believe there's going to be a bit of rain here—the shower's going up the river."

Tom, from long experience, was weatherwise, and John Henry respected his opinions. True enough, the black clouds were moving up the valley, and the sky looked out blue and smiling as they passed on. "Up there they're goin' to catch it," observed Tom, "no use of our scootin' home just on account of a little thunder."

Peal after peal sounded up the valley as the storm presently broke. Some trailing clouds let fall a shower of heavy drops where the boys sat, but the real force of the storm was up the river, several miles away. From where they sat they could see the big, red tanks, now dull and dark in the shadow of the storm.

"S'pose it strikes one of them tanks," suggested Tom. "Wouldn't it be a big old bonfire though! Remember that one two years ago? My! wasn't that a sight!"

The boys talked on between the peals of thunder and the frequent flashes of lightning as boys will who do not fear the elements. To them there was something delightfully wild and out of the common in thus being out in the darkening woods watching a storm. In both boys' minds too, there lurked a secret hope that if a tank must be struck by lightning that summer it might happen that very afternoon.

Presently, John Henry, looking up the river, rose to his feet and leaned forward gazing at the water. "What's that on the river?" he exclaimed, "what makes it look so queer?"

Tom rose too, and they both went close to the water's edge. Tom whistled with surprise.

"Jiminy!" he said, "that's oil! Must be a tank's busted and is leakin' into the river! Must be 'twas struck by lightnin' but didn't catch afire."

The river was rapidly assuming a gleaming, glistening appearance. The oil on its surface, hundreds of barrels, had covered the narrow stream from shore to shore.

"Lots of good oil goin' to waste," said Tom. "Let's go down to your house and get something to scoop it up in. Mebby we can save a barrel full and it'll come mighty handy. We'll dip it up and divide it, and jiminy! that'll put an end to my havin' to whittle shavin's to start a fire with!"

"Let's do it!" said John Henry; and the two boys dashed up the bank and away through the woods. Afterward they never could tell which of them dropped a lighted cigaret into the slimy stream or whether they both did as they sprang up the steep path in their hurry to get away. But they had gone only a few yards when through the willows along the river they caught sight of a dreadful glare.

"Tom, it's afire!" gasped John Henry.

"John Henry, we done it!" cried Tom, and for an instant the two boys stared at each other in terror. Then they ran to an open space and looked at the sweeping river of fire. From shore to shore the water's surface was literally on fire. On either side the green willows drooping over and into the river were seized and scorched by the fierce flames. The leaves of bushes along the water's edge sizzled and crackled in the sudden heat and the boys were forced back by the hot breath which beat in their white faces. It was a strange sight—an awful sight—a river of fire!

"No need to hunt up anything to scoop up that oil in!" said Tom, "I'll have to whittle shavin's a spell longer, I guess."

John Henry suddenly thought of his mother. In her small house back from the river she might know nothing of this wonderful sight. He must run and tell her! If it must burn she must see it!

"I'm off for home, Tom," he said as he began to run, "come along if you want to—I'm going to tell mother!"

"Apron-strings!" shouted Tom's voice after him as he ran along through the darkening woods now lit up by that lurid glare from the water. John Henry heard him but answered not. In his own heart he was saying, "If I'd done as she wanted me to and quit smoking this wouldn't have happened!" Pangs of remorse and terror filled the boy. What if some house close to the river should catch fire and burn! What if the old oil well, "No. 1," close to the water, should be set on fire and destroyed! What if the fire should creep up the banks and burn down that beautiful forest of pine and hemlock! What if—what if—John Henry shut his teeth hard as he thought of some child at play beside the lazy river being caught by those advancing flames and set on fire! His feet seemed like lead—why couldn't he run faster?

Far down the river he could see a small blue object and for an instant his heart stood still with terror. Little Dot Sackett, a neighbor's child, was playing, as she often did, in an old boat drawn up out of the shallow water. He could see her little blue sunbonnet bobbing about as she reached over the old boat's side after pebbles. It was a race for life—a race with fire! And Tom ran as he had never run before.

"Lemme 'lone!" screamed the child indignantly, as John Henry seized her and dragged her out of the old boat and up the bank. "You 'pilt my pebbles, you did, John Henry!" But John Henry did not care for spilt pebbles just then. He pulled and dragged the astonished child up into a place of safety, and as he caught her up into his arms and hugged her wildly, the creeping flames reached the old boat and set it blazing. Dot struggled out of John Henry's arms. "What makes the water burn, John Henry?" she inquired interestedly.

By this time the women of the little settlement were on the river bank watching the strange sight. Dot's mother hugged John Henry hysterically in the strength of her gratitude, and looked astonished when he said: "I done it, Mrs. Sackett, I done it all!"

"Course you did, John Henry," she said; "you saved my baby's life!"

"No, I set it afire!" said John; "Tom Hatch and I were up there smoking, and we must have done it."

He looked up quickly and caught his mother's eye. Never in his life had John Henry felt so thoroughly ashamed of himself as at that moment. Mrs. Dickson did not reproach him. It was no time for reproaches, nor were they needed. The look in her face was enough for John Henry.

The fire burned itself out after awhile. Little real damage was done. Fortunately the trees and bushes along the river bank were not dry enough to furnish food for the flames, and the fire did not spread into the woods. The old boat was destroyed, to be sure, and Dot loudly bewailed its loss. And the old derrick, "No. 1," dry and soaked with oil, was burned as John Henry had feared.

Of course the confession John Henry had made spread through the neighborhood, and the two boys came in for some pretty severe scolding from the men, who many of them might have done the same thing themselves, as they were addicted to smoking, but on the whole, public sentiment was not hard on them, and John Henry survived the disgrace better than he had hoped.

"It might 'a' been set afire by the lightning just as easy as not," said one old oil-driller, leniently. "I've seen it happen in other parts. This ain't the first time I've seen a river on fire."

This comforted John Henry a little, but whenever he caught sight of Dot Sackett's blue gingham sun-bonnet a thrill of terror and remorse ran through him. "If I'd stopped when Tom Hatch hollered 'apron strings,'" he said to himself, "I'd have been too late. I guess there's worse things than being tied to your mother's apron strings—smoking, for instance."

John Henry took a day or two to think it over. Then he said to his mother, who had wisely had very little to say to the repentant boy, "Mother, see here. You fix me up a pledge about smokin' and I'll put my name to it. And I'll make Tom Hatch put his to it, too. Never, never will I touch a cigaret again. I've had a lesson."

Mrs. Dickson wrote out a good strong pledge, and John Henry signed it in his best style of penmanship, with many flourishes. Before the ink was fairly dry he was off down the path to the woods to the shady retreat, where he had hopes of finding Tom. Sure enough, Tom was there, lazily watching his fish-pole, which he had set in a convenient spot.

"Had a bite yet?" inquired John Henry, genially.

"They won't bite worth a cent," said Tom, in his slow, drawling voice. "What you got there, John Henry?"

John Henry showed him, and Tom shook his tow-colored head dubiously. "I don't need to sign no pledge," he said, "I can quit if I want to without it."

After a minute he went on. "You're a regular brick, John Henry, an' I'm a good notion to sign it anyway. I heard about your grabbing Dot Sackett out of that old boat just in the nick o' time. Wish't I could 'a' done it." John Henry was evidently a hero in Tom's eyes, and all boys love a hero. "I've thought it over and thought it over and I'm about certain that your cigaret was out and mine was lighted when we threw 'em down there, but I s'pose we can't ever be dead sure."

"No, Tom," said John Henry solemnly, "I believe yours was out and it was mine that did it."

"Well," said Tom, "let's call it square an' say 'twas both of us that set it afire. How's that? And as long as I was as much to blame as you in riskin' Dot Sackett's life I'd ought to sign this pledge too. See?"

Tom laboriously wrote his name under John Henry's, trying to imitate John Henry's flourishes, and handed it back with a sigh of relief. "You have your mother keep that in her Bible," he said, "that's a good place to keep an important dockyment like this, an' mebby I'll come over sometimes an' take a look at it."

Tom straightened his lazy figure. A new look of pride and manliness showed itself in his good-natured face.

"Yes, sir," he said, "I've never signed a pledge before in my life, but I've signed that one. I've signed it an' I'm goin' to keep it. I'll keep it till the end of the chapter, John Henry, an' don't you forget it."

The boys shook hands in an awkward fashion, and John Henry sat down beside Tom on the shady bank to help him watch the fish-pole.

The Relation of the Home to the Saloon.

BY MARY H. HULL.

IN all my four years' work as friendly visitor for the Armour Mission, visiting at least five hundred families, averaging three thousand visits yearly, my constant object lesson for study was the relation of the home and the saloon; their bitter enmity, also their similarity serving something like the same end; their real relation being a deeper problem than may be disposed of by mere bitter words or by laws or instruction.

For many years before my experience I had no patience at all with the idea that the saloon was a necessity, and when first entering into the struggle with these wives and mothers and little children, my bitter enmity to the saloon knew no bounds. Into the police stations I went to save this woman and that; one from her drunken husband who with razor in hand had driven her and their three beautiful boys from home. Then for another woman whose brutish, besotten husband had abused her night and day until her mind was too weak to take decent care of their two little girls. And then again for another who was like a Juno in her high, clean-hearted strength towering equal to the protection of her three fine children. Yes, into the courts we went. The law sounded well and the judges spoke well, but it all proved to be a mere mockery to have these husbands simply "bound over to keep the peace." It would require more details of police than any city could afford to "keep the peace" in the dead hours of night inside the house. Details of angels alone could be equal to the task. The miseries that are inside the doors of fully two-thirds of the families I visited—and it is not a "slum" district—can not be imagined, much less described. The agony suffered by living beings inside these hundreds of homes and the crimes there committed against decency and love and little children are indeed unspeakable.

"We wretches can not tell our wrong Without offence to decent happy folk."

After awhile I began to see no light in this direction and more than ever agreed with St. Paul that "the law can make nothing perfect." Law is necessary as a "schoolmaster," it teaches what might and must and will be, but it can not do anything, can not fulfill itself. It is a negative and not a positive construction—is but the scaffolding to the building going on inside. Hence, I must look for light from within all these latter day conditions to find some far-away hope. It seems to me we are on the wrong track so long as we misunderstand social forces, their interdependencies, their relationship and their real entrenchments. To ever "close the saloons" is an impossibility during the present commercial estimates of men's souls and bodies, for the whole commercial system is calculated only for the enslavement of men, and what hope is there while money rules?

"Change industrial conditions;" "Give men work;" "Idleness is what breeds so much sorrow;" "Give men and women something to eat and there will be less drinking." Yes, all this is true, but "economic relations are a part, not the whole of life." "While the elimination of wealth from society would be fatal," the elimination of some other things are even now worse than fatal. Wealth and law are both alike important —but both are equally impotent. And while economists may, and must, work on getting these foundations straight, right, righteous, there yet remains the greatest work, which is to build within and upon these structures.

A great deal might be said of the peculiar condition of our American "poor," the strange fact being that they are not poor only in opportunity. Their social wants developed through free schools, and almost free reading matter, are left to starve in the presence of a feast. The stinted supply of opportunity for "complete living" is what breeds such havoc and maketh the heart sick. Ignorance is bliss in comparison, and any age or country that blunders on under such uneven conditions for its people will bring more and more exquisite suffering. The Chinese or Mexicans are a thousand times happier, ignorant as they are, than are our American poor, especially our women and young people, who burn with desire to be equal to the best they know ought to be. Their desire for the best home life is the most encouraging light within all this confusion. But be this as it may, and the working day four or fourteen hours long, the problem is the satisfaction of the higher social wants and what to do with the remaining idle hours. We have wants and desires largely developed, thanks to many things gone before us, but the supplying of these wants is the belated science of this day.

The first thing one is surprised to find among our "poor" are the really good buildings (outwardly so) sheltering the same, materiality having outstripped the spirituality at once. Within, however, is where the wants really ache most, for it is life, associated life as demoniacally counterfeited in the "cup," that these people are hungry for. Hospitality cultivated in the home as it is in the saloon is indeed a study most important, is an interpretation of one of the mighty "motor forces" we have in human nature.

We blunder on without any study of or provision for these realities, and basely imitate with fashionable parade some social service or close up our doors and eat our morsel all alone and allow the club houses and the saloons to do the whole sociable business. The poor are as guilty as the rich, and is it not strange that housekeepers as a general thing know so little about real sociability or the social instinct?

Sociologists pretty generally agree something stirs us up to want in six different essential ways: 1, health (physical life); 2, wealth (physical necessities); 3, sociability (otherhood, love); 4, knowledge (thinking, intelligence); 5, beauty (esthetics, taste); 6, righteousness (conscience). Now does it not seem that with this mixture in us sociability would come to the top instead of going to the bottom as it does? Have we not been more religious, intellectual, beautiful, wealthy and healthy than we have been brotherly or sociable? This is the want that aches most to-day away within and is the least provided for, and yet it is the greatest "motor force."

Now here is the grandest chance for woman's ingenuity in the world and is it not possible for us to take some hints from the club houses and saloons and the worse places and make of our homes something more than a hiding place? May we not go at it sociologically, not in the twaddle talk of "woman in her sphere," etc., but knowing there is a combat on hand? There is need of study and invention in this belated science of hospitality as the saloons understand it. The home and the saloon are each a mighty social force, because they each stand for social life where the mighty "phenomena of contact" means most. The home and the saloon (and especially for the poor man) are in deadly combat. One or the other, under all the distressing circumstances, must yield. Women and children are obliged to go out (breaking up home life) to earn the living, while the miserable, unmanned man can do little else than tramp off "to hunt work" and end up as a tramp and a drunkard. The whole economic world most certainly is more or less involved, but their involvement is nothing to be compared with that which obtains between the mother thing called home and this refractory offspring of hers, the liquor traffic.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

HEARTS and voices in Willard Hall have reached a note unknown before. On Thursday, February 17, the National officers, editors of THE UNION SIGNAL, and many others from the offices on the eleventh floor of the Temple, sat upon the rostrum. The auditorium was crowded until the crush reached the street entrance.

The telegraph wires had been flashing messages across land and ocean, telling an anxious world of the conflict of our leader with the last enemy, and every heart was full of fear. All feared the silver cord was loosening and tears were in the voices of those who conveyed the language of the telegrams to the anxious throng.

Just a few short weeks ago, America's uncrowned queen stood upon this platform and thrilled every heart with her wonderful words. On this eventful day every breath seemed a prayer. Our selfish hearts made us plead with our Father to spare her yet a little longer to earth (nevertheless, Thy will be done), believing that He had anointed her for glorious service to humanity.

Friday, February 18, Willard Hall was again thronged. Her face was upon the rostrum, but it was held in gilded frame and no word came from those silent lips. The first part of the service was a praise service. Through our tears we thanked the Father, through our Lord Jesus Christ, that He had given us such a leader, that He had now taken her to Paradise, and His own hand had placed the crown upon her brow. No earthly power could build or weave such crown for our sainted Chieftain. These have been most sacred days in Willard Hall, and eternity will reveal their meaning to the hundreds crowded into this room always so dear to her.

ABBIE FRANCES B. CHURCH.

Tributes to Miss Willard.

(Received by the Union Signal.)

REV. HERRICK JOHNSON, D. D., McCormick Seminary, Chicago.

My heart must speak to you out of this great sorrow. The morning papers announce Miss Willard's death. Overwhelmed at first with the sense of personal loss, my thought straightway turned to the white-ribboned host to whom this sorrow must be as no other sorrow, smiting them with an appalling severity, and threatening almost to undo them.

Courage, now, dear smitten hearts, that were so grandly and loyally true to this God-called and heaven-born leader. Every one of the millions that in all these years have looked on the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and through their tears and in their prayers have thanked God for it, every lover of home and purity and motherhood, turns to you now in the deepest sympathy, and would stay and strengthen and comfort you. Benedictions are invoked on you, all over Christendom. This morning's prayers for you belt the world. Believe, though you cannot see, that even this blow is "for God and home and native land."

I can scarcely trust myself to speak of Miss Willard. As a queen of hearts, as an executive force, as a brooding tenderness, as a conscience incarnate, as an apostle of gentleness, as an organizer of victory, she was the first woman of the world.

That she should be taken means two things: that God has wider work for her somewhere, and that He can do without her here. After the manner of our mortal speech, she is dead. But the cause she lived for, and was willing to die for, is not dead. Goodness is not dead—nor God.

REV. H. A. SCOMP, D. D., LL.D., Vice Chancellor American Temperance University, Harriman, Tenn.

This morning the sad news was flashed over the wires that our dear Miss Willard had passed over the river to rest under the shade of the trees. How this message thrills our heartstrings! We are astounded at its import. How can we think of the cause of reform without Frances E. Willard as its embodiment? I doubt if there is to-day another prominent personage before the English-speaking world who stands in the relation of personal friendship to so many people. Probably no other has so many real friends. The mourning for her will not be confined to funeral pageantry nor empty memorial services, but it will be rather the heart sorrow of personal bereavement. How many to-day have felt that the world is poorer than it was yesterday, that it has lost a guardian spirit, who was yesterday planning, praying, toiling for the uplift of human kind. One more martyr has fallen, the most elect of all our grand women. When William of Orange fell, "the little children cried in the streets," the noblest, the most sincere tribute to the Prince's real worth. But how many more children will weep for her who lived not for one little state alone but for "God and Home and Every Land"!

But for twenty odd years what a life of toil, of anxiety, of nerve tension was hers! How many untoward things she had to encounter! How much of senseless opposition, of malicious slander! That this slander should come from the saloon and its minions, from politicians and parties who felt their plans thwarted by the reformer's work, was to have been expected. But that professed Christians and some Christian ministers should have helped to stone truth's champion or have kept the clothes of those who did the stoning, must always be one of the proofs positive that human nature is depraved.

How much I delighted in Miss Willard's personal friendship! For a long time I was indebted to her letters for strength and help, but for several years latterly I have not written a line to her through fear of taxing still further the nerves which so much needed rest. The last time I met her was at the Cincinnati Prohibition convention in 1892. I remember well how she, with several other ladies, sat till late at night outside the door of the room where our platform committee was struggling with the silver question. She was anxious about the suffrage plank. How earnestly she talked to me that night when once I passed out of the room, about the possible fate of her darling measure! I assured her that there was not the slightest danger of losing the suffrage plank in that committee, that they regarded the suffrage question as settled at Indianapolis four years before.

When that final vote had been taken and we had been "snowed under," I went to the platform, and sitting down by Miss Willard, I expressed to her my deep regret that convictions of duty to those who had sent me to the convention, as well as a careful study of the cause in the South, had compelled me to speak and vote against a measure on which her heart was so much set. At once she grasped my hand saying, "Professor, you did just what you ought to have done. I know the sentiments of the South, and you correctly represented it."

It may have been an easy matter for Miss Willard, even in the tension of that exciting afternoon, to utter a sentiment so noble, so just; yet frankly, among all the women and men of my acquaintance, I know not another who would have had such command over all personal feelings and prejudices. It will be long ere we shall look upon her like again. One such spirit may be born in a century; yet how many of the centuries are blank of such names!

May God bless the organization to which Frances Willard devoted her noble life. If Queen Mary's heart was inscribed with the single word "Calais," surely on that of our departed leader would be found stereotyped those talismanic letters, "W. C. T. U."

ALICE STONE BLACKWELL, National Suffrage Convention, Washington, D. C.

We are all under the shadow of grief for Miss Willard's death. It is not only the loss of a beloved friend, but the taking out of the world one of the great forces that make for righteousness. But it would be a poor tribute to her to slacken work in any of the lines she believed in; so I send on to you a paragraph that I had written out for THE UNION SIGNAL before the sorrowful news came.

REV. CARL F. ELTZHOLTZ, D. D., Milwaukee, Wis.

United States and the civilized world is in mourning to-day. Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the W. C. T. U., is dead. I wish to drop a flower of appreciation on the bier of this noble woman. The world had at the present time no woman that excelled her in far-reaching, substantial, philanthropic and Christian influence. She has done more good for humanity than any now living crowned queen. How shall her place be filled? We do not know. But this we know, that while the Lord removes the workers He carries on His work. The name of Frances Willard will be remembered as long as the world stands. And when the great King shall distribute His reward to those who are saved through grace, Frances Willard will surely be among those that shall receive an exceeding great reward. Blessed be her memory!

S. W. HANCOX, clerk of Session.

The Campbell Park Presbyterian church, Chicago, at its morning service, held February 20, by a rising vote authorized the sending to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union this expression of its love and esteem for your departed president, its deep sense of loss in her death, and its hope for the continued and permanent success of the work so ably planned and executed under her leadership.

REV. J. W. WEDDELL, pastor Calvary Baptist Church, Davenport, Iowa.

God be praised for Frances Willard and the gift of her life. She has done more to rightly stimulate true womanhood in the land than any other influence that I can think of, outside the inspired Word. On our American dollar is the face of a young woman, at one time a member of the church and congregation which I served for a season in the Quaker City. The authorities at the Philadelphia mint selected her profile for its strong American cast and contour, and the "In God we trust," of the reverse side, is well placed. It is our Christian Americanism, indeed, that gives us such characters, but no woman has done more of recent years to deepen and develop the highest type of womanhood, and indeed of humanity in general, than Frances Willard. We mourn her lost, but her face is writ deep on heart and life, and her name will not perish.

INTERNATIONAL BOARD OF WOMEN'S AND YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS.

Our International Board of Women's and Young Women's Christian Associations desires to express to your body our sympathy in the loss of your beloved leader, whose death means so much to you, to the cause of women, and to the cause of humanity at large.

It has been given to few organizations to have such a leader, or to have one whose personality and directing power abode so long with the society, thus enabling it to build up with solidarity and symmetry the ideals on which it was originally projected.

Miss Willard was not only a natural commander, born with a genius for organization, but in all the discouraging times of pioneer work and the still more trying times of small ambitions among those who came to share the fruits of her labors, she was ever the brave, patient, loving, Christian woman.

Our Board realizes your loss, and we pray for direction for you in this time of great sorrow and responsibility.

From Chicago Pulpits.

REV. J. Q. A. HENRY, pastor La Salle Avenue Baptist Church, Chicago.

I cannot leave for the Pacific coast without first reassuring the white-ribbon comrades in the temperance crusade of my sympathy with them in the loss of their queenly leader, Miss Willard. My heart bleeds for them and my earnest prayer is for their guidance in the future. I feel sure the Temple will be saved as a concrete monument to the memory of the greatest temperance leader in all history.

I believe she will slay more in her death than in all her life. From her enthronement with Christ she will wield the sceptre of larger life and diviner love over all comrades, till universal victory over the saloon shall have become a rich and radiant reality. I cannot do much, but what I can do I will do to perpetuate her heroic service in the interests of purity, sobriety, equality and faith.

May the wisdom that cometh down from above be graciously granted to all the comrades in this trying but triumphant hour.

DR. H. W. THOMAS, People's Church.

One beautiful life, just gone from our shores, gave all her years, gave all her great power, gave herself, gave her life, to make man and his world divine. Frances Willard worked for home, for temperance, for purity; she loved all, lived for all; worked with the powers eternal, and her work will go on; her mantle will fall upon the many who have worked by her side and sorrow that she can be with them no more. The gates have opened wide to welcome this tired, toiling soul to the rest, the peace, the joy of heaven.

REV. J. P. BRUSHINGHAM, First Methodist Church.

We are called upon to say a reluctant long farewell to a woman of the broadest culture, sweetest temper and finest of soul fibre. Methodism may well be proud of her membership from early girlhood, and that she was a delegate to our general conference. We can only regret that she was not received in that body with open-armed hospitality, as well as some of the dull mediocrity, which was welcomed because it chanced to be of the opposite sex. Miss Willard's patriotism was pure as the sunlight. It is appropriate that she should lie in state at the time of the anniversary of Washington's birth. No heroism of the soldier upon the battlefield was more dauntless. Her "rare and radiant" soul lives on in deathless immortality. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors and their works do follow them." "Being dead she yet speaks" through that great army of white-ribboners of which she was easily chief. Let the army wage the good warfare as though she were still in bodily presence leading them forward, because her mighty spirit and her unconquerable love will still be upon earth.

REV. FRANK C. BRUNER, Chaplain-in-Chief of the G. A. R.:

Alas, the alabaster box of life has been broken! The fragrant ointment of a holy life has wasted! Frances E. Willard, of American queenhood, is no more. What a brave heart she was; never letting up in the great battle for the redemption of the American home from the awful foe of intemperance. Her life was a series of oppositions. With never a murmur she met resistance in politics when she sought recognition for her sacred principle at the door of her favorite party. It came again with great force when the church of her choice debarred her from its law-making body, after having been legitimately elected a delegate, though unseated. With the same sweet spirit she had aforetime when unrecognized, the noble woman kept right on. The nation has never had her equal. She was the mother-life of the W. C. T. U. The organization ever looked to her. They will miss her much. She to them is more than a queen. She is a comrade. How she led them with bleeding feet over the rocks. How tired in the journey! The dear heart wants rest. She now smiles good-by and is at home with God. Within a year the $300,000 on the Woman's Temple will be liquidated for the perpetual monument to Frances E. Willard.

BISHOP SAMUEL FALLOWS, St. Paul's Reformed Episcopal Church.

Miss Willard was one of the most remarkable women I have ever known. She possessed a generous nature, and she had the sublime beauty and grace of forgiveness. I have heard many women—women who have achieved greatness—but never have I heard one who was so finished and eloquent as the dead leader of the great temperance movement among women. She was entitled to the palm of superiority. Her utterances were equal to those of the American Demosthenes, Wendell Phillips. There was but one Miss Willard. She will be missed from the ranks in which she did such great and noble work. She inspired the motto of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—"For God and Home and Native Land"—but she worked for God and home and every land. Miss Willard was a leader of women. She is worthy to rank with Jefferson, for she formulated a declaration of independence for her sex.

REV. H. FRANCIS PERRY, Englewood Baptist Church.

She loved truth wherever it was found, and said: "The classic ethics of Marcus Aurelius are dear to me, and I have carried in my traveling outfit not only Thomas á Kempis and Havergal, but Epictetus and Plato. I am an eclectic in religious reading, friendship and inspiration, but, like the bee that gathers from many fragrant gardens, that flies home with his varied gains to the same friendly and familiar hive, so I fly home to the sweetness and sanctity of the old faith that has been my shelter and solace for so long."

REV. FRANK DEWITT TALMAGE, Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church.

While all the Christian world is mourning over the death of Frances E. Willard, can we not realize as never before what one Christian woman can do in the heart of a great city? Frances E. Willard is one of the gentlest, sweetest, purest, truest names in all the present century.

Frances E. Willard's name proves that it is possible for a woman to do a greater work than any man. And that a woman, if God details her to that task, may keep her maiden name and yet have a heart large enough to call all men and women her brothers and sisters, and all the sons and daughters of drunken parents her own little children, whom she longs to save just as much as though they were her own flesh and blood.

O ye mothers that have rocked us in our cradles! O ye wives who have stood by us in our trials! O ye sisters with whom we have played in childhood, and ye daughters who will bury us when we are dead! Are ye not better and truer, and purer and nobler because this country girl, who once ran barefooted over the fields and drove up the cattle from the meadow land, as a wild rose was plucked and transplanted to bloom with even sweeter fragrance amid the slime and the mud of the sin and of the wretchedness in this great, throbbing town? Is not Chicago better because Frances E. Willard lived here, and was not Frances E. Willard sweeter and gentler because she was ready to make that sacrifice? Hush! Put her gently down among the flowers. Let her rest.

REV. R. C. RANSOM, Bethel A. M. E. Church.

Within the past week a beautiful character has passed from us to the distant shore; a useful and brilliant career has ended, and one of the noblest and best productions of American womanhood has passed away. All lovers of temperance, goodness, purity, without regard to race or creed, sincerely mourn the death of Frances Willard. She will be best remembered for her great services in behalf of the cause of temperance in connection with the W. C. T. U., of which she was the head. But, like all great lives, the activities which engaged her did not flow in a single channel, nor were they devoted to one idea. Frances Willard rose above the lines of narrow prejudice, of race or creed, when the poor needed succor, the helpless defense and the slaves of appetite protection. She saw that strong drink was the enemy of womanhood, of childhood and of home. She gave her life to rescue them from its dread effects.

Lovers of temperance and victims of intemperance have no greater cause to cherish the memory of Miss Frances Willard than have the colored people of America. She was their friend. Through narrowness, ignorance, prejudice and malicious misrepresentation, we fear that, especially in recent years, the white women of America have not regarded the colored race, and especially its manhood, with much favor. But this queen among women has fought their battles, championed their cause and numbered many of them among her personal friends.

Life will be sweeter, the home will be purer and the world will be better because Frances Willard has lived. If the suggestion that the Woman's Temple is to be made her monument takes definite shape, I believe that it will meet a hearty response from the colored people of Chicago and the Nation.

REV. B. A. GREENE, First Baptist Church, Evanston.

Who of us then present will forget the look of her wan face when she last addressed her friends and neighbors here in Evanston. It was a shock to me to see the change that had begun. That waiting hush, those tears which memory, and now I think presentiment, helped bring, moved all of us to tenderness, which some of us could not hide. But brave to the last, she went forth, taking up the Herculean task of raising the indebtedness of the Woman's Temple, a structure which has been both the pride of her heart and its crushing sorrow. She wished it to be a monument, not covering the memories of a dead past, but housing the present activities of an awakened womanhood bound to bring in a future victory.

REV. W. H. CARWARDINE, Adams street Methodist Episcopal Church.

The cause of organized labor in its battle against corporate greed and mammon worship had in Miss Willard a true champion. During the dark days of the strike of 1894 this good woman sent me several letters expressive of her sympathy for the struggling men and their families. Every trade and labor organization and reform club in the country ought now to give expression of its gratitude and love for the kind words of this noble woman, who had the courage to express her conviction of the righteousness of the cause of struggling labor in a time when it meant something to speak.

REV. JENKIN LLOYD JONES, All Soul's Church.

To-day America mourns her great prophetess of renunciation. Frances Willard has been a feminine incarnation of the voice ever old and ever new, and she has spoken again in many ways the old, old gospel for which there is no substitute. I am consoled, in this hour of death, with the great thought of the "Bhagarad-Gita," that such power as Frances Willard's can not die, that the work she has started can not be defeated, and that the voice of this modern Krishna will be continued until the story of that Ohio Crusade, broadened into the story of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, will be further broadened into the Woman's and Man's Christian Temperance Union, and still widened into a temperance union, not "Christian," but human; not in the name of Christ alone, but in the name of the redeemed and redeeming hosts of the whole world.

REV. M. W. HAYNES, Belden Avenue Baptist Church.

It is a significant fact that, while this temperance leader lay silent in death in a distant city, in our loved Chicago there was a feast where the principles of temperance were ridiculed and the petitions of temperance women to our college authorities were laughed to scorn, and these sentiments were "washed down with wine." These sons of Yale seemed to be in high glee because the bibulous habits of this university were likely to receive no check or even reproof from either the faculty or alumni of that ancient institution. It may be argued that the principles they toast and "wash down with wine" are triumphant, while the principles for which Frances Willard lived and died will die with the matchless leader. Let us not draw conclusions too soon. Truth can never die. Intelligent men will never believe that the great principles of temperance will die. That means that science and religion must both be trampled under the feet of lust and brutality. It means that virtue and sobriety must be laid in one common grave. God will raise up some one to take this woman's place. Others shall seize the standard her nerveless hands let fall and rally hosts to victory.

REV. EDWARD MCLEOD, Presbyterian Church.

Miss Willard, I think, was more thoroughly identified with the cause of temperance than any human being who has ever lived. She was greater than John B. Gough, greater than Neal Dow, greater than any of the moderns who have buckled on sword and, all shieldless against the world, have gone forth to battle with the arch temptation. She was the most vigorous crusader of history and, like all really great reformers, was a century ahead of her times. She has been known as "the uncrowned queen of America" for many years, but the time for her true coronation is at hand. There are three crowns spoken of in Holy Writ, the crown of life, the crown of righteousness, and the crown of glory. This last is the crown of my text, the crown which Miss Willard will receive. Illinois is proud to have been her home—proud to have furnished to the world a second great emancipator of enslaved humanity. Let the magnificent Woman's Temple of Chicago, for which Miss Willard sacrificed her life, be immediately freed from debt, as an expression of undying love to her whose name stands for all that is good in our social organism.

Two Fires.

BY E. D. C.

I SAW a fire, a splendid sight!
Devouring beam and rafter;
The flame leaped up from left and right,
And seemed to shout with laughter.

Brave men were there who worked and fought
The fire with all their might,
Their labors seemed to count but naught,
Against the flames that night.

The fishes in the stream near by,
Were blinded by the glare,
They seemed to see no danger nigh,
In water or in air.

Another fire is near at hand,
Devouring human brains,
Destroying homes in every land,
Till nothing good remains.

This fire is caused by Alcohol,
The greatest king on earth,
And all who serve him soon must fall
Deprived of all their worth.

The boys are captured by this king,
Like fishes in the stream;
They can not see the serpent's sting
Behind the pleasant dream.

Before he causes further pain
Let us arise and shout:
King Alcohol shall cease to reign
If we can drive him out.

The Geese and the Cherry Stones.

BY CLARENCE A. JENKS.

IT happened a great many years ago, down in the South. Sarah Ann Lee was eleven years old. She had set a hen upon eight of the largest, whitest goose eggs that you ever saw, and now she had eight of the fattest, noisiest geese that ever waddled abroad in the poultry yard.

Sarah Ann intended to sell the geese at the market in the city. She could not have told you how many times she had spent, in her mind, the money she hoped to get for them, it was so very many times. She thought about it all day long, and she dreamed at night that dollars, dressed in goose feathers, danced around her bed.

It seemed as if she could hardly wait, for it was now only two days before old Uncle Jerry would take the geese to the city and bring back her precious dollars.

Sarah Ann wandered from the kitchen to the front hall, and then back again. Two days seemed a dreadfully long time to wait. After awhile she thought that she would find Uncle Jerry and talk to him about the geese. She found him busy at work down in the cellar. Presently he came up and emptied a pail of cherry stones in the back yard. They were the stones which had been in a barrel of cherry brandy, "to improve the flavor," Uncle Jerry said.

The geese, wandering about in search of some dainty morsel, soon found the cherry stones. They screamed and craned their necks in delight, and then they began to swallow the stones as fast as they could.

Half an hour later Uncle Jerry came into the kitchen and told Sarah Ann that the geese were acting "powerful strange," and sure enough. How queer they looked! And how funny they acted! They bumped against each other in a dazed way, and every little while one would tumble over on its back, and giving a few feeble kicks, would lie as if dead.

Sarah Ann began to cry as if her heart would break. She saw her precious dollars slipping away from her. What should she do? But as the last goose gave a final shake of its webbed foot, her dear Aunt Dinah came to the rescue. Sarah Ann should help pick the geese, and then, just think of the splendid bed the feathers would make.

They began to work. How their fingers flew! In an hour all the geese were shorn of their downy feathers, and Uncle Jerry had carried them down to the ravine, on the other side of the cotton field.

The next morning, while the family were at breakfast, the door suddenly opened and in shambled Uncle Jerry. "Oh, Lor'! Miss Sarah Ann, jist you come to de door. De ghosts of dem geese am in de poultry yard." Sarah Ann ran to the door, and sure enough there stood eight miserable and forlorn looking geese, huddled together in the warmest corner of the yard. She could hardly believe that it was true, and rubbed her eyes to make sure that she was not dreaming. She looked again, and this time she was certain that they were her poor picked geese. Running back into the house she begged pieces of old flannel from Aunt Dinah, and then, with the help of Uncle Jerry, Sarah Ann covered each shivering goose. When all had been bundled up Uncle Jerry started for market with the geese, and that afternoon he brought back to Sarah Ann six silver dollars. With the beginning of a feather bed in the attic and six jingling dollars in her knit purse, she was now the happiest little girl on the plantation.

Sarah Ann wondered and wondered how in the world the geese ever came to life again, when she thought she had seen them die with her own eyes. But that night when she asked her father he only laughed and said, "I guess there was too much brandy left on the cherry stones, and the geese must have been dead drunk."

Poor, simple geese, they knew no better and we can not blame them. But we can blame man, with all his wisdom and learning, when he persists in drinking that which makes him so much lower than the foolish geese.

Our Flag.

WHEN Mrs. Samuel L. Beiler, of Washington, D. C., was at Unalaska, Alaska, last year, where the Woman's Home Missionary Society has a home for girls, this incident occurred, as told by the Central Christian Advocate:

"One of the children in the home died; whereupon a Russian priest, representing the Greek church, which was in full control when the region was a part of the Empire of Russia, sent word that he intended to bury the child. Mrs. Beiler replied that arrangements had been made for the burial and that his services would not be needed. He sent word again, this time in a most imperative mood, declaring that he was going to carry out his plan in the matter. Mrs. Beiler sent word to him to come and talk it over; he did so, the conversation taking place by means of an interpreter. Still he persisted in his demands, and was about to take possession of the body by force, when Mrs. Beiler went into an adjoining room and returned, holding the stars and stripes over her head, and saying to the interpreter: 'Tell the priest that I am an American woman; that this is American soil; that I am under the protection of this flag, and that if he dares to interfere with our rights in this case, or give us any further disturbance, it will be at his peril!' That ended the controversy."

A Young Inventor.

THE power loom was the invention of a farmer's boy, who had never seen or heard of such a thing. He fashioned one with his penknife, and when he got it all done he showed it with great enthusiasm to his father, who at once kicked it all to pieces, saying he would have no boy about him who would spend his time on such foolish things. The boy was sent to a blacksmith to learn a trade, and his master took a lively interest in him. He made a loom of what was left of the one his father had broken up and showed it to his master. The blacksmith saw he had no common boy as an apprentice and that the invention was a valuable one. He had a loom constructed under the supervision of the boy. It worked to their perfect satisfaction, and the blacksmith furnished the means to manufacture the loom, and the boy received half the profits.

In about a year the blacksmith wrote to the boy's father that he should visit him and bring with him a wealthy gentleman who was the inventor of the celebrated power loom.

You may be able to judge of the astonishment at the old home when his son was presented to him as the inventor, who told him that the loom was the same as the model that he had kicked to pieces the previous year.

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Caro L. McCarty, of Filson, Ill., wants to know how many have signed the gum pledge, and I would like to know, too. Gum chewing may seem to be a small vice, in fact, too small to be called a vice, but a good bishop is now inaugurating a crusade against it among the "grown ups" and my boys and girls can get at the very root of the evil by not allowing the habit to become fixed.

I am sorry to say our girls are the chief offenders in this respect and when I see a sweet, dainty little miss chewing gum I always think of the fairy story about the snakes and toads that dropped from the lips of the little girl who used bad words. How much do you think the influence of our W. C. T. U. lecturers would count for if they went about with a cud of gum in their mouths? The habit itself may seem insignificant but its effect counts for a good deal. Caro wants to correspond with some of the cousins; so does Pauline Shirley, of Melissa, Texas, and Phillips Chynoweth, of Madison, Wis. Phillips votes for the pansy.

Lovingly yours,
AUNT MARY.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—Mother takes THE UNION SIGNAL and has taken it as long as I can remember. I am twelve years old. I started to school when I was eight years old but I stayed out one year to help mother. There are nine children in our family and mother and father makes eleven. There are "seven sisters" of us; two younger and six older than me. We have a little dog. My brother went hunting and Cute went with him. Howard shot and crippled a rabbit. Cute (he is about a foot high) ran after the rabbit and got him by the leg. He held on tight for a little while but pretty soon the rabbit gave one awful squall and Cute let go, put his tail between his legs and ran back.

Tescott, Kan. CHARLOTTE MORTON.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little temperance girl ten years old. My mamma always wears the white ribbon. I hope I will be as good as she when I grow up. I sing temperance songs with mamma and I love to read the letters. I had such a nice time in the country last summer, the days were not half long enough for all the fun I had. One of the boys who lives near where I stayed, caught a young crow just hatched and tamed it. He was very mischievous and came over to our house; we gave him cookies and he seemed to like them. He would fly over and look in our windows and scared us; he was so very tame he was a bother.

Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all.—Prov. 31:29.

Frances E. Willard.

NO one loved home better than Frances Willard. But few in her rank had less of it. The author of "Home, Sweet Home" never had a home. With her, as with him, it was all through life and always "the song of the dying swan."

Next to her mother and her nest at Evanston Frances Willard had her home on earth in the hearts of white-ribboners. They were to her always, in her own language, "our folks," and her home festivals were mostly where they gathered together. So it came about that all of our meetings, including our great conventions when women came together from the ends of the earth, have always been homelike; and the sweetest and most touching things ever said by Miss Willard were her quaint and pathetic utterances at such meetings about home and mother and father and little ones. They were the charm of our gatherings. She threw in so many appreciative sayings about people and things on the inspiration of the moment, that they came to be called Miss Willard's embroidery. Happy are we if we too, embroider life's pathway with sweet and lovely flowers, rather than wound the weary feet with thorns and nettles.

Frances Willard's life work was pre-eminently for the home, and it was consistent throughout. The loving care she gave her mother, and the words of almost excruciating tenderness the daughter penned of the last days of St. Courageous, as Madam Willard came to be called, have molded many a life for good.

Women have been accused of being severe and unforgiving and critical toward each other, but the life of our gentle Frances forever denies the charge for one at least, and marks a new era in the centuries, when it is written, "Women demand a white life for two, and extend an equally helping hand to both—equal pity and equal love to fallen women and fallen men."

One of the great elements of Frances Willard's success was her power over women. It was only necessary for gay young girls or society women to come within the pervasive atmosphere of love which enveloped her like the nimbus of the ancient saints, from head to foot, to become her devotees, for the time being at least, and to desire nothing more than to serve her and her cause—for the two were inseparable. Their devotion was given in response to the appreciation she gave of the good in them, for she was a seer who discerned the possibilities in others' lives, and she breathed upon latent good, that it might become instinct with life. She was all this to her white-ribbon constituency and far more.

Her head was set upon her shoulders like a rose upon its stem, and it turned or lifted or drooped with the sentiment that scintillated through her great brain like a flower moved by the gentle wind. In our conventions, when at the last moment of the last evening session, the sisterhood forms, as is their custom, a chain of clasped hands from the vast platform down into the auditorium and around the great audience of five or six thousand people and sing our parting song, "God be with you till we meet again," a deaf-mute might follow the sentiment and the rhythm of the song simply by the central figure of Frances leading them by the bend of her head and the swaying of her form—but she was far more than graceful.

Her æsthetic taste was cultivated in many directions, by her college education, by books, travel, museums of art, and contact with cultivated people in many lands. These opportunities given to a naturally bright, sensitive, and strongly intellectual nature produced an elegant woman who could not do an ungenteel act—but she was far more than elegant.

She might have been, to the world at least, simply an educated woman, classical and cold, had it not been for the great cause which developed her emotional nature, and brought her into close touch with all humanity and made her great-hearted. But informed in mind and heart and then touched with a live coal from off the altar with love for humanity, she could adapt herself to the lowliest and the most ignorant. Through all her work love pulsated, and by her kindly spirit women were incited to their best and brought nearer to the full stature of womanhood. She was a great educator of her followers.

The destruction of the base and ignoble possessed her. The building anew and the polishing and perfecting consumed her. Her desire for progress toward the good was insatiable. She was infinitely painstaking and conscientious, and never satisfied with present attainments. One height reached and she caught glimpses of peaks beyond, and thus she inspired all her followers.

Her resources were practically limitless. She rarely failed to settle differences amicably. She was never partisan. Her mental poise seemed perfect and that of her heart as well. She never forgot the supreme aim of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in the do-everything policy as some have thought, but made all things contribute to the one great object, the final overthrow of the liquor curse. She had one single purpose with many ideas, and because of this she became a leader in the temperance revolution which Lincoln prophesied in 1842 would follow that against slavery. She was a great general and gave her life as really to the revolution which she led as Lincoln gave his to the cause of the lowliest and most despised, though in a different way, and because of this she will live in the hearts of the people and her cause "will go marching on."

To the great organization which belts the globe with its symbolic bands of white, which owes its power and prestige so largely to her tireless brain and consecrated heart, her death means that her cause is immortal.

Editorial Tributes Paid to Miss Willard by Chicago and Illinois Papers.

Death of Miss Willard.

THE death of Miss Frances E. Willard closes a life so fruitful in lofty endeavor, so admirable in its consecration to chosen duty, so strong in its aspirations toward high and noble ideals, that the whole world may well afford to turn aside from its business and its strife and lay the laurels of love upon her bier.

Miss Willard was a great leader. In her gentle personality were the elements of true generalship that enabled her to marshal the forces of temperance into a mighty host. Without fanaticism or bigotry she brought to the organization of which she was the head the intrepid courage of a dauntless leader, the ripe attainments of a liberal scholarship and the loving kindness of a nature that never lost the softer attributes of refined womanhood.

Miss Willard's early training, education and environment were shaped for the evolution of this splendid personality destined to shake the moral forces of two continents. Her clarion appeal for sobriety went ringing round the world. Her plea for the obliteration of a traffic that devastated homes and filled almshouses and penitentiaries stirred the hearts of a common humanity. That which was a sentiment and a precept in millions of hearts she crystallized into one mighty organization, which grappled with the giant of intemperance and made politicians tremble. Across its banners she wrote the words, "For God and Home and Native Land." More inspiring words than these never stirred to valorous deeds the knights of chivalry.

She lived to see the drunkard ostracized and the seal of popular condemnation placed upon the man who lingers long at his cups. It was her privilege to witness the social decree that makes temperance respectable and excessive drinking disreputable. She was blessed with friendships rich, rare and varied, "all lying within the temperate zone of a great heart's geography."

Surveying the beauty of her life, its plenitude of noble achievement and its bountiful sacrifice, her keenest critics, who sometimes ruthlessly assailed the methods of the organization which she founded, must join in the acknowledgment that she was a great moral force and that her services to mankind were inestimable.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Death of Frances Willard.

MISS WILLARD, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, who passed away early yesterday morning, was in the highest degree a typical American woman of the period. She was a woman of genius, developed by culture, animated by the purest and loftiest motives and ideals. In particular she had the genius for the discernment of her opportunity for helping others to better and happier living. And she never was guilty of hiding a talent in a napkin. To be indolent, to shirk a responsibility, to surrender to any cowardly fear, was something foreign to her nature.

Whatever the tactical mistakes, more or less serious according to any one's point of view, which may have been made by Miss Willard in forcing the great temperance organization of women into the propaganda for woman's suffrage and the third party movement, or in making the union a kind of universal reform society, and thus keeping aloof from it a large number of women who might have eagerly identified themselves with it as a purely Christian temperance propaganda, there never has been the slightest question as to the utter unselfishness of her motive or the sincerity of her purpose.

But any estimate of Miss Willard's life work, as a whole, would be wanting in discernment if special account were not made of her wonderful influence in winning into heartiest fellowship and drawing into enthusiastic coöperation, along the main lines of Christian and humanitarian effort, persons of all grades of culture and religionists of every name, Protestant or Catholic. In this way her life became a power not only making for temperance, and purity, and right living of every kind, but for love, and fellowship, and brotherhood the world over.—Chicago Tribune.

Death of a Great Woman.

THE death of Miss Willard removes from the world one who was personally beloved in many homes, and who was admired wherever her name was known.

Miss Willard was a woman of whom America may well be proud. She was essentially American in her instincts and activities. She was a product of American conditions. The zeal and tireless energy with which she prosecuted her chosen work were as characteristically American as is the tremendous enterprise with which the typical kings of commerce and industry push to successful termination their colossal undertakings. Christianity, patriotism and love of home were the motives inspiring her activities. She had ever before her high ideals of manhood and womanhood, which she believed could be cherished only in temperate and virtuous homes. Her warfare on intemperance was to her a warfare for the defense and upbuilding of the American home, which is the glory and strength of this country.

Together with her high ideals, Miss Willard combined executive ability, aggressiveness and good common sense. But neither the character nor the usefulness of such a woman can be measured by the success of an organization. The good which she has accomplished is not measurable. The influence of her life has been felt most in giving character and strength to the weak, in giving dignity to woman and her activities, and in giving sanctity and stability to the home.—Chicago Record.

Frances E. Willard.

FRANCES E. WILLARD has passed from the scenes of an unusually active and useful life into the mystery of death.

No woman in America was more widely known and none had more loving and devoted friends. Her loss is not only a severe blow to those who knew her and were bound to her by the ties of personal affection, but it is also a great, almost an irreparable loss to the cause which she represented.

Chicago will mourn the death of this great and famous woman with an especial grief, as her home was here, and the great city has been proud to claim her as peculiarly its own.

Her death comes as a shock, although it had been anticipated, and not only America, but the whole world, will sorrow that such a great power for good has been taken away.—Chicago Dispatch.

Death of Miss Willard.

IN the death of Miss Frances E. Willard the republic of temperance the world over has lost its most illustrious citizen. Her name was familiar in many lands. Her clear-cut, incisive eloquence was suggestive of Wendell Phillips. Her style underwent very material change when she came into her kingdom.

It is a low estimate to say that there are half a million of mourners who feel that in the death of Frances E. Willard they have sustained a great loss. No history of hero worship would be complete without her wondrous story. The admiration, reaching almost to adoration, was partly due to her magnetic personality and partly to the pathos of the cause to which her life was devoted.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Death of Miss Willard.

THE death of Frances E. Willard will bring to the hearts of more people in Chicago a deeper sense of personal loss than would that of almost any other person in the city.

For many years she has been identified with a reform that was far-reaching and important, and her activity was such that, by the very modesty of her work and the sincerity of her purpose, she was carried to, rather than sought, a prominence that was so pronounced that one of the magazines not long since referred to her as the "uncrowned queen of America."

Early identified with the Woman's Christian Temperance movement, she was always its most trusted leader. At times when differences have existed in that organization, Miss Willard was never a partisan, and, whatever interests apparently divided the forces, she was always the faithful confidant of both factions. She never lost her mental equilibrium and never forgot the single aim involved in the organization of the union at whose head she had so long presided.

Miss Willard was full to overflowing with ideas, but she had a single intent, and that was to bring sobriety, purity and character into every heart and home in the whole world. With what zeal and hope she struggled all her acquaintances knew full well, but what success she met will not be appreciated until the leaves of the judgment book are unrolled.

She was weary—that was her only plaint. The gentle soul knows now the full significance of the phrase, "He giveth His beloved sleep."—Chicago Evening News.

Frances E. Willard.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, whose best biography is the rise and splendid achievements of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, died at New York yesterday.

It is very difficult to overestimate the influence of a life like that of Miss Willard's. There is no means to measure it. We know that it has encircled the earth with an organization inspired by a common purpose of beneficence. Who can put a limit on the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union? Who can say from how many homes and hearts it has rolled the dark and twin clouds of drunkenness and poverty?

To-day the hushed voices and moistened eyes of thousands upon thousands of men and women throughout the world testify to the universal impression Miss Willard has left upon her time. —Chicago Post.

Death of Frances E. Willard.

MISS WILLARD had great force of character. But it was united to a personal amiability and grace of manner which preserved her womanliness. She was the object of universal esteem to a degree which other female crusaders never reached.

Her example shows that women may engage in public movements of a humane interest, may preach, write and toil for a great cause and still retain the respect and sympathy of men and of other women who remain within the sphere of home and its duties. In this, at least, her life has been useful and is a lesson to those of her sex who think that they have a public mission that they must fulfill.—Chicago Chronicle.

The Defender of Homes.

IT is a holy thing to have lived, labored and died for a holy cause. The cause for which Frances E. Willard gave her toil and sacrificed her life was expressed in the motto of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union: "For God and Home and Native Land."

For nearly twenty years she had been president of that influential organization, directing its great energies as a commander directs the forces of an army. She fought for the homes of America. The human heart was the object of her strategy. Saved manhood, peace, industry and human dignity were the fruits of her great conquests.

She was a student, a scholar, a thinker, and always an enthusiast. She had been a college professor. She had been the associate of Joseph Cook in journalism. She wrote articles, pamphlets and books, which were almost without exception concerned with some phase of the single idea to which she had devoted herself.

Her influence over women was remarkable. She knew their needs. She was characterized by a pure and transparent spirituality, which a woman's nature could best appreciate, and which left no room to doubt the generosity of her heart and the loftiness of her aims. At the same time her strong, well-balanced mentality saved her following from the morbidness and hysteria which might have exposed it to the blight of ridicule.

Miss Willard has loyally defended her friend, Lady Henry Somerset, and recent statements of the latter seem to show her worthy of such a champion. Within a few months of her death, Miss Willard had assumed heavy financial obligations for the cause she represented. She gave up everything, even life itself, to uplift and uphold humanity.

Her army has lost its leader. The homes of America have lost their best defender. The women of the country have not lost and can never lose the wholesome inspiration of this great and beautiful life.—Chicago Evening Journal.

Death of Miss Willard.

NEWS of the death of Miss Frances E. Willard will occasion profound sorrow, not only in our own country, but in other lands where she was well known. Some may have questioned the practicability of her methods of reform, but none have questioned her honesty and sincerity, while her single-mindedness and devotion have won admiration from all.—Bloomington (Ill.) Pantagraph.

THE world has lost one of its most illustrious women. Her life has been a powerful influence for righteousness. She was a woman of a sympathetic heart, a benevolent nature, a large intellect, a gracious and winning personality, of tact and refinement, and of executive force and ability.—Galesburg (Ill.) Republican Register.

IT is safe to say that no woman in the past generation has exercised so great an influence for good as Miss Willard. Where she was known she was respected and admired, and won hosts of friends to the standard of reform.—Alton (Ill.) Telegraph.

THE present century has not produced a woman who has filled a larger space in the hearts of Christian people of the world than Frances E. Willard has filled for years past, and her death will be regarded as a serious loss to humanity and the homes of civilization.—Illinois State Journal.

THE death of Miss Frances E. Willard removes from the scenes and activities of life one of the most earnest Christian women of the century. She had devoted her life to the moral advancement of her fellows and the amelioration of the woes of mankind.—Illinois State Register.

THE death of Frances E. Willard has robbed the nation of one of its noblest characters. The deceased held an exalted position in the minds and hearts of the people, and there will be universal sorrow over her death.—Joliet (Ill.) Republican.

THE death of Frances E. Willard will be lamented by every believer in sobriety, purity, and intelligent womanhood. She possessed a mind of great breadth, was gifted with unusual ability as a public speaker, and was wonderfully persuasive in council and in influencing legislative bodies.—Ottawa (Ill.) Republican-Times.

MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD was a leader of her sex, and there is scarce a woman in the broad land but had a warm spot in her heart for this enthusiastic and kindly missionary of good. —Quincy (Ill.) Herald.

MOURNED by millions of her sex; mourned as the greatest woman educator America has ever produced; mourned as the idol of a sisterhood knit together as with hooks of steel, the sorrowing Christian Temperance women of the world will hear of the death of their beloved sister, teacher and leader, who has been called to the great beyond to rest from her labors while her works do follow her.—Springfield (Ill.) Monitor.

THE world and womankind has suffered a great loss in the death of Frances E. Willard, who has been in many respects the most remarkable woman of the age, has accomplished more for temperance and reform in general than any other woman who ever lived, and whose works will live after her in the helpful, uplifting influence she has exerted, the good she has accomplished in so many departments of benevolent endeavor, and the stimulating example she has given to her sisters all over the world.—*Peoria (Ill.) Chicago Young People's Union.

THE last time Miss Willard spoke in the Hall which bears her loved name, it was under the auspices of the Chicago Young People's Christian Temperance Union. The first formal memorial service in Chicago was under the same auspices on Saturday evening, February 19, at the time of the regular monthly rally of this most promising organization which already numbers hundreds of Chicago representative young people.

The evening was set as the first meeting of the singers for the grand temperance chorus now being organized, which Prof. Peter Bilhorn hopes will eventually number two thousand voices. The early part of the evening was spent under the splendid leadership of this noble prohibition singer in voicing sentiments appropriate to the occasion, and during the evening Professor Bilhorn led in Miss Willard's favorite songs. Miss Eva Marshall Shontz, who presided, expressed the hope that this great chorus, which is destined to be a mighty force in helping make the saloon go, may be named in memory of Miss Willard, and this will doubtless be done at the next meeting.

Instead of speaking upon the subject, "Shall the Saloon Rule Chicago," as he was at first invited to do, Rev. J. H. O. Smith spoke most beautifully and powerfully on the life and work of Miss Willard, laying at her feet the tributes she so richly merited, and strongly appealed to Chicago young people to take up the work she had so lately laid down. The hearty response to his appeal assured an army of new recruits, many of whom were in Willard Hall for the first time.

J. Spencer Dickerson, editor of the Baptist Standard, after words of appreciation of his personal friend, Frances E. Willard, made a plea for a library at the county jail, where hundreds of men and boys are incarcerated with little provision for wholesome and suitable reading matter. A motion was carried that the Young People's Union receive contributions of books and magazines at their headquarters at 1119, The Temple, for this purpose. F. C. Lockwood, a senior at Northwestern University, whose heart is on fire for the destruction of the liquor traffic, J. Lawrence Young, an earnest young prohibitionist, late of Cleveland, O., and Lucy Page Gaston, who told an incident or two indicative of Miss Willard's matchless power over young lives with which she came in contact, were the other speakers. E. E. Blake, the superintendent of the Law and Order department of the Union, received a generous response to his appeal for funds to print and send out over the city the laws that are so constantly being violated. Arrangements were made for the general circulation of petitions for the reform bills in Congress and the leaflet, "The Cigaret Must Go," was distributed at the close. Thus with the heartfelt sorrow over the death of the great leader was mingled much of practical work in the cause so dear to her heart.

It is hoped the Chicago union may set the pace for other cities, and that there may be found everywhere an Eva Marshall Shontz to invest life and strength in leading Christian young people out of the Egypt of indifference to the temperance reform.

Y's at Work.

THE Y Branch executive meeting last held in Washington, D. C., was cheered by the presence of several superintendents of departments from the W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia, among them Mrs. Alla B. Foster, of the Loyal Temperance Legion, who pressed the importance of her department with such vigor that the girls decided to form a class in the normal course of study prescribed by Mrs. Rice. March 14, at the next regular meeting, Mrs. Foster is to begin instruction of such a class, hoping thus to graduate, in course of time, trained leaders for local L. T. L's.

KENTUCKY.

THE Paducah Y's hold their meetings Sunday afternoon in one of the churches. A religious program is prepared and the meetings well attended.

The chief work of the Williamstown Y is keeping up the L. T. L., and at Christmas prepared a tree for them. This is a busy, wide awake Y, doing almost every kind of work.

Hickman Y, on the occasion of Mrs. Clara Hoffman's visit to the town, gave a reception, entertaining the woman's union, the L. T. L. and friends of the cause. They also furnished the music for the lecture.

Massachusetts.

EFFORT along legislative lines requires much attention from the state president and corresponding secretary at this time. Mrs. Fessenden spoke at the hearing given at the state house to the petition of the Massachusetts Woman's Suffrage Association, that the word "male" might be stricken from the constitution. A large number of our women were present. The "remonstrants" were out in force also. It was known beforehand that this committee was largely composed of men who were distinctly hostile to the movement, so it was no surprise that the result was "leave to withdraw." Two men dissented from the report of the committee and Mrs. Fessenden wrote them a letter of appreciation. The W. C. T. U. have petitioned for municipal suffrage, for license suffrage, for a better law relating to the guardianship of minors, or at least that there should be equal right given to mother and father, and although in many respects, such as age limit, etc., our law relating to the protection of girls is better than in many states, we have petitioned that some of the clauses that hinder its efficiency be removed.

Since state convention Mrs. Fessenden has been almost constantly in the field, returning occasionally for hearings, etc. As a result many cheering words come from various sources telling of increased interest and enthusiasm, and most practical proof of all, many report new members and new subscribers to our papers.

Early after state convention the corresponding secretary wrote personal letters to the more than three hundred unions in the state, urging special effort to make this twenty-fifth year of our organization, our best year. The letter has met with a ready response from all, and we feel that we are warranted in expecting to report the largest membership we have ever known at our state convention in October, which is to be held in Boston, probably in Tremont Temple, and entertained by Suffolk county. The county executive are making large plans for a worthy celebration of our "silver anniversary." They have met three or four times already for appointment of committees, etc., and although the efficient county president, Mrs. Furguson, is absent in Mexico for six weeks, she has left matters in charge of Mrs. Gleason, and those who know her will be sure that nothing will suffer or be allowed to lag that is in her care.

Our state president has two large classes in parliamentary law with all her other duties. She has lately been made vice-president of the Massachusetts Woman's Suffrage Association.

Several hundred dollars have been raised in Massachusetts for the Temple, and there is great enthusiasm over lifting the terrible burden of debt from our House Beautiful wherever the subject is mentioned. There are also good intentions on the part of many unions in regard to the Hospital.

Among the many good things accomplished by local unions since convention I will mention that Cambridge is to present a copy of the book, "Ten Years of No-license in Cambridge," to the three hundred and thirty-three public libraries in Massachusetts. Every book will have this stamp: "Presented to this Public Library by Cambridge Woman's Christian Temperance Union." Madame Barakat is to give her wonderful lectures on "The Covenants" under the auspices and for the benefit of the Boston union. Our "Harriet Tubman" union (colored) of Boston, is to hold a "souvenir Valentine social" this month, the proceeds to form a nucleus for a home for colored working girls.

The Willard Y settlement is doing good work. Nearly all the apartments are now filled with bright young women, who are very happy and contented in their new home. The classes have all been started and the teachers show remarkable fitness for their especial branches. A second reception and entertainment has been given to the young people living near the settlement, their names having been obtained by visiting the lodging houses, and then written invitations sent.

The Sunday afternoon services are very helpful, and the lunch with its extremely low prices for good, home cooking, is proving a great benefit to young women living on small salaries and helps to carry out the social settlement idea by bringing the workers in touch with them. It has not yet been running two months, but already gives evidence of soon being a source of revenue for the work.

My letter would be incomplete with no reference to the Monday prayer meetings which are held at headquarters from 1:30 to 2:30. We recently had the great pleasure of having as our leader, Mrs. F. E. Clark, whose husband leads the Christian Endeavor hosts. Madame Barakat led on February 14, and there are few meetings where we are not favored by some one or more from other states and countries. Rev. Yoshimore, of Japan, and Rev. A. D. Zurub, a Syrian pastor of Beirut, were among these the past month, the former having been converted through Mary Allen West. Several intensely interesting individual cases of those who have come to Headquarters to sign the pledge from the very extremes of society, have been prayed for in these meetings, and prayer has been answered for a number who have shown their gratitude by personal letters.

IF I possessed the "pen of a ready writer" or was a nondescript reporter for a great daily, I might be able to write lengthy and astounding news from the Oklahoma field, but being only an official recorder of deeds done by the unions, of which deeds many unions fail to report, this record is short. In a recent issue of THE UNION SIGNAL the editors classed Oklahoma among the "faithful" in News From the Field. Sisters, let's keep up with the procession!

The Yukon union has been making a specialty of mothers' meetings. A union has been organized at Norman by Mrs. Furguson. El Reno is putting forth efforts to start a reading-room. Neal Dow union has held two silver contests, Bessie Keller and Leah Brown winning the medals. This union has also had echoes from National Convention, and one meeting was devoted to "our round-the-world missionaries." Mrs. Nellie Sheplar, territorial evangelist, held three meetings, with large audiences, at Britton on a Sabbath, a lecture, testimonial meeting and a children's service. Mrs. Sheplar has compiled an instructive talk for young people, drawn from the picture of the "Mill and the Still." She also holds evangelistic service on Sabbath once a month in a country schoolhouse. Mrs. A. E. Carman, National superintendent medal work, writes that she is receiving many letters from Oklahoma in the interest of her department, mostly from schools and lodges; notably was the one from T. E. Jones, principal of the Navajoe public schools, who is doing a successful work in his county for "contest to conquest."

IT cheered my heart to see how near front rank our state stood in reporting. We will still strive to come in A No. 1, and "keep sweet" if others do get ahead of us.

Marching orders have gone forth to all in line to follow the instructions coming from our chief and her council. We aim to do our best and bid fair to have a successful year.

The central committee met in Philadelphia, January 19–21. The five officers were present, holding sessions all day and evening of the three dates. A circular letter containing plans and suggestions will go to every union shortly, and we trust return us "an hundredfold." We were cheered by the presence of Mrs. Clara Hoffman. We always have a welcome for her. She held a successful series of meetings in Delaware county and will fill other dates in the state. We always urge the workers to have such meetings, for a county that brings good speakers before its community will keep moving in the right direction.

It was with many regrets that we were compelled to accept the resignation of our loved "Mother" Mair, from railroad work. At her suggestion Mrs. Annie Keenan was appointed in her place, and from the starting letter in the Bulletin we think Mother Mair made a wise choice. She speaks of the many Christmas letters sent out and how all were appreciated. Recommends the tract, "Out of Touch," and is having the work in good order all through the state. From Mrs. Irwin, our vice-president-at-large, we have an interesting account of a pleasant meeting held as a parting testimonial to Mrs. Mair, by the Engineers' and Firemen's Association of the Pittsburg and Lake Erie railroad. A fine Bagster Bible was presented her as a token of the love and esteem in which she is held by the men for whom she has worked so many years.

The state president, Mrs. Rebecca B. Chambers, has just concluded a series of meetings in Allegheny county, as a reward for the energetic efforts of the members in organizing the greatest number of unions during the past year in the state. The local unions were gathered together in twelve groups so that all could have an opportunity of enjoying her earnest heart-to-heart talks each afternoon and evening, either in parlor or church, while the gatherings were not large (owing to the inclement weather), they were the means of kindling a renewed interest in the work, and we feel assured our sister has gone home having won the hearts, not only of the women but also the children, and the sacrifice she made to fulfill an obligation, for which she was not responsible, was highly appreciated by all. She was accompanied by our county president.

Our new superintendent of flower mission, Mrs. S. V. Heaton, has also taken hold of her department with zeal and inspiration. Plans have been sent out for winter work and all are urged to take up this "Beauty department of the W. C. T. U."

Huntingdon county is doing faithful work. A mothers' rally in Huntingdon was a mental and spiritual uplift. Cassville is planning a graphophone parlor meeting. The unions will endeavor to have sermons preached in different places on "Mother's Influence."

Butler county sends an interesting account of the last convention. The unions are in good working order. The Butler W subscribes for THE UNION SIGNAL to be sent to eleven ministers and Y. M. C. A. The reports of superintendents were fully discussed and desire expressed to infuse more system into department work. The convention voted to endorse a visitation of unions by the county president, Mrs. A. M. Rice. The result was a series of meetings, increasing the interest and efficiency of the unions. Stipulated space is filled weekly in three papers. Philadelphia's energetic press superintendent keeps items of interest in the Press and other papers each week. She sends the following:

"Philadelphia county had the privilege of having a number of its women attend the World's and National Conventions. The good accounts which they have given to others of the meetings has helped all. Evangelistic work is carrying all before it in this county. Monthly meetings in churches, weekly meetings in car barns and police stations and in other places, besides a whole week of prayer observed by Philadelphia union. Another week of Bible study conducted by Madame Barakat in different churches under the management of West Philadelphia W. Weekly visitations to hospitals by a number of unions and all meetings of all unions are opened with devotional exercises.

"At the semi-annual conference held January 27, Mrs. Ramsey reported eleven L. T. L's in the county with more to follow. An entertainment given by the children made the county treasury somewhat richer. Miss A. E. Thomas reported six Y's in the county, the latest being the 'Anna M. Hammer' Y of Germantown, Miss Margaret Ramsey, president.

"A memorial service was held for Dr. Caroline V. Dodsen, first president of Philadelphia county W. C. T. U., and Rev. Thomas A. Fernley, D. D., father of Mrs. H. H. Hubbert, president of the North Philadelphia W.

"Mrs. Ella Thacher spoke eloquently on her department, soldiers and sailors, and asked for help in establishing a Sailors' Rest in Philadelphia.

"In the evening Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, president of Illinois, gave a rousing address to a large audience. The frequent applause showed how well this brilliant woman is appreciated. Mrs. Rounds spoke the preceding Tuesday evening at the twenty-second anniversary of Philadelphia W, and on Sunday morning, January 30, at the Breakfast Association, to a large audience of men.

"West Philadelphia W has already given to the Temple $1,660, and it will collect $240 more which will be given to the Temple provided the $300,000 for the Temple Trust Bonds will be raised by July 1, otherwise it will be given to the headquarter fund of the union."

The women of Chester county are holding on with good grit to the work of their favorite organization. We have had few eminent speakers in the field, although Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman is filling a few dates at present, for money is scarce and enterprise discouraging, but our meetings are regularly held. The winter course of parlor meetings are in progress throughout the country and the local bodies are astir in various lines to maintain the interest in the work and to add to the membership. The Kennett Square union undertook the largest project that has come under our notice, having issued a woman's edition of the Kennett News and Advertiser in December. The profits are to be equally divided between the Kennett Square union and the Bayard Taylor Memorial Library of the town. The ladies of the same union have just given a successful luncheon which yielded them a modest sum, and the organization has forwarded two dollars each to the treasurers of the county, state and National bodies. County chairman Ella P. Martin has been visiting her local unions and rounding up the soil for seed sowing, and now that we hold within our border both the state president, Mrs. Rebecca B. Chambers, and the state superintendent of the Loyal Temperance Legion, Mrs. Elma M. Preston, we are certain to keep awake and moving forward.

Warren county has been on the alert for something new. The Warren Central union held recently an art exhibit and sale of the fine pictures sent out by the Ladies' Home Journal. It was an exceedingly pretty entertainment. The profits were about thirty dollars and five dollars each was voted for county and state work. This union is also supplying THE UNION SIGNAL for the third year to ten ministers in the town, the public library and the Y. M. C. A. reading rooms. We wish every union wonld do the same with THE UNION SIGNAL. Such "scattered leaves" will leave no room for ignorance, but heal and help into the light and liberty of a healthy condition of activity all through the county.

Miss Elizabeth Lloyd, president of Bucks county, sends a cheery note: "Mrs. Emilie Underhill Burgess has done a noble work in our county. She lectured for nineteen of the unions, speaking at two of them twice and for one three times. She has added several new members and organized one union. Warm words of praise have come to me of her from every quarter."

THE annual meeting was an occasion of much interest for the Central union in New Orleans. It was held in the Y. M. C. A. building and was honored by the presence of Rev. W. C. Black, editor of The Christian Advocate, Rev. Steele of the Bethel, and Captain Winterbottom of the Salvation Army.

The annual report of the superintendents and the secretary showed that much work had been accomplished, although the union was dormant for several months on account

Cheerfulness.

Any day, wet or cold, hot or dry, is pleasant to the thoroughly healthy man or woman. We have within ourselves, the power to make our days cheerful or disagreeable. We do not depend upon the condition of the sky or atmosphere, for when one is perfectly poised, physically and mentally, the days go by as a dream of comfort, whether they be dark or sunny.

Our goal should be health. Mental health is a strong element to bring about physical health, but ill health can be, and is, set up by the use of elements contained in food and drink that do not conform to the wants of Nature.

We are inclined to the use of narcotics and stimulants for their temporary deadening or quickening of the nervous system and the heart, but these unnatural things bring about serious conditions; for instance, the pulse of the coffee drinker or tobacco user, shows derangement (either little or great) of the heart. This trouble is ordinarily coupled with stomach and some other difficulties.

The ones who see clearly the advantage in business, home and society, of a perfect condition of mental and physical health, will not require urging to have them abandon articles of food or drink that prevent the accomplishment of the desired end.

The leaving off of coffee for ten days and the use of Postum Food Coffee in its stead, will demonstrate the value of the above suggestion and the fact that Postum furnishes brain and body with well selected food elements which go to rebuild the daily disintegration, while at the same time, Postum furnishes a delicious beverage if one be particular to know that after boiling commences, it is allowed to continue boiling fifteen minutes. This is necessary to obtain the food elements and the proper taste.

Postum is the only Cereal Coffee yet discovered, with a coffee taste, that is pure and free from low grade coffee or other drugs.

of the yellow fever and the absence of the members.

Twenty-one new members had been added. One medal contest, four parlor meetings and fifty-one evangelistic meetings had been held. Forty of these meetings had been at the Memorial Home, a place of refuge for sin-weary, sick and suffering women. Purity literature had been distributed by the superintendent and Mrs. Crouch made an earnest appeal to the mothers to watch more closely the literature and pictures which might fall into the hands of their children.

The ladies had resumed their meetings at the Bethel and Dr. Steele spoke of the work being done to protect the sailors from the saloons and urged coöperation in placing this beneficent institution on a permanent basis.

The superintendent of prison work reported several visits and meetings held at the Parish prison, with leaflets, cards and two Bibles given to the prisoners.

Mrs. E. J. Ellis presented the following resolution, which was adopted: "The W. C. T. U. of New Orleans protest against the sale of intoxicating liquor in any of the government buildings." A petition will be sent to the Louisiana congressmen.

The work outlined for the coming year is the enforcement of the law prohibiting the sale of liquor to minors and securing the passage of an ordinance prohibiting the sale of liquor in grocery stores.

Countess di Brazza was introduced and spoke enthusiastically of the aims of the new organization, and Mrs. E. J. Ellis was appointed to represent the W. C. T. U. at the meeting in New Orleans of the Local Council of Women.

The election of officers resulted as follows: Mrs. A. M. Zable, president; Mrs. S. S. Bothick, recording secretary; Mrs. W. V. Crouch, corresponding secretary; Mrs. S. S. Shove, treasurer.

The memorial service for three of their departed members was closed with Mrs. Zable singing, "Crossing the Bar."

The two largest daily papers, the Times-Democrat and Picayune, devoted over a column to the report of the annual meeting of the Central union. I am indebted for my information to these papers.

OUR bright state paper, without which we would hardly know how to keep our W. C. T. U. house at all in order, or know what our neighbors are doing, is replete with stirring pleas from our state superintendents, and if our departmental work is not a success, and is not well reported it will not be their fault.

The missionary fund is being paid quite satisfactorily, and most encouraging reports come from our missionary to the lumbermen, Rev. Odle. He says, "Sinners are converted, ungodly men have shouted, liquor-dealers put into the toils of the law, weak unions fired for business, strong ones enlarged." Many of the unions have been sending quantities of comfort bags to him for distribution. Detroit union has sent a large basket of Bibles, Testaments and comfort bags; is also raising one month's salary for the missionary, and is creating a good deal of sentiment on the subject of purity in art, and are also seeking to purify the city bill boards. Wyandotte is meeting with some opposition from the press, but they are moving bravely on, preparing to do good temperance work in a farmers' institute.

Work throughout the second district is being vigorously pushed. A discussion on "the discouraging and encouraging side of the temperance question" was recently held by the union at Ann Arbor. Many discouraging things were told, incidents peculiar to college towns, but the president told the encouraging outlook, and her enthusiasm aroused all. They send THE UNION SIGNAL to each pastor in their city (a good example for all unions to follow). Lambertville union sent two dollars to missionary fund, literature and comfort bags, and are also taking the course of study. Adrian union has made, filled and sent sixty comfort bags and a barrel of literature to a lumber camp. Many other good things have been done in this district since my last report, but if I should mention them all, the space allotted us would be filled, so I must pass them by.

Work is also active in the third district. Branch county is arranging for a course of lectures and drills by Mrs. E. L. Calkins. Coldwater has a flourishing L. T. L. They have taken up a new department, called the work department. They meet once a week to make and repair garments for needy children, and the calls are many. They report new members added to each meeting. On New Year's Eve they gave a farewell reception to Mrs. Irene Clizbe, who for many years had been one of their most faithful members, county and district president. Her address is now Tekowsha, she not having left the district. A novel entertainment was recently given by Dorrance union, in the form of a reading contest, selections being taken from THE UNION SIGNAL and National Educator. A book of poems was the prize given. Grand Ledge has sent a barrel of clothing and a box of literature and clothing to the rescue mission for girls. Battle Creek is also wide awake, combining literary work with business in a way very attractive and successful in bringing outsiders into their meetings. Mrs. Henry, who is seeking rest there, recently gave them an address.

A new union is reported at Mottville, fourth district. At South Haven the citizens have taken possession of a most infamous den, and turned it into a reading room. Kalamazoo is holding monthly circles to increase its building fund.

Rev. E. S. Odle, state missionary, recently delivered several addresses in the fifth district, also one in the tenth; all productive of good.

Mrs. J. N. Dawson has recently conducted meetings for two weeks in Ovid, sixth district. Sinners were converted and the union strengthened. Pontiac sent boxes of cake, candies and fruit to the inmates of their county house on Christmas day. Mrs. C. H. Johnson has given her "echoes from the National" at five different points.

Christmas morning members of Goodland union, in seventh district, visited a destitute family, held a prayer and praise service, induced the father and mother to sign the pledge, and left them rejoicing over a merry Christmas dinner.

The unions of Saginaw, eighth district, are already laying plans for entertaining our state convention in May. Mrs. E. L. Calkins began work in this district, January 30. Dates are arranged for her reaching beyond the middle of March.

The unions of the ninth district are all reported as doing regular work. Mrs. Gertrude Minore recently addressed the union at Marion. Big Rapids is studying the L. T. L. Manual. They have an active L. T. L. Their schools have been interested in the study of narcotics, and twelve fifth grade pupils are preparing essays on the subject, "The effect of tobacco on school work."

Mrs. Gertrude Minore has been organizing some new unions in the tenth district. Four are reported and the union at Clare reorganized. She has also held many other meetings and done considerable house-to-house visitation. The D. & M. R. R. very courteously gave her passes in recognition of her work.

All the good things done in our "fair state" since our last published report, can not be crowded into our "space."

MRS. I. W. SLOAN,
State Reporter, Clarendon.

New York.

THIS year will round out a quarter of a century since the Crusade. Our state officers, quick to grasp every opportunity for bringing our work to the notice of the public, have planned to have this twenty-fifth year—the silver wedding year in happy married life—celebrated by every local union in the state as a "Crusade silver jubilee," and have sent out a beautiful program bound in blue and silver for the use of the locals in preparing for the event.

There is no special day fixed but it is hoped that every union will plan to celebrate this Crusade anniversary sometime during this notable year, thus keeping green in the minds of all the memory of the Crusade.

Our state organ, Woman's Temperance Work, will be specially attractive this year, as it presents each month pictures and short sketches of the leading workers of the state.

Reports of midwinter county conventions and from many locals show activity all through the state. Albany county's semi-annual held at Watervliet, had a novel feature in the way of a "mock legislature," already described in THE UNION SIGNAL. The children's hour was very interesting. The Y's were represented by Miss Fannie Lansing, who gave an excellent paper. Addresses were made by clergymen. "Should young people's religious societies be active in temperance work?" was the topic chosen by one, while another discussed in a very able manner, "The most available remedy for intemperance."

Oswego county is awake, planning and executing good work. They are to raise one hundred dollars to place their president's name in Willard Hall. They have undertaken to furnish a room at the Anchorage, in Elmira, N. Y., and will also furnish the school commissioners of the county with the School Physiology Journal. Fulton union sent a large Christmas box to a hospital in New York city, observed January 12 as a day of prayer, and has held a very large and successful white-ribbon tea at the town hall, which was reported by the local press in a very complimentary manner. New Haven union, in the same county, has the hearty support of the local pastor, who has preached on "Sabbath Observance" and "Peace and Arbitration."

Allegany county held its convention at Andover. Rev. J. L. Davies gave the evening address, and Mrs. Lytie P. Davies conducted a parliamentary drill. Reports of the state, National and World's conventions, given by the several delegates, were a very enjoyable feature. A memorial service was held for the fourteen active members and two honoraries, lost from their ranks within a few months. Among these was the oldest white-ribboner in the county, Mrs. Coats, aged eighty-three.

The annual county school of methods has just been held at Schenectady, in the new headquarters of the local union. Miss A. C. Delavan, county superintendent of the department, was conductor, and gave parliamentary drills at each meeting. Three other departments were thoroughly discussed. The L. T. L. had a half hour on the program.

An evening reception was given to the teachers of the county, at which Rev. Mr. Waygood gave a talk on temperance in the schools, and Dr. Kate Fisk a talk on "Alcohol in Medicine."

Schoharie county has held a very helpful midwinter meeting of the executive committee, and have decided to begin thus early to prepare for the "no-license fight" of next year. The county union has espoused the cause of a poor girl, who for the past three years has been trying to bring to justice a vile man who attempted to assault her. The case had been put over from one term of court till the next six times. The girl had appeared against her assailant alone and been subjected to such insults from his counsel that she had not courage to go alone again. One member was appointed from each union to accompany the county president as an escort to this friendless girl, and when these representative women of the county appeared suddenly in the court-room and took seats by the plaintiff, consternation was visible on the countenance of every officer and the case was promptly "put over." But the white-ribboners will be on hand at every term till this case is settled, for the man is an old offender and has escaped punishment for two similar offences.

Tioga county has nearly raised the seventy dollars pledged for the Elmira Anchorage.

We have a new state superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, Mrs. Mary A. Johnson, 461 Halsey street, Brooklyn. Mrs. Newton who has served so efficiently for the past three years is about to leave our state.

Tompkins county has two new colored unions—one at Ithaca, one at Groton. Auburn also has a new union in the African M. E. church.

The W. C. T. U. of Ithaca and the Good Templars have united their Sunday afternoon gospel temperance meetings; one Sunday in each month the meeting is in charge of the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole spoke recently for the Y. M. C. A. of Cornell University.

Two members of the W. C. T. U. of Ithaca have been made directors on the county agricultural board.

Sodus, Wayne county, held a beautiful memorial service for the late president of the union—Mrs. P. A. Brayton.

Mrs. Cora E. Seberry, of Brooklyn, and Mrs. L. E. Bailey, of Prohibition Park, have been doing excellent service in Sullivan county. The latter organized two new unions.

THE many unions that Mrs. Addie Fields has visited are much encouraged, and calls are coming for her from all over the state.

Mrs. Clara Hoffman is spending February in New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Mrs. Callie Howe is in Arkansas. Mrs. Nelle Burger has spent some time lately in the eighth district. She organized a Y of nineteen members at La Clede. At Huntsville a Sunday-school convention was in session, but they gave her the morning hour, also some time at night. Organized a new union at Jacksonville, and in her trip through the district she visited all the schools but one. She has already been spoken for at Sumner to make an address the fourth of July. She states that Triplett is just recovering from a series of lawsuits against whisky druggists. In this fight they had the help and support of the best people of the town.

Miss Carrie Lee Carter reports good work in the nineteenth district.

Mrs. Callie Howe was quite busy before leaving for Arkansas. She spoke at Maysville, where the church would not hold the crowd. At Jamesport the Presbyterian church suspended a protracted meeting in favor of the W. C. T. U. Next day the superintendent of the public school took chalk and by clever questions drew from the scholars a synopsis of her discourse which he wrote on the blackboard. She reports Altamonte having a splendid L. T. L., the superintendent being the primary teacher of the school. She delivered an address on temperance in the Sunday-school for the Interstate Sunday-school Convention of the Latter Day Saints, held in St. Joseph. Also spoke to the union meeting of the A. O. U. W., and D. of H. lodges of that city.

Cainsville union have much to be thankful for, as the citizens of that town are determined not to tolerate any wrong doing, and through a noble mayor, Dr. Davis, one of the dive keepers was put in jail to stay for some time.

Kansas City unions assisted to make the anniversary day at the Florence Crittenton Home a success by having representatives there and sending many things for the elegant dinner served. Many girls who had been saved in this home and are in good homes now went that day to rejoice with others that they had been led to this place of refuge.

Middletown had a gold medal contest early in February. Cove Springs, Ridgeway, Locust Hill and Gamma held gold medal contests in January. Albany had a suffrage contest. Lamar has held two matrons' contests, the last one in connection with a musical contest. The citizens were much interested in them. New Hope has an honorary member as superintendent of contests.

At a social by the Appleton city union the guests were entertained with beautiful music and an old-fashioned spelling school.

A Christmas item we did not get in before was the Central union in St. Joseph assisting the Salvation Army on that day to feed seven hundred people and distribute presents among them. Several temperance speeches were made by the white-ribboners. The army captain and his wife wear the little white knot of ribbon.

Kirkwood union has issued a little leaflet with monthly programs for the entire year and each woman is assigned a subject.

A STRONG resolution passed by the W. C. T. U., of Madison, concerning the situation at Yale, and a letter bearing upon the same, have been forwarded to President Dwight as requested by Miss Willard. A similar communication will be sent to Princeton University.

The fight at Washington over the Terry Bill is very earnest, also the Gallinger-Ellis Bill and the McMill-Harmer Bill. We have sent petitions to the congressman from our district in the United States Senate and House of Representatives to present these three measures. So you see we are not dead or sleeping, but engaged in active service for the overthrow of this monstrous evil. But the time has not yet come for us to be satisfied with ourselves or our work. The liquor traffic is becoming more and more deadly in its results and we are organized to grapple and strike strong, sturdy blows against it in defense of sober lives and pure homes.

Helen M. Brittin,

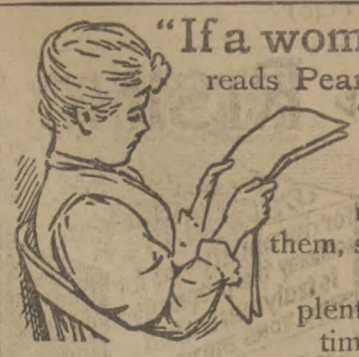
Arkansas.

IF our space in The Union Signal was proportioned to our membership it would be small indeed, but we trust that it may be rather proportioned to our needs. When we read in the last issue of our National organ that New Jersey claimed more than seven thousand eight hundred white-ribboners and glanced from her small space on the map to the outlines of Arkansas, we said that we ought to have double that number, but last year's minutes show but the "little leaven," three hundred and twelve.

In this sore need of help the coming of Mrs. Callie H. Howe, sent by our Mother National for a month's visit and work, is most opportune. She has spoken at various points and full report of additions to our membership will be sent later. At Eureka Springs she addressed the pupils in the schools, regular work being suspended that they might hear her. Then she held an afternoon meeting for the union and lectured in the Christian church at night. Her address was logical and its convincing arguments carefully prepared and well received.



Mrs. E. B. Ingalls of St. Louis, National superintendent of narcotics, is in Eureka Springs for a few weeks rest, but her interest in the work will not allow her to drop it entirely and she is keeping up her correspondence concerning anti-cigaret petitions and giving aid to local and state work as cannot fail to leave worthy impress in many lines. Usually our National officers can give us but such flying visits that her coming in this way seems an especial blessing.

Mrs. Dorsey has visited some places in the southern part of the state. We hope to have full report of conditions there soon. We are making some plans towards getting more work done and especially during our semi-annual no-license campaign which will end with our state election the first Monday in September.

Our state convention convenes at Newport in April. John G. Woolley will be among our guests then and will spend a month in the state.

All who love the cause of temperance and reform in Arkansas join with the good all over the world in sorrow for the loss of our Chieftain. There is but one monument that we can rear that is worthy of her. It is the monument of redoubled energy and devotion to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. May God help us to build it.

Wherever added richness is required in creams, jelly or pudding sauce, clear fruit juices, preserved in sugar, will be found most delicate and acceptable. To secure the best results from any recipe, the method of cooking must be observed.

Meat, fruit and cereals require the long application of low heat, while vegetables require quick and short application of heat in order to burst the starch cells.

HILL'S PRACTICAL ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA, edited by Thomas E. Hill, author of Hill's Manual of Social and Business Forms, and published by the Geo. M. Hill Company, is a five volume work built upon the plan of the ninth edition (A. & C. Black, Edinburgh) of the Encyclopedia Britannica. It comprises the vast scope of the original work as well as the ability in treatment of subjects, and at the same time brings the technical features of the larger work to a more practical basis. Throughout the work is profusely illustrated. There are over two thousand cuts and engravings, ten per cent of which are full page engravings. There are sixteen multi-colored lithographs showing the natural color of the races of men, color of birds, the silk worm, etc. For information and price address Geo. M. Hill Co., Chicago, Ill.

DAVID DOUGLASS AND HIS WIFE. By Mrs. O. W. Scott. (12mo, pp. 143. Chicago: Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.) A really good temperance story is so rare that it is a pleasure to find one brightly written, interesting in narrative, and strong in temperance argument. David Douglass wore the army blue when his country needed his services, and carried the soldier spirit into his ministerial life. Whether one fully agrees with all the sentiments of the writer, or not, the book is worth reading. Price, paper, 25 cents. Cloth, 50 cents.

Publisher's Notes.

Philanthropy Fund.

We have not made a recent appeal for our Philanthropy Fund, but we believe those more abundantly blessed will be glad to aid such cases as the following:

"All through the year 1897 I sent my copy of THE UNION SIGNAL out in Nebraska to a lady who is a member of a struggling union and doing what she can for the cause, but who, owing to trouble and hard times through almost total failure of crops for four years, has been and is now unable to subscribe for the paper. She was formerly a subscriber, but last year had to drop her subscription. I learned of her through the church home missionary, to whom I wrote for the name of some one to whom to send our church paper, never thinking at that time of sending more than one paper. I sent THE UNION SIGNAL containing an account of the National for 1896, and immediately received a letter of thanks from this lady, telling me how grateful she was to again see a copy of her paper. She then wrote me about their circumstances and deprivations, and how she had prayed that a way might be opened for her to have at least a little of the reading matter that she loved, and it seemed to her that my sending this one copy was providential. It is just one of the old stories of failure of crops and going without even necessary clothing for themselves and children. I feel an especial interest in this sister who is struggling through life bearing such heavy burdens, and who, although I never have met her, I feel sure is a sister in Christ as well as in the temperance work so dear to us all."

The Bible reading for March is furnished by Miss Cassie Smith, one of our well-known National evangelists. Subject, "Thoughts on God's plan of work and equipment for workers," the keynote being, "Not by might nor by power but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." The writer emphasizes the practicability of the Spirit's power, and says that the W. C. T. U. is in danger just at this point. We fail of best results because when in our "do-everything policy" we forget that it is God who worketh in us to will and to do. We make a mistake when we substitute doing for being. God has chosen us to be workers together with Him—to suffering as well as to joy.

The Responsive Reading for March deals with "Christian Citizenship and Legislation," and is written by Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, National superintendent of that department. She shows how this department is closely associated with other lines of W. C. T. U. work; tells how to become informed with regard to laws concerning women; speaks of the measures pending in Congress in which white-ribboners are specially interested, and explains why petitions should be sent, how to secure and forward them, with many other details our women want just now to know about. This is a most important Reading along the line of immediate effort for white-ribboners, and we can not urge its use too strongly upon local unions throughout the country.

From our Correspondents.

These are the words of an unfortunate white-ribboner: "I am under the necessity of discontinuing my subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL, as it is utterly impossible for me to raise the money for renewal. I have been hoping that the Lord would see fit to provide in some way so that I might not be deprived of your precious weekly visits, but it is not His will, and I must submit. I trust that the day will speedily dawn when I may once more become a subscriber."

Another welcome letter, containing $5, comes from Kansas with the following note: "I wish to thank you for your patience in waiting on me so long, but it was not in my power to remit till now. I shall be thankful when I receive my paper with that horrid tag changed, which has been a source of mortification for a long time."

Sabbath Observance.

A CALL FOR PRAYER IN BEHALF OF THE OBSERVANCE OF THE LORD'S DAY.

Inasmuch as avarice and greed, urged on by the intense competition which now exists in all branches of business, are striving as never before to gain control of the Christian Sabbath and secularize its hours, and mere physical pleasure is making serious encroachments upon its peace and quiet, its holy rest and worship, and unbelief with its handmaids—anarchy and godlessness—is openly defying divine and human laws, we earnestly invite all who love the Lord's Day to set apart the week following Easter, April 17th to 24th, as a time for special prayer for the imperiled Sabbath.

We suggest as suitable topics:

1. That good citizens may be led to give the ordinance of the Sabbath a new hearing, that its vital place in Christian civilization may be generally recognized, that Sunday protective laws may be provided for our national capitol, in the passage by congress of the Sunday Rest bill, that those states and territories which have no Sunday laws may secure them, and that existing laws may be better enforced.

2. That the working people may see the folly and sin of Sunday dissipation as involving also Sunday labor, and that a strong public sentiment may defend the weekly rest day as the natural and inherited right of toil.

3. That the Christian church may fully awake to the importance of the issue and Christian people set an example of consistent Sabbath keeping in their homes and in public life.

4. That the young may not wander from the restraining influence of a hallowed Sabbath into the perilous beginning of Sabbath demoralization, by Sunday cycling and trolley trips to pleasure resorts.

We respectfully ask pastors to observe some portion of Lord's Day week as a proper time to preach or speak upon Sabbath observance, and if possible, make it the theme of the Sunday-school, prayer-meeting and young people's meetings. We also request the W. C. T. U. and other organizations that are interested in the preservation of the Lord's Day to use the week for prayer and union meetings and practical efforts in its behalf.

The above call is signed by the official representatives of the various societies for the promotion of Sabbath observance. We hope it may be widely circulated and much Sabbath literature distributed. This department has published several new leaflets. Send for samples. Now is the time to hurry in your petitions for the District of Columbia Sunday Rest law.

SAPOLIO

Organizers' Corner.

On the Pacific Coast.

Since the National and the California state conventions I have labored in four of our far-off counties, three of them mining counties, where the need of our work is very great on account of saloons doing all they can to get the earnings of the men. Our work is a Godsend, because in many of these mining places the gospel is not preached except now and then by pastors who have a wide circuit to look after. Wherever a world is to be discovered God sends a Columbus, so in one of those mining towns where saloons ran rampant, God sent all the way from Scotland a dear Christian woman, who came to our state to seek health. She started a Sunday-school and labored hard to sow the first seed. Then last November I came. One of our white-ribboners drove me around to save stage fare. I organized a little union, only seven members, the mystical number. Miss Brydon, our Scotch sister, became its president. With renewed health she is ready to be spent in our work, and her great faith has inspired five more women to join. Others will surely follow.

We found they needed books for the Sunday-school, so the corresponding secretary, Mrs. D. Spencer, collected money for the very best of new books to be sent to our headquarters, and a week before Christmas a large case of beautiful books was sent to our union at Magalia to form a lending library, and many a drinking man goes now to Sunday-school, to be able to lend a book. We expect great results from this seed sowing.

I have organized, since our last convention, seven new unions. All have paid their state dues. This is one of the first duties.

Of course, it takes a great deal of letter writing. I always write the first year of a new union letters to the presidents and treasurers, asking, Are your dues paid? I assure you, it works like a charm. In that way we organizers help the first year to mother new unions.

We must do the work even if we do not get a dollar, trusting for the time to come when some of the silver and gold which are the Lord's shall come to us. If we are not ready to go forth unless we see so much money ahead, God will surely hold us responsible. Let us be faithful and leave results with Him.

HENRIETTA SKELTON.

DEAR ORGANIZERS:—A card from our secretary, Mrs. Addie Northam Fields, informs me that it is my turn to send a letter to our ingle-nook in THE UNION SIGNAL. This information took me by surprise, as I did not think that the organizers whose names preceded mine on the roll had yet done so.

I can not come with record of work accomplished, as duty to an invalid mother has kept me at home during the winter, but with the warm spring weather I trust renewed health will come to the sick one, and I shall be able to go into the field again. As the chairman of our board suggests the answering of some questions propounded in her lette. of December 23, I will reply to one by saying, that when asked by a white-ribbon brother "What can an honorary do?" I sometimes say, "The fact that you 'belong' will be a great encouragement to the union." Women turn naturally to men for advice in law enforcement and similar local work, and as men have had longer experience in such affairs, they will feel that in their honorary members they have a tower of strength. Brief addresses by white-ribbon brothers are an attractive feature of temperance mass-meetings and rallies. The dues paid by them are of practical help in purchasing literature, etc., and where men wear our badge it is not only an inspiration to the members and friends of the union, but it lifts up the standard of total abstinence for every man, woman and child who sees the knot of white. Men who believe in our work ought, for the sake of their own families, the community, and for Christ's sake, to stand by the women in their fight for the home against the saloon. Honoraries can greatly forward the work of the union by using their influence with church boards, pastors and business men to grant the requests of the W. C. T. U. If of musical tastes they can be of great assistance in organizing a white-ribbon choir.

These are some of the answers I give to the above question. Wishing each of our organizers a successful year, in the highest and best meaning of the word,

Your comrade,
LILLIAN WOOD.

DEAR SISTERS:—Believing that "we can not teach what we have not learned," I am wondering how some of our organizers can teach unions to be systematic and to be depended upon when they themselves fail to step into our Corner and "have their say" when their turn comes. Let us not be "weighed and found wanting."

I write you from the state of Arkansas, the sunny Southland, where there is so much need of our work and where it is so hard to convince the majority of the people of that fact. My meetings in this state have been more largely attended by the men than by the women, and they have given the best of attention and contributed to the cause. This has led me to wonder if there is not some way whereby we can utilize the power of our honoraries to better advantage.

It seems to me we might often do this by appointing them superintendents of departments they are interested in. There are lines of work they can superintend, locally, as well as our regular members, and as they have some active work to do, they will grow more interested in wearing the little knot of white ribbon, which of itself educates. The importance of always wearing it is not felt enough in our ranks, and should be impressed upon both active and honoraries.

At the close of the National Convention I went into northwestern Pennsylvania in search of health and rest, upon the old farm where I was born. While there I had the privilege of speaking in the court house, in Franklin, where years ago my dear mother, in the self-same court room, helped to organize Venango county's W. C. T. U. January 2, I began work in the fourth district of Missouri, and February 1, came to Arkansas for one month.

How different the work is here from what it is north, no one can realize until they have tried it. At Fayetteville, where the state university is located, not a church would open its doors for our meetings, except the little M. E. church, which is a very weak mission church, located on one side of the town. The ladies rented the opera house and the meetings were well attended, but only three women were added to the union. However, public sentiment will never be changed until we change it. "We build the ladder by which we rise," and not an effort put forth, in His name, goes unrewarded, although we may not see it. I would like to urge more temperance literature, more effort to interest the young people, more use made of our honoraries, more sacrifice, if need be, on our part.

Yours for richer harvests,
CALLIE H. HOWE.

THE famous Water Street Mission, New York, founded by Jerry McAuley, the converted thief, drunkard, ex-convict and noted river pirate, celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary on December 21 by two public meetings at Carnegie Hall. Addresses were made by Bishop McCabe, President Frank Moss, of the police board, and others. The Water Street Mission has been an important factor in the gospel temperance work of the metropolis, and for over eleven years has been in charge of Samuel H. Hadley, one of Jerry McAuley's converts.

"MEN in the liquor business in the United States, whether distillers, brewers, wholesalers or retailers, do not stand nearly as well in general esteem as men in similar lines of business in Europe. Their wealth is as great, their social qualifications are as good, and their intelligence as keen and alert as that of their European brethren." The editor of the Liquor Trades Review declares that this may be due to the ignorance or bigotry of the American public, but finally concludes that it may be due to the dishonesty of the men in the liquor trade who adulterate their liquors.

BELOVED of Earth! Thou art risen to the glory
Awaiting thee, high in the heaven of His love.
The heralds of God are repeating the story—
Thy story of trial and triumph—above.
The homage of hearts, like an incense, ariseth
Around thee, ascending, encircled in light;
The Spirit divine thy pure spirit baptizeth
With infinite beauty and marvelous might—
By the blood of atonement made spotless and white.

Beloved of Heaven! Great honors await thee,
Nor mind of a mortal their measure may know;
The ransomed extol Him whose love did create thee,
(A proof of His promise) He loveth us so.
The saints in the land of immortals and angels,
While lauding thy tender, beneficent grace
Make boast of the scope of thy human evangels
And plans of redemption to save a lost race
And win them to holiness, pureness and peace.

Beloved of God! How the Father rejoiceth—
Thy coming such garlands of gleanings doth bring!
The trophies thou bearest, thine adventures voiceth;
Thy treasure-trove greatly enhanceth the King.
Thy spirit, in youth, caught a glimpse of God's brightness—
Unveiled but to visions that steadfastly gaze
On His face, and thy soul, in the sanctified whiteness
Aflame, so translated His purpose and ways
As to render them ever a desire and a praise.

We mourn not, beloved! Nay! How should we mourn thee
Advanced to a throne, though our eyes may not see!
We love thee! Yet never to earth would return thee
When, safe in the heavens, thou art sceptered and free.
We crown thee "OUR LEADER" forever, anointed
By queenliest service our lives to enthrall;
Heaven sealeth the scroll by which thou'rt appointed;
We follow and serve at thy word and thy call,
'Till freedom and chastity cometh to all.

Biographical Sketch of Miss Willard.

BY MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS.

Acting President National W. C. T. U.

FRANCES E. WILLARD was of New England ancestry; she was born in Churchville, N. Y., in 1839, reared in Wisconsin and educated in Illinois at the Northwestern University of Evanston—the largest suburb of Chicago. Here was the family home for well-nigh forty years, and here, beginning in the public schools, Miss Willard, by what she liked to call "honest hard work," achieved the position of dean of the woman's department of the University, and professor of rhetoric in a faculty otherwise composed of men, nearly all of whom had been graduated from European universities. She herself studied abroad two years or more, from 1868 to 1870; French, German, Italian history and the fine arts being the subjects to which her attention was devoted. It was her expectation to be a literary woman in connection with her work as a college professor. She was perhaps more celebrated for her method of school government than for any other one thing at this time. She organized what amounted to a senate and house of representatives of the young women in the college, and practically placed their government in their own hands. This method worked so well for the good order of the institution and the development of a high standard of honor in the young women, that it has since been introduced into many colleges and public schools.

In 1862 Miss Willard wrote her first book, "Nineteen Beautiful Years," which was published by Harper & Bros., and with an introduction by the poet Whittier has been translated into several languages. She also wrote, "How to Win," a book for girls; "Woman and Temperance," a history of the W. C. T. U.; "A Classic Town," a history of the beautiful university town of Evanston; "A Young Woman Journalist," intended to inspire young women to take up a profession in which Miss Willard herself has been engaged for many years. "Glimpses of Fifty Years," her autobiography, of which fifty thousand copies have been sold, was written in 1889 by request of the National W. C. T. U. "A Great Mother" is perhaps her best book, containing as it does the theory and practice of bringing up children according to her mother's plan, and Madam Willard was, in the estimation of every one who knew her, a truly "great mother." Miss Willard's hand-book for the World's white-ribboners, entitled, "Do Everything," is packed full of hints and helps for local workers. She also wrote, "Women in the Pulpit," "How I Learned to Ride the Bicycle" and "Occupations of Women."

In 1883 Miss Willard and Miss Gordon made a temperance organizing trip, visiting each of the fifty states and territories of the United States, traveling thirty thousand miles or more from Puget Sound to the Gulf of Mexico, such a trip as has never been made by man or woman in any cause so far as we know. In the same year Miss Willard founded the World's W. C. T. U. of which she became president, and which has made the white-ribbon society known in every English speaking country of the globe.

In 1892 Miss Willard and Miss Gordon went to England by invitation of Lady Henry Somerset, who is their devoted friend and who leads the movement in Great Britain. Here they helped to develop white-ribbon methods, and to edit the English white-ribbon paper. Editions of Miss Willard's books were brought out, thus making her known to the reading public in the mother country. A great reception was tendered her in Exeter Hall, participated in by fifty philanthropic societies of London, with such speakers as Canon Wilberforce, Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Ormiston Chant, William T. Stead, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Rev. Mark Guy Pearce and several members of Parliament.

They returned to America from this visit in the summer of 1894, and Lady Henry Somerset came with them. The winter of 1894–95 was spent mostly in Boston. In March, 1895, they again went to England. Miss Willard and Miss Gordon came back in time for the National W. C. T. U. Convention held that year in Baltimore. April, 1896, Miss Willard made her last voyage to England, accompanied by Miss Gordon and Miss Powderly, her stenographer. It was in the autumn of this year that she and Lady Henry did their notable work for the Armenian refugees at Marseilles, and her interest in their welfare never waned. She reached her native land late in October, 1896, spent the following winter in Castile, N. Y., and the last summer of her life was spent mostly in New England.

She presided over the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in Toronto in October, 1897. Her address as president of that Convention was pronounced by many to be one of the finest, most powerful and eloquent that she had ever delivered. A few days later she presided over the National Convention at Buffalo, N. Y. The weeks intervening between this Convention and her translation, February 17, 1898, were spent in Chicago, Evanston, Ill., Wisconsin and New York.

Miss Willard originated the Polyglot Petition for the prohibition of the liquor traffic and the opium trade, which with seven million names and attestations of great societies was presented to the President of the United States in February, 1895, and in London before an audience of ten thousand people in June, 1895.

In 1894 the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon Miss Willard by the Ohio Wesleyan University.

HOW SHE CAME INTO THE WORK.

Miss Willard has repeatedly said to me that, when the Crusade came, she read of it daily in the Chicago Post, edited by her brother Oliver, and she, as well as her mother, became absorbingly interested in it; more so than in anything which they had ever read, except abolition and the anti-slavery war.

The winter of 1874 was a time of heart break to Miss Willard on account of difficulties in the Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill., and she resigned the presidency of the woman's college and her professorship in the university in June of that year. Attractive positions as the head of educational institutions were offered her, but she felt more and more drawn toward the women of the Crusade. She was not at Chautauqua when the preliminary committee was formed, but was at that time in Maine, consulting with Neal Dow, and in Boston, consulting with Dr. Dio Lewis. Meanwhile she wrote to Bishop Simpson, who had been a greatly honored friend of her family for years; also to Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, whom she and her mother admired more than any other woman they knew; and to other leaders, as well as to her own family, friends and relatives—not one of whom sent her a favorable reply except Mrs. Livermore, who encouraged her greatly and told her by all means to follow her leadings.

But Miss Willard's resolution to join the Crusade movement was taken independently. One morning in August of 1874 there came to her a letter from Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, who had led the Crusade movement in Chicago in the winter, asking her if she would come to Chicago and act as president of the local W. C. T. U. They were a weak band of middle-aged women, without financial resources, and Mrs. Rounds wrote Miss Willard that they could offer her no salary. On the same day that this letter reached her at Cambridge, Mass., Miss Willard received a definite offer from the principal of a ladies' school in New York city, near Central Park, offering her $2,500 a year if she would act as preceptress, teaching as little or as much as she pleased, but exercising a helpful influence over the young ladies and among the patrons. She was entirely without income, and had not laid up a penny, as those who know her do not need to be told; her mother was advancing in years, and Miss Willard was her only support; the Crusade movement had passed away, and there seemed to be a lull in the work; yet so profound was the impression that God called her to the work of the W. C. T. U. that she at once wrote to New York declining Dr. Van Norman's offer, and to Mrs. Rounds, accepting the position of president of the W. C. T. U. of Chicago, upon the duties of which she entered a few weeks later.

It was indeed well for this world that she thus decided. No woman has ever done so much to lift humanity heavenward. The one woman of the centuries! Best beloved, God crowned!

Our Leader's Promotion.

Miss Willard's Translation on February 17, 1898, at New York City.

Details of Her last Illness as Received by The Union Signal.

FOR months past Miss Willard's health had been a source of anxiety to her closest friends, but her own cheery hopefulness and her apparent strength during the Conventions lulled them into a sense of security. She left Chicago on January 10 for the east, intending to enter upon an active canvass for the Temple fund. Shortly after her arrival in New York she was attacked by influenza, and while the disease seemed difficult to shake off, there was no thought of immediate danger. A letter from Anna Gordon dated February 12 gave the first intimation that her illness was serious, and read in part as follows:

Our precious Miss Willard has been going through a siege of influenza for three weeks; we thought she would be up again by this time and much better for the rest and quiet in bed, but I grieve to say that she is extremely weak and her condition for the last three days has been serious, for while the same symptoms in most other persons would not be alarming, in her case they certainly are, for she has a minimum of strength with which to combat disease. We have had a trained nurse from the first and to-day I am asking for a consultation with Dr. William Draper, for all that love and skill can by any possibility suggest, must be done for our beloved.

On February 13 Miss Gordon wired to Headquarters:

Miss Willard suffering extreme exhaustion. Condition critical, not hopeless; improvement to-day.

This was followed on February 14 by a message which read:

Vitality remarkable; we have two trained nurses, two skillful doctors, and best of all, our Great Physician. Will wire frequently.

Later in the day she added:

Thanks for all your loving sympathy; God comfort us. Still hoping, but very anxious.

The next day our hearts were cheered by this message:

Slight change for the better at six last evening. Favorable conditions continue this morning. Heart's love to you all.

Under this same date, February 14, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, National vice-president, wrote to Headquarters from her home in Portland, Me.:

Your hearts are grieved and anxious, as is mine, over the critical illness of Miss Willard. I have held myself in constant readiness to go any hour if Anna thought I could be of any help. I have so wired her. I am praying, hoping, believing.

Later in the same day she wrote, on board the train en route to New York:

Anna asks me to come and I am going to comfort and to help if I can. I cannot believe God is to so afflict us. I am hoping, believing that she is to recover.

At this time a report went out through the daily press to the effect that Miss Willard was suffering with cancer of the stomach, which tended to increase the burden on anxious hearts everywhere. Mrs. Stevens, immediately upon her arrival, corrected this in the following message:

Disease not cancer of stomach. Drs. Hills and Draper deny it. It is exhaustion following grip. Hopeful. Love.

February 15 she wrote:

I reached here at midnight. The telegrams have told you that the change for the better came at six last night and she seems to keep about the same; retains the little nourishment she takes and is nearer conscious than she has been. I have seen her only as the drapery was drawn aside. The dear, pale, death-like face, and the pitiful little voice—it is all heartbreaking—but if God will only restore her—I believe He will. Anna thinks of everything; I have never seen such devotion as hers. Nothing is left undone to save her. We know all about the prayers at Headquarters. God bless and hear and answer.

The next day, Wednesday, she wrote again:

I have just wired you that we are encouraged. The doctor is devotedly attentive, the nurses the same; if love and skill can keep her she will stay. I will, of course, wire you if there is any positive change either way. I am sending out letters to all the members of the National executive, for I know how anxious they are. Lady Henry cables every day such tender messages. I have not yet spoken to her; the doctor said I might, but I thought I would better not. She moans incessantly, and turns her head from one side to the other constantly. She seems conscious; knows people and says some wonderful things. It is a great battle for life; I believe life here will win.

Thursday morning messages came as follows:

No decided change. Weak from pain and sleeplessness; still hopeful.

A general call to prayer was sent out from Headquarters, and at the noon hour Willard Hall was filled with a vast audience, the cry of every heart being, "Spare her if it is Thy will." Prayers were offered by Mrs. Stevenson, Mrs. Barker, Mrs. Metzgar, Mrs. Fry, Miss Hood, Miss Shontz, and every appeal for her restoration found an answering echo in the audience. It was felt that the last effort had been made and our Chieftain rested in the shadow of the wings that were to bring healing or a summons home, according to God's will. The gathering dispersed, each one to wait in silent prayer for the next message that should come over the wires. It came at three o'clock, and brought some measure of comfort:

Sleeping quietly after long insomnia; still hoping and claiming restoration.

There was little of rest or sleep that night for the devoted comrades who knew that the crisis had come, and both hoped and feared for what the morning might bring forth.

THE FINAL SUMMONS.

At three o'clock in the morning the news that the loved one had passed over came to Mrs.

Katharine Lente Stevenson from Miss Gordon in the following words:

Our precious leader has entered upon the activities that are not succeeded by weariness. The last of her household, she has been welcomed by Christ and His angels to be with her loved ones in Heaven's home, sweet home. Let us follow her as she followed Christ. God comfort us all.

A little later came a message from Mrs. Stevens:

The unfavorable change came about seven o'clock. Services here Sunday; Evanston, Thursday. God pity and comfort us.

Friday evening Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson and Mrs. Helen M. Barker left for New York to be present at the services there and escort the beloved form back to Chicago, leaving Miss Helen L. Hood in charge of the funeral arrangements in this city.

The Last Days.

OUR dear Anna Gordon, recognizing as she has always done, that Miss Willard belonged to the great host of white-ribboners and was upborne by their love and loyalty, has, at our urgent request, taken us into the "holy of holies," and in the midst of her own profound grief gives these sacred reminiscences of our beloved leader's last days on earth. Miss Gordon writes:

When Miss Willard decided to spend a few weeks in New York, Mrs. Barnes, accompanied by Miss Swankie-Cameron, of England, visited a number of hotels and boarding-houses to find a suitable home, for while there were several invitations from friends who would gladly have welcomed this beloved guest, Miss Willard felt that with three in the party, and so much paraphernalia in the way of books and papers, together with the large number of letters she was planning to send out, it was better for us to be where we would feel we were no burden to any one. Among other places visited by Mrs. Barnes was the Hotel Empire, pleasantly located up town near Central Park and the Riverside Drive, not thickly surrounded by business blocks or homes and therefore in the best atmosphere; but prices were found to be far beyond our possibilities. The genial proprietor, Mr. W. Johnson Quinn, expressed to Mrs. Barnes his very earnest hope that Miss Willard would come as a guest of the Empire and generously reduced the price of rooms about one-half, writing Miss Willard a delightful letter which she received in Chicago. In replying, after thanking him for his courtesy and generosity, Miss Willard told him the price was still far beyond what a reformer could pay, and that she would go to a quiet boarding-house down town which Mrs. Barnes had found later could accommodate our party, and we sent word to the lady in charge, who is a white-ribboner, that we would reach her home on Tuesday afternoon, January 11. Just before we left Chicago the following telegram was received, which brought the tears to Miss Willard's eyes and a quiver to her lips as she said, "This is something quite unusual; such kindness from a stranger touches me deeply." The telegram read:

To have as a guest at the Hotel Empire the author of so much good will more than recompense us. There will be no charge for your apartments. W. JOHNSON QUINN.

Our white-ribbon friend who had expected to entertain us was most generous and considerate in relinquishing her claim, and on Tuesday afternoon we were established in our pleasant suite of rooms at the hotel.

During the first week or two of our stay we drove for an hour every pleasant day, sometimes in Central Park, or down the beautiful Riverside Drive as far as the tomb of General Grant and back again, and late in that first week we spent an afternoon in the charming home of Miss Willard's niece, Mrs. Katharine Willard Baldwin, seeing for the first time the little grand-nephew, Summerfield. A few days later Mr. Quinn called on us and deeply impressed Miss Willard with his brotherly good will and his sincere wish that we should feel perfectly at liberty to stay at the hotel just as long as we pleased. "Why," said Miss Willard, "I thought we ought not to stay beyond a week," only to receive the reply, "You could not do me a greater kindness than to stay a year if you wanted to, and any time in the future if you are in the city I want you to feel that you and whoever is with you will be welcome to the best rooms at my disposal."

Early in the week, opening January 23, Miss Willard complained of great weariness and unnatural languor, but she kept bravely at work notwithstanding my pleading that she should rest a few days just then when she seemed so much to need absolute physical repose. During the morning of Thursday, January 27, she lay on the lounge in our bright sitting room while I read aloud to her, but early in the afternoon, at her own suggestion, the tired head was pillowed, and our hopeful hearts said a few days of rest and our loved one will be herself again. Dr. Alfred K. Hills, who had been Miss Willard's physician during the summer months, and under whose treatment she had been well-nigh restored to her old-time vigor, called frequently after our arrival in the city, and now assured us that although Miss Willard was suffering from a marked case of influenza, there were no symptoms that need give us alarm. Desiring that our precious charge should have skilful as well as loving care at once, Nurse Mary Telford was secured on the following Monday, a woman whose tender devotion to Miss Willard should forever endear her to the hearts of white-ribboners. On Saturday, February 5, Miss Willard sat up in her rocking chair for the last time (nearly three-quarters of an hour), and dictated a letter to Dr. I. K. Funk, of the New York Voice, in regard to the sale of liquor in New Haven. That afternoon she asked me to take the letters from her table, some of them still unanswered, and put them all away, saying, "Nannie, that's the first time I was ever willing and ready to let you do this." The little package of letters and various memoranda were placed at her request in the "green bag" given her by Lady Henry, and carried all these later years, and which hung where she could see it from her bed.

Sunday afternoon, the 6th, she enjoyed a long call from her nephew and niece, who brought a diary of the baby's life, from which I read to her that afternoon and the next day. Among others who called during those earlier days of Miss Willard's illness, and who were allowed by her physician to see her a few minutes were, Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, Mrs. Dr. Niven, of Dobbs Ferry, Miss Helen Gould with her cousin, Mrs. Snow, and Miss Susan B. Anthony.

On Wednesday, the 9th, some roses came with Mrs. Fessenden's card, and Miss Willard dictated a word of loving thanks. The same day she wrote a brief note to her close comrade and devoted friend, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, and this, with a letter to Lady Henry are the last penciled lines we have, save a pitiful bit of writing attempted the next morning, which it saddened our hearts to see was quite unintelligible, save the word "love." She asked for paper and pencil and wrote with characteristic rapidity, but there was no strength to guide the tired fingers.

On the morning of Thursday, the 10th, Miss Willard asked me to bring paper and pencil for an important memorandum she desired to give me. "Don't fail to put it down," she began, "that I have always recognized the splendid work done in 1874 by the women of Washington Court House, and that while I regard Hillsboro as the cradle, Washington Court House is the crown of the Crusade, and" she added, "Fredonia must always be remembered as the home of the first local W. C. T. U." She asked me to send some souvenir and a message of special remembrance to Mother Thompson, to Mother Stewart and to Mrs. Zerelda Wallace. Mrs. Dio Lewis had called the day before, and as I told Miss Willard of her visit she talked much of the early days of her acquaintance with Dr. Dio Lewis, of his part in the Crusade movement, and said that she hoped that at the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Crusade our Convention would take some action in regard to having a day for the special and grateful remembrance of the work of this early reformer. She talked of the Polyglot Petition, and her great wish that more signatures should be secured, and spoke of the hope she had cherished that she might help in its presentation to the Dominion of Canada, and thus aid the plebiscite campaign, but she added, "I feel I shall never do it, and I want you to ask my friend, Colonel Bain, to make that speech for me." The annual meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association for next May was much on her mind, and she spoke frequently of it, and of her plans regarding it, which plans we mean to sacredly carry out.

Again and again she asked if I had remembered her request that I should send to THE UNION SIGNAL and to The Voice, to "Stevie" and to "Katie" and to "Agnes" (Slack), and to the friends in Canada, letters urging coöperation in the observation of General Neal Dow's birthday as Prohibition Day. She spoke of the Mothers' Congress, hoped it would be a great success, and wished that Dr. Mary Wood-Allen might speak for her there.

From the very first of Miss Willard's illness she did not think she would recover, but her physician and nurses assured her to the contrary, and we all vainly endeavored throughout those long days of enforced quietness to make her believe her earthly work was not done.

Sunday afternoon, February 13, she talked much of the Temple and told Dr. Hills its history; the forces that had helped and the forces that had hindered the enterprise so dear to her heart, and the Doctor said, "If you will only get well, Miss Willard, we will create a great enthusiasm and get that Temple paid for, but to get well is the first consideration." "Oh, no," she said, "I think you could do it better if I didn't get well. I know our women, Doctor. Oh, there have never been such women as our white-ribboners—so large-minded, so generous, such patriots, such Christians. We have had a great beautiful past and the people don't know it, they think we are fanatics. It has been a great fight, and they'll never know what we have been through." "Oh, how I want our women to have a new concept of religion; the religion of the world is a religion of love, it is a home religion, it is a religion of peace, and tell them, tell them not to forget it is a religion of patriotism. We have set up to be patriots, we white-ribboners, and we have fought amidst much ostracism. Oh, tell our white-ribboners to study the New Testament; I love the New Testament. No human being has ever conceived as he should what the New Testament means by loyalty to Christ."

During the night of the 13th she pointed to the photograph of Christ, a life size head taken from Hoffman's picture in which Christ and the sinful woman are the central figures, given to her at Christmas by Lady Henry Somerset, and she said, "He can do everything for us." Then she talked much about Lady Henry in terms of the most loving endearment, and said I must carry that picture to her as a parting gift. "Oh, no, darling," I replied, "you are going to get well and you know we shall sail just as soon as you are strong enough, and you must take it to her yourself." "No, no, when I take that picture to England cosmos will have become chaos. You must take it to her, and you must have in pretty letters that she would like, up at the top, the words, Only the Golden Rule of Christ can bring the Golden Age of Man, and underneath you must put what Christ said to the woman, 'Neither do I condemn thee, go and sin no more;' then don't forget to put the word Hoffman down in the right hand corner so that everybody will know he painted this beautiful picture.'"

She asked lovingly about her comrades at the Temple, and "Little Beauchie" (Mrs. Beauchamp), and wanted to know if I had told them how ill she was. "Yes," I said, one of the very last sad days, "they do know, and they are all so sorry." Then mentioning each name I said, "They are sending you such beautiful letters and telegrams every day, all of them." "How good," said the faint, tender voice, "give each one of them my love, but Nannie, they'll be sadder before they are gladder."

On Monday, the 14th, Miss Willard remembered that it was Valentine's day, and that on the 13th my dear mother had celebrated her birthday, and thinking of one whom she had lovingly called "mother" since Saint Courageous went away, she said, "Give my dearest love to Mother Gordon and to Bessie. How nice it is that Alice (Mrs. Gulick) could be here to help you, and how I wish Saint Cordelia might have come." (She referred to Dr. Cordelia A. Greene, of Castile, N. Y., whose helpful medical skill was freely and lovingly bestowed on her for many weeks last winter.)

That day beautiful flowers were received from Mrs. Burt and from Mrs. John R. McDonald, county superintendent of the flower mission department. Miss Willard held the bright bouquet from Mrs. Burt close to her face and enjoying its fragrance she said, "Dear Burtie, kind Burtie, give her my love." To the other gift from one she did not know so well, but whose loving kindness she deeply appreciated, Miss Willard said, "So sweet, so lovely of her," and turning to the nurse she added, "You see we have a superintendent of the flower mission department in each state and county, and wasn't it kind of this dear one to remember me?"

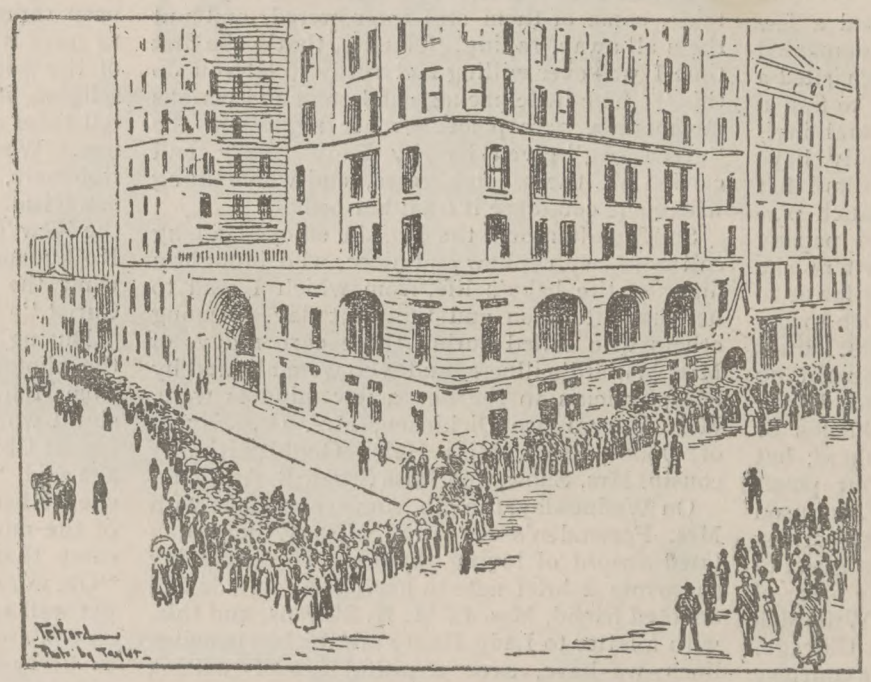
In the evening Mrs. Barnes sent in an illuminated card bearing the text, "Unto you which believe He is precious." In the shaded light of the room I thought Miss Willard could not distinguish the words, but as I held it near her she slowly read them and said, "Thank dear Fannie, and tell her it is the loveliest valentine I ever had in all my life."

On Tuesday, the 15th, Miss Willard became extremely restless and piteously begged us to take her to the home of her friend, Mary Lathbury, in the suburbs of the city. She spoke of Rev. John M. Scott, author of a devotional book, "Kindly Light in Prayer and Praise," which she had greatly enjoyed studying, and wished he might come to see her. So earnest was this desire that we at once sent him word, but by the time he reached the hotel Miss Willard's condition was so critical that Dr. Hills felt the interview should be postponed until the next day.

That morning Mrs. Baldwin came bringing lilies of the valley to her aunt, and saying as she placed them in her hand, "Here are some of grandma's flowers for you, dear Aunt Frank." Beds of these fragrant lilies used to nestle close to Rest Cottage and were Madam Willard's pride and delight. When Katherine's sister Mary was a wee tot, she was asked by her grandmother one Sunday morning what the minister had preached about. It was early spring, the beautiful lilies were in full bloom and the sweet child responded, "Why, grandma, he talked about the lily of the valley of the shadow." As our best beloved held the flowers now, her face brightened and she murmured, "Lilies—of the valley—of the shadow." Then, though we little dreamed it, came the last talk with one of her very own, which included loving messages to her sister, Mrs. Mary B. Willard, in Berlin, and to each of the nephews and to her niece, Mary Bannister Willard. This conversation reminded Miss Willard of Evanston days, and later I was given commissions regarding her neighbors and friends in the old home, and a special message to her dear and long-time friend, Miss Katharine A. Jackson.



Miss Willard lived over the Janesville days at "Forest Home," and talked much of Rock River and her happy childhood, while the poor, weary head tossed incessantly from side to side. Night came, and we tried in vain to quiet her to sleep and as I knelt beside her, smoothing her head, she said, "Sing 'Hush, my babe,' perhaps that would put me to sleep." I sang it over and over again until I heard her say, "How strange it is, I should think that would make me sleep; you sing it so sweetly; suppose you try, 'Gently, Lord.'" In Rest Cottage days that was a favorite hymn at family prayers, and one morning, long ago, she had changed the second line, which reads, "Through this gloomy vale of tears," to one more consonant with her concept of life, "Through this vale of smiles and tears," and thus I sang it to her now. On reaching the last two lines I could not recall the words. She quickly prompted me by saying, "'Till by angel bands," and thinking only of her I finished the hymn,

'Till by angel bands attended,
I awake among the blest.

"Oh, no, not I, it's we, it's always we; Christianity is we, not I; you know it's our Father, don't forget that. Now sing it again, please, and sing it 'we.'" She then looked up at the picture of Christ that hung on the wall opposite her bed, and with the old eloquence in her voice, in the stillness of that never-to-be-forgotten night she said:

"I am Merlin, and I'm dying, but I'll follow the gleam, but I am getting so tired, how can I follow it much longer?" Soon she said, "He giveth His beloved sleep, but, oh, sometimes He is a long time doing it." She spoke of Mrs. Browning's "De Profundis," and said, "The next time you read that poem you will think of this day, the longest and the hardest of my whole life." Again she said, "Oh, let me go away, let me be in peace, I am so safe with Him. He has other worlds and I want to go. I have always believed in Christ; He is the incarnation of God." Speaking of Lady Henry as she did so often that night and always, she said, "She did everything for me and was so good." Toward morning she whispered, "I want to speak to you quite alone," and bending near her to catch every faintly spoken word, I received this sacred message: "I want to say what Mary and I used to say to each other away back in the old days on the farm when we were going to sleep. I would say to Mary, 'I ask your pardon and I thank you,' and she would say, 'I freely forgive you and I thank you,' and then we would change about with the same sweet words of forgiveness and gratitude. I want to say that to you and to every white-ribboner and to everybody."

Opening her eyes for a moment she said, "Where's Stevie? I should think she would be here a night like this." Dear heart, little did she know that at that moment her precious friend was just outside the door listening in agony of spirit in the hope that there might be a change for the better. Early on the morning of Wednesday Dr. Hills asked Mrs. Stevens to come in and sit with Miss Willard a little while, and as she took her hand Miss Willard said, "Oh, Stevie, I am so sick, I felt sure you would come," and then in her thoughtful fashion she inquired for each member of Mrs. Stevens' family saying, "How is Mr. Stevens—and Gertrude—and Olive? and Agnes over the sea—and Cornie Dow,—and Mrs. Merrill?" (who for years had the department of homes for homeless children.) The nurse was giving Miss Willard some vichy and nothing would satisfy her until Mrs. Stevens had shared it with her, when with breaking heart she left the room feeling that all Miss Willard's slender strength must be conserved for the mighty struggle that was in progress.

THE TEMPLE AND PROCESSION TO WILLARD HALL.

It will always be a personal grief to me that these, the last hours of our glorified one, could not be shared with those so dear to her by long association and tender love, but her physician felt that with a brain so active and a body so weak there must be the utmost quiet. Telegrams and letters poured in upon us from Miss Willard's nearest and dearest friends begging to be allowed to come, until that little room from which a great soul was soon to pass to heaven, became the center of thought and prayerful solicitude for thousands. Relatives and many dear friends were daily informed of Miss Willard's condition through the unwearied kindness of my sister, Mrs. Gulick, who came to us on Saturday, and Mrs. Stevens, for whom I telegraphed on Monday. Mrs. Barnes, Miss Willard's warm friend since the early days in Chicago, was like a sister in her daily ministries. Flowers constantly brightened the sick room, from the delicate orchids gathered in the conservatories of the rich, and sent with heartfelt love, down to the bright jonquil blossoms brought by the waiter who had served Miss Willard's meals from the dining-room. Daily telegrams came from Mr. and Mrs. Quinn, who were in Atlantic City on account of Mrs. Quinn's ill health, expressing their sympathy and placing at our command every resource the hotel afforded.

Of one faithful heart I must specially speak; dear "little Mamie," who with unexampled self-sacrifice sat at her typewriter from morning until night sending news to aching hearts about their beloved one when she might have been in the sick room ministering to her whom she so deeply loved and had so devotedly served. Whenever she came quietly into the room on an errand, Miss Willard would know it and would say, "Why, there's dear little Mamie"; and would have for her, as always, some pleasant word.

Several times on Wednesday, the 16th, Miss Willard asked if her "letter from home," as she loved to call THE UNION SIGNAL, had come, and as late as the morning of Thursday, that last day God let us have her with us, she said, "Please let me sit up and let me have our beautiful SIGNAL." She had become much attached to Mrs. Westover Alden, editor of the woman's page of the New York Tribune, whom she familiarly called "Bushy," from the title of the book Mrs. Alden has written about her childhood, and very early that same morning when she begged to be allowed to sit up Dr. Hills helped us raise her in the bed, when she turned to me and said, "Now won't you bring me Bushy's paper?" She was soon laid back upon her pillows, when taking Dr. Hills' hand in hers, she spoke tender, appreciative words about her friend and physician, of which the last were these, "I say, God bless him; I shall remember his loving kindness through all eternity."

A little later Mrs. Hoffman called. Miss Willard seemed to be unconscious, but as Mrs. Hoffman took her hand Miss Willard looked up and said, "Why, that's Clara, good Clara; Clara, I've crept in with mother, and it's the same beautiful world and the same people, remember that—it's just the same." A cable message full of tenderest solicitude and love came from Lady Henry and after reading it I placed it in her hand and she said, "Oh, how sweet! Oh, how lovely—good—good."

At one o'clock the little thin, white hand—that active, eloquent hand—was raised in an effort to point upward, and we heard for the last time on earth the voice that to thousands has surpassed all others in its marvelous sweetness and magnetic power. It was like the lovely and pathetic strain from an Eolian harp on which heavenly zephyrs were breathing, and she must even then have caught some glimpse of those other worlds for which she longed as she said, in tones of utmost content, "How beautiful it is to be with God."

At seven o'clock hope died in our yearning hearts, for we saw that the full glory of another life was soon to break o'er her earthly horizon. Mrs. Katherine Baldwin, Mrs. Stevens, Mamie Powderly, Mrs. Barnes and Mrs. Gulick were called, and reverently we knelt about her bed as the life immortal, the life more abundant, was coming in its fullness to this great inclusive soul, whose wish cherished from her youth, that she might go, not like a peasant to a palace, but as a child to her Father's home, was about to be fulfilled. Later in the evening Mrs. W. J. Demorest, Mrs. Emilie D. Martin and Mrs. Teetor, of New York, who had come to the hotel to make inquiries, joined the silent and grief-stricken group. Slowly the hours passed; there was no recognition of the loved ones about her. There came an intent upward gaze of the heavenly blue eyes, a few tired sighs, and at the "noon hour" of the night Frances Willard was "Born into beauty

And born into bloom,
Victor immortal
O'er death and the tomb."

The stillness was broken only by sobs as we closed the earthly eyes of one who was always a seer, and who now beheld the King in His beauty and the land that she so often said is not far away. My sister, Mrs. Gulick, said, "Dear Father, we give thee back Thine own," while my stricken soul responded, "And we thank Thee for taking her so gently."

With sublime trust the broken-hearted women clasped hands and amid their tears tried to sing in unison with the great white-ribbon family in heaven and earth,

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love."

Before the early dawn we carried the precious form to the home of her niece. "How radiantly beautiful she is," said all who saw her, "surely it is majestic sweetness that enthrones her brow." Victory as well as the peace of God was in her looks, and so natural seemed her sleep that Katherine's little son sweetly called to his aunt as he was lifted up to look at her, and in his baby innocence tried to awaken her that she might take his pretty rose. The young mother's heart was deeply stirred, and she said, "Aunt Frank was just a dear, sweet baby herself, besides being the greatest woman in all the world." All through Miss Willard's illness Dr. Hills' noble nature was moved by this remarkable blending of childlike simplicity and commanding genius. With a brotherly devotion and in consultation with eminent physicians he battled for her life and did not fail to recognize his dependence on God.

The nurses, Miss Gertrude Lee and Mrs. Selmer Beyer, who were with us during the last week, were unwearied in their loving care, not merely from professional interest, but because they were irresistibly drawn to their patient as to a friend and sister.

To thousands of hearts who read the sad tidings in the morning papers there came the sense of irreparable loss and personal bereavement. Cables, telegrams, letters and flowers came hourly to the sorrowful group at the hotel who, because of the great love they bore her, must not weep—but work.

From east and west, north and south, came World's and National officers and superintendents, state presidents, white-ribbon sisters, prohibition brothers, ministers, editors and friends, bringing floral offerings and seeking to comfort and counsel one another. The common bond of love for our translated leader had brought them and each day quiet groups filled the hotel parlor, while hot tears fell as they said, "Can it be true?" "How strange it seems with so much gone of life and love to still live on." None sorrowed more truly than Miss Mary A. Lathbury and Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, both endeared to Miss Willard by long years of close kinship of soul.

The room from which went home the blessed spirit of "Saint Frances," as Bishop Vincent calls her, will be forever hallowed. Friends came to it one by one as to a sanctuary. The only picture that adorned the walls was the Christ on which the closing eyes had rested, and just below this on the writing desk were grouped photographs of the dear ones loved and lost awhile and a miniature of Lady Henry Somerset.

Bright, fragrant flowers from Olea Bull Vaughan, of Cambridge, and a potted white azalea sent by Mr. and Mrs. Hull, of New York, gave a message of joy and hope though the rain had not ceased to fall and the storm to beat against the windows since that winged soul had taken its flight.

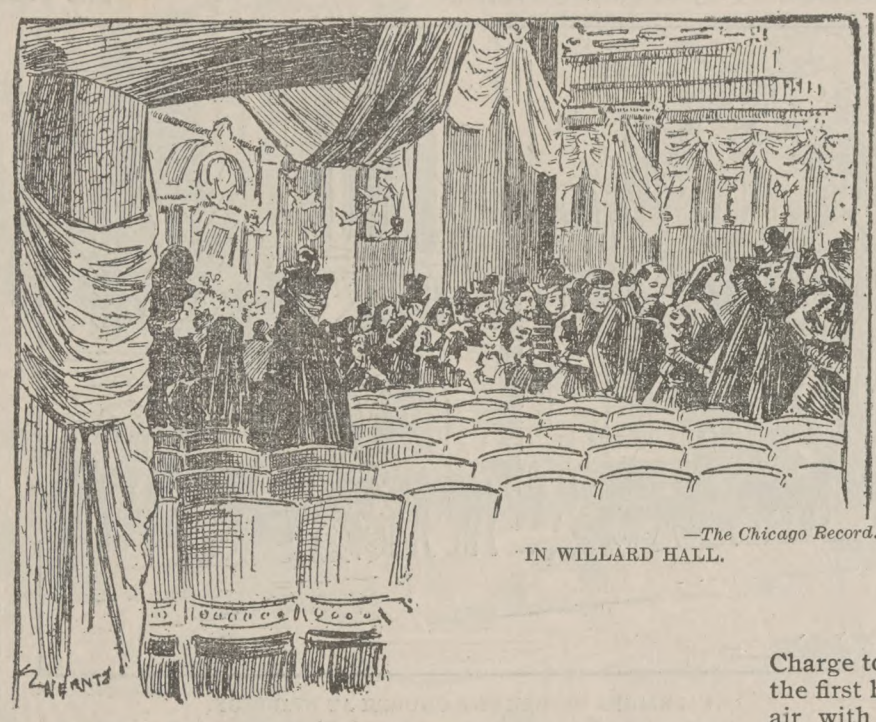
Many a silent prayer was offered from an aching heart and chastened spirit. "It is well" with her they said, and praise ascended to Him who through His own victory over death had given their beloved an abundant entrance into the blessed Homeland.

Frances Willard, sweetest and strongest of souls, full of pathos and power, of wisest statesmanship and gentlest humor; beautiful with the love of "God and home and every land"; lover of nature, of books and most of all of pitiful humanity; peerless leader; great-hearted, unselfish, transcendent friend; glorified saint of God! richly hast thou earned the joy upon which thou hast entered.

Speed on thine errands of love unfettered by thy garment of flesh! Now thou art breathing thy native air. The continent of immortality is thy fitting home.

We would gaze up steadfastly into the heavens; we would fain follow thee into "the sweet, the strange Beyond." But we hear thy beloved voice cheering us on, "Protect the Home,"

"Hold the light up higher, higher,"



"Help your fallen brother rise
While the days are going by."

Yes, poor, weak mortals that we are, our best and holiest endeavors shall be devoted to thy cherished plans while life lasts. Then, and then only, shall we in some little measure be worthy to see thy dear face again.

The New York Services.

BY KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.
Corresponding Secretary National W. C. T. U.

ALL Nature united to express the grief and desolation which filled our hearts during those weary days when our best beloved one was lying cold and still in death. As Mrs. Barker and I neared New York on that never-to-be-forgotten Saturday's journey, we found ourselves in the midst of a cold, dreary storm of wind and rain. On Sunday the wind had so increased in violence as to be almost a hurricane, and the rain was coming down in floods. There was no abatement to this torrent of Nature's tears, but rather an increase in volume as the hours wore on, thus seeming, to our sad hearts, to give another expression to the great truth that the whole creation groans together in the weight of a common anguish and the longing for a common redemption.

IN WILLARD HALL.

At one o'clock on Sunday afternoon a brief, informal service was held in the home of Miss Willard's niece, Mrs. Katherine Willard Baldwin, 85 Clinton Place, whither the loved form had been carried on the morning following her death. Stifled sobs filled the room as we gathered around all that remained to sight and touch of our great leader. Never had she seemed so great, never so beautiful as in that hour. She lay against the soft white linings of her gray casket, not with the look of the vanquished, but with the look of the conqueror. Every care line had vanished from her exquisite cameo-cut face, and there was over it not alone the hush of a great stillness, but the awe of an infinite wonder—the radiance of an eternal joy. It was difficult to believe that she was dead. Such an effulgence of light radiated from every feature that it seemed as if it could mean only life—as indeed it did, the foregleam and afterglow of the life more abundant into which she had entered.

She was robed in a soft white gown, trimmed with delicate lace; her beautiful brown hair was arranged in the old familiar way; on her breast was the white ribbon and upon her heart a floral heart of lilies of the valley and cape jessamine, the gift of Lady Henry Somerset. In the dear white hand which had for so long beckoned us forward, were lilies of the valley, and across the skirt of her gown was an exquisite spray of mareschal neil roses. The flowers of earth she had so loved were all about her and the perfume of the immortal flowers of the life beyond seemed to fill the room and all our hearts.

We sang with hushed voices, "Blest be the tie that binds," after which several brief prayers were offered and verses of Scripture quoted; then Mrs. Stevens led in our own W. C. T. U. benediction, which was followed by the temperance doxology, and then we went out from that home, made sacred forever, to the Broadway Tabernacle—the church in which that voice now hushed had spoken for the last time in New York city.

Miss Gordon followed next to the casket, the one who, of all others, had earned the right to that place; behind her came Mr. and Mrs. Woodward Baldwin, then Mrs. Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin, Sr., Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, Miss Elizabeth Gordon, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, Miss Mary Powderly, and the General Officers of the National union. The presidents of states as honorary pallbearers came next, and superintendents of departments in World's and National unions, evangelists and other white-ribboners who had been at the home followed. In that order we walked down the aisle to the solemn strains of Chopin's funeral march, while the soft gray casket, covered with the white banner, and encircled by a broad white ribbon, was borne aloft upon the shoulders of six stalwart young men. Dr. E. S. Tipple repeated from the Methodist burial service, "I am the resurrection and the life."

The main body of the house had been reserved for white-ribboners and it seemed as if the little emblem gleamed from almost every dress in the large galleries as well. What would have been done with the crowd had the day been fine it is difficult to imagine, for, even under such untoward circumstances, the church was crowded to its utmost capacity.

The service began with the singing of "Hark, hark, my soul," by the choir of St. James M. E. church, led by Paul Ambrose, who also acted as organist. Rev. E. S. Tipple, D. D., pastor of St. James church, and for years a close friend of Miss Willard, was the officiating clergyman. Rev. A. E. Kittredge, of the Madison Avenue Reformed Church, delivered the invocation and prayed earnestly for the cause which Miss Willard had so loved. Rev. Frederick B. Richards, assistant pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle, announced the hymn, "A Charge to Keep I Have." He said: "This was the first hymn she ever heard. It was the holy air with which her father sang her into the land of slumber when she was but a babe. Let us sing it to her as she now rests in eternal slumber." The 39th Psalm was read by Rev. R. S. McArthur, D. D., and Miss Cassie Smith, one of the evangelists of the National W. C. T. U., led in prayer:

Oh, Lord, we thank Thee for the privilege of prayer. Thou knowest how we need Thee, and while we do not know how to tell Thee of the bereavement and sorrow that is upon us Thou knowest it, and we come into Thy courts as Thou hast taught us with thanksgiving. We thank Thee that Jesus came into the world to die, and we bring to Thee our breaking hearts to-day and thank Thee that Thou art able to minister to our particular needs. We praise Thee on behalf of our best beloved who has served the present age, and we magnify the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ to-day in that she was enabled so to endure the ordeals that came to her in her pilgrimage that they were made a blessing to herself and others. Oh, we praise Thee that this heart was filled with love for God and humanity, that Thou didst lead her every step of the way, and that some of us were permitted to see her in the last conventions. We thank Thee that although our leader has gone from us our Saviour remains with us. We will lift our eyes up unto the hills and just now, dear Master, while we praise Thee for the ministry of her life, we plead for the ministry of her death, and we ask that more may be accomplished by this affliction that has touched every nation of the world than was accomplished by her life. She represented the Master in that she went about doing good among the children of men. Dear Lord, we praise Thee that Thou didst say Thou wouldst send a Comforter to remain with us; may we have the abiding Comforter as we follow on. O Jesus, magnify Thy grace in us, carry on the noble work that she has commenced through those who remain. We pray Thee to raise up others who shall take our places when we, too, shall "follow that way." For Jesus' sake. Amen.

Rev. Charles L. Thompson, pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church, in announcing the next hymn said "This best beloved of women especially loved this hymn, 'Lead, Kindly Light,' and the light has led her on."

Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, of Maine, in a voice broken with emotion said, "I will read from her Bible the 90th Psalm." Following this Psalm Mrs. Mary T. Burt, president of the New York state union, read the hymn, "Blest be the Tie that Binds," reminding white-ribboners, in a few touching words, of the many times our great leader had announced this hymn at the close of a National Convention, when with clasped hands we had sung it together.

Rev. Charles H. Payne, secretary of the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal church, read the familiar lesson from the 15th chapter of I Corinthians, and Bishop John H. Newman, an old and valued friend, led in prayer:

Gracious God, Father in heaven, forgive us if we mourn to-day amid this general grief, but we thank Thee that we do not mourn as those without hope, for Thou hast given us hope, and we come to Thee with thanksgiving upon our lips for all Thy loving kindness unto this beloved, whom Thou hast taken unto Thyself. We praise Thee for her parentage. We thank Thee for her power, for her imperial intellect, for that vast amount of useful knowledge acquired to render her mission efficient and successful, and we thank Thee above all things for her loyalty to Jesus Christ in good report and in evil report, for her philanthropy, for her sympathy with the suffering humanity of all continents, and we bless Thee for her noble convictions, her purpose to elevate the race to sobriety and to purity. We return Thee thanks to-day for her, we bless Thee for our association with her in the great reforms of life, for the sweet influence she exerted upon us, for the noble example she showed before others. She was steadfast amid all trials, and we rejoice in that beautiful Christian life she lived, that noble heart, that consecration of all her powers to Thee, which made her to have but one object in view—to do Thy will on earth as the angels do it in heaven and to glorify Thy holy Name. And we bless Thee for that quiet death that Thou didst give her, that she might peacefully fall asleep in Jesus, and her spirit ascend to Thee, her Creator and her Redeemer. Now we ask thy blessing on all those noble enterprises in which she was engaged, that they may reach a glorious consummation. Grant, we pray Thee, that this cause of sobriety which she pleaded with such eloquence, and of personal purity, Christian purity—this cause of temperance may become a universal fact. May the governments of the world put forth a power that shall restrain inebriety; may the legislatures of the world hasten to the redemption of humanity from all the evils that grow out of intemperance, and we pray especially that Thy blessing may rest upon those noble women, these sisters that were banded together, consecrating their hearts and their lives and their fortunes for the accomplishment of these great purposes. We thank Thee, though our departed one has passed from life, yet she lives in thousands of lives, lives in the thoughts, the affections, the aspirations of many. We praise Thee for this corporate immortality. We pray that this organization which she represented may be under Thy guidance, under Thy heavenly inspiration until the great work shall be accomplished.

And we pray especially for that dear woman who was her traveling companion on sea and land, whose pen was the pen of a ready writer; and bless that precious woman beyond the seas, the companion of our departed one, who is to-day thinking of this funeral occasion. May that noble woman be sustained by Thee.

Hear and answer us, and when this brief life is done, may it be well done. May all our powers having been consecrated to Thee, attain to a glorious consummation, and may we be more and more consecrated to those great interests that will bring about the millennium of Thy glory. May we be more and more the instruments of Thy power, so that at last when life is over we may sleep with Jesus and meet this precious woman and the thousands who have gone before, and above all, Christ, our Lord. And unto the Father, Son and Holy Spirit shall be the glory, world without end. Amen.

Dr. Tipple announced the last hymn which was, of all others, most loved by Miss Willard:

"Gently, Lord, oh, gently lead us
Through this gloomy vale of tears,
Through the changes thou'st decreed us,
Till the last great change appears," and requested that the second line be sung as she had long ago changed it:

"Through this vale of smiles and tears."

At least two thousand people, with sad faces and heavy hearts, filed past the bier for a last look upon the face of "the best loved woman in the world." As the white-ribboners of New York state passed each one placed a white carnation—the state flower—upon the casket. Other women placed other flower emblems, until it was massed high with blossoms.

Among the white-ribboners present were the presidents of Maine, Massachusetts, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Missouri, while the District of Columbia was represented by Mrs. Clinton B. Smith and Mrs. S. D. La Fetra. Mrs. Frances J. Barnes represented the World's Union, while the board of superintendents for both World's and National was represented by Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey and Mrs. S. L. Oberholtzer. National superintendents present were Mrs. Emilie D. Martin, Mrs. C. M. Woodward, Mrs. Ella M. Thacher, and Mrs. Mary D. Tomlinson. The organizers and lecturers were represented by Mrs. Emilie U. Burgess and Mrs. Mary Seymour Howell, while Mrs. Jennie Fowler Willing and Miss Cassie Smith were present from the board of evangelists. (Miss Greenwood, the World's and National superintendent of evangelistic work, had been invited to take part in the services, but was out of the city filling engagements. Letters and telegrams followed her from place to place only to find her at last in a little Connecticut town when it was too late for her to reach New York. This was a great grief to Miss Greenwood, who fondly loved Miss Willard, as well as a disappointment to all who felt that it would be most appropriate to have the services of her whom Miss Willard loved to call "Our white-ribbon pastor.")

Among the other well-known names may be mentioned Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, Miss Mary Lathbury, Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, Mrs. W. Jennings Demorest, Mrs. Isabella Charles Davis, Miss Alice M. Guernsey and Mr. Samuel Dickie. The National Temperance Society was represented by Joshua L. Baily, Rev. James B. Dunn, Rev. T. L. Cuyler, Rev. Dr. T. L. Poulson, Wm. T. Wardwell, Francis Crawford, A. A. Robins, Colonel Fred N. Dow and many others.

The church was a bower of beauty. Tall palms filled the pulpit, hiding the choir completely from sight, while wreaths and banks and clusters of exquisite flowers were everywhere, breathing out their perfume as had been breathed out the perfume of her life.

From the church the body was carried again to the home of Mrs. Baldwin where it remained until the sad journey westward which began at 9:15 on Monday evening.

CARRIAGES BEFORE THE CHURCH AT EVANSTON.—The Chicago Record

There were several touching incidents connected with the beginning of the journey. As the casket was taken from the house a waiter from the Hotel Empire stood at the door in reverent silence with bowed head. His heart had been deeply touched by Miss Willard's personal kindness and he had gone a long distance to pay this last tribute of respect. At the station many dear friends gathered, among them Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, Madame Demorest and Mrs. Isabella Charles Davis. Young Mr. Wagner, of the Wagner Palace Car Company, was there, and had personal supervision of the car so generously placed at our disposal, but the figure of all others which would have attracted her attention was that of an old colored woman, with the white ribbon pinned upon her dress, who, between her sobs said, "She was a good friend to my people. I loved her." Anna Gordon, with her quick tact, took from the casket a cluster of lilies of the valley and placed them in her hands, and then the car moved away, while we each said in our hearts, if not with our lips, "Was ever woman so loved as Frances Willard?"

Journey From New York to Chicago.

BY HELEN M. BARKER.

AT 9:15 Monday evening the near friends, who, with the General Officers, made up the sad party of ten who were to accompany the casket containing all that was mortal of our departed leader, found themselves in the beautiful Wagner car, "Newcastle," which had been so generously furnished by the New York Central R. R., to transport the party to Chicago. Soon after leaving the station we gathered in the state-room, where rested the flower-covered casket, and sang with tearful pathos,

"In heavenly love abiding
No change, my heart shall fear."

Mrs. Stevenson offered a prayer of tender devotion, and we repeated the twenty-third Psalm.

Miss Gordon recognized in the porter on our car the one who had accompanied Miss Willard and herself six weeks before on the trip from Chicago to New York. Even in that brief journey she had won his heart. He said, "It can not be that Miss Willard is there," pointing to the casket.

We reached Rochester at nine o'clock Tuesday morning, where our car was detached and taken by special train to Churchville, fourteen miles away. This was Miss Willard's birthplace, and the residents had made such earnest appeals to have her brought to them once more that the friends had consented. When we reached this little village in the midst of a snow-storm, it seemed that the whole town was there. Had she been a near relative of every one, the faces could not have been sadder. The casket was borne by gentle hands to the hearse and to the church, which was established years ago by Miss Willard's grandfather, and is known as "The Church of God." It is a Congregational church. On our way thither we passed the pretty little brick cottage where began fifty-eight years ago this wonderful life.

The church was beautifully decorated with flowers, but the loving words and the flowing tears of these old neighbors were more eloquent than flowers. There were many relatives present but the dear old aunt for whom Miss Willard had especial love and care, was too feeble to be at the services. Rev. Mr. Henderson, pastor of the Presbyterian church, gave out Miss Willard's favorite hymn, "Gently, Lord, Oh, Gently Lead Us," and Rev. Mr. Gaul, of the Methodist church, offered prayer which was often responded to with sobs.

Rev. Mr. Henderson then said

There is no time this morning for an address, and I feel that words fail at this moment to express our great sorrow, and yet our gratitude to our great Heavenly Father who raised up one of our number to do such mighty things, and has now in His own good time taken her to Himself. It is a time for tears. Just a few months ago she stood upon this platform, and to many of those who are gathered here to-day to mourn, uttered these words at the very beginning of her address: "A common sorrow and a common hope, for all who suffer from the liquor traffic have brought us together and have enlisted our sympathy and our interest in this great cause of temperance." We may be pardoned in this little obscure village, almost unknown beyond geographical boundaries of our own town—we may be pardoned if we say there is gratitude and pride that God sent out from this little town one who has been named the uncrowned queen of the American people. To-day we place the crown upon her brow and call her the crowned queen. We ought to think of those words which she spoke here as she lifted up her eyes and heart to God and said, "The stars fought against Sisera," as she reminded us of that time when God's mighty power took hold of her own heart and sent her out to be the leader of her sisters and friends and co-workers everywhere in temperance work, to pull down the strongholds of the rum traffic and to raise the truth of God and the righteousness of God and to bring purity and peace and happiness to the hearts and homes, not only to those of our native land, but to the world. Only a few weeks ago, almost within hearing of this place, she said to me personally, "When the Lord is through with my work He will let me go and let me know; I do not worry about the call." So to-day we think of her as gone from us in body but as with the Lord in spirit, and in the world to-day and forever a mighty power always to be remembered by those who will be inspired by her loyalty, her love, her self-sacrifice and her devotion. As we say farewell to the bodily presence of our beloved friend and sister, we lift up our souls to her God and we crave to-day the inspiring power of that Spirit who gave her a brave heart to be courageous in many a storm, and a clear brain to carry her through many perplexities.

Mr. Henderson read a letter from Mrs. H. T. Bissell, vice-president of Monroe county. "Nearer, my God, to Thee," was sung and the services closed with prayer and benediction.

Then the old friends passed around to take a last look of the beautiful face of her they loved so well.

At Churchville Miss Anna Gordon received the following telegram from Miss Willard's physician at Castile, who had cared for her most lovingly all last winter.

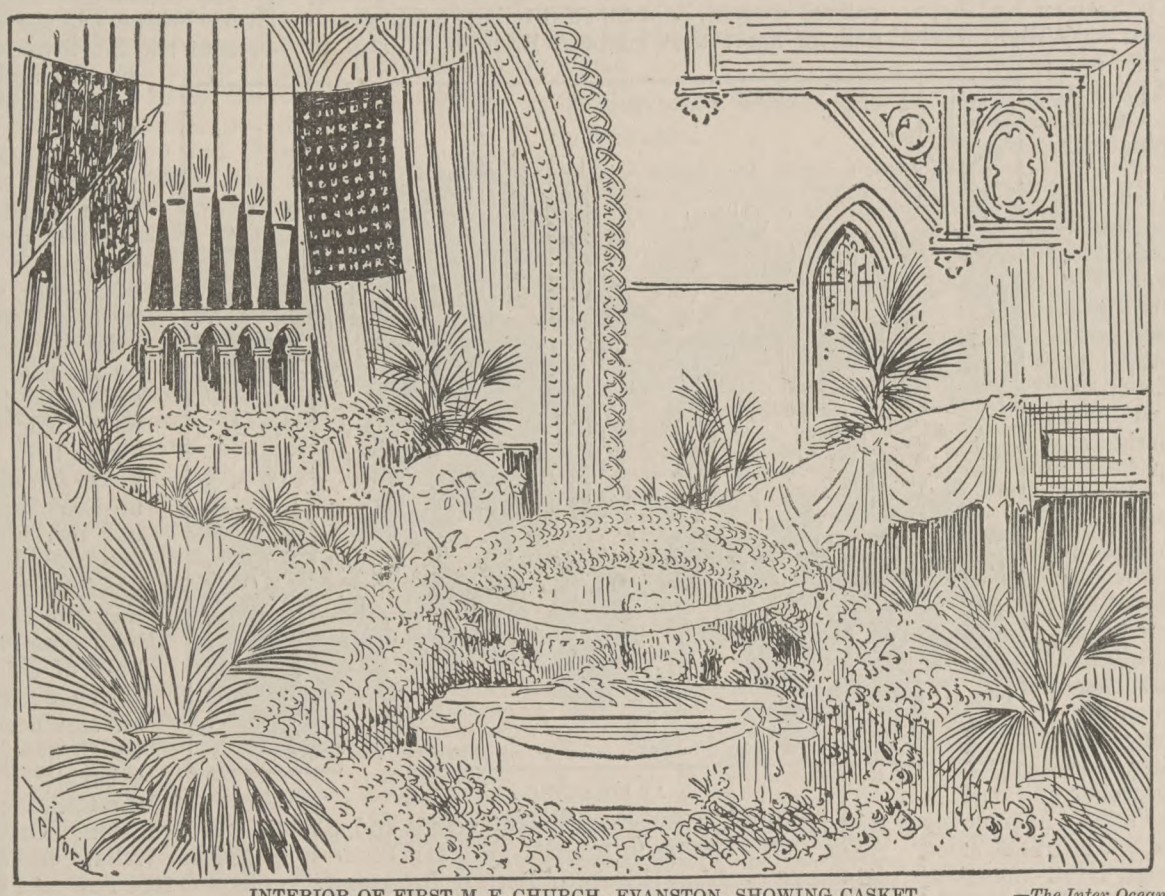
With you in spirit to-day; sympathy but exulting hope. CORDELIA A. GREENE.

Rev. Mr. Henderson introduced Mrs. Helen M. Barker, National treasurer of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, who spoke as follows:

Our hearts to-day are filled with sorrow, but are filled also with rejoicing. We rejoice in this life that has been given to us and to the world; we rejoice and lift up our hearts in thanksgiving to the Giver of all good who has enabled her to accomplish so much for the world, for all those who are afflicted and oppressed, and we see in her mission the mission of Christ, for she went forth doing His work. During her last illness, in speaking of this religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, which was the secret of her power, she said, when she seemed partially delirious and yet was perfectly rational, "Tell the world it is a home religion, it is a religion of peace. Tell the world it is the religion of love, tell them it is a patriotic religion." In her life she honored Christ; she did not lose her faith in Him. He was her strength and inspiration. Churchville claims her, Janesville, in Wisconsin, claims her, Chicago claims her, New York claims her, the world claims her; yes, England claims her especially. She did not belong alone to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She belonged to every organization of women, to every organization of men and women that worked for the uplift of humanity, for the regenerating of sinful hearts. Oh, hers was a wonderful mission, and to us who have worked with her closely for the last twenty years, with her in executive counsel, with her at the altar of prayer, we who know what she was to us and to our work, realize our great loss as others can not. But while we mourn yet we thank God for Frances Willard to-day.

We want to honor her in every one of our hearts, and how are we to do it? These flowers are fond tributes to her memory, this gathering is a tribute to her, but, my sisters, and especially my sisters of New York (she was from New York, we belong to New York most of us here), I say, my sisters, how can we honor this loved one most? and I answer, not with the flowers, not by this service, which all appreciate and which we love to bring, but we can honor her better by being faithful to the work she loved. Do we lack courage? Let us pray that some of the indomitable courage which she possessed may be ours. Are we inclined to criticise? Oh, let us have her spirit of charity and love. In all my acquaintance with her I think I never heard a disparaging word spoken of any worker that our beloved did not find some word of excuse for that one, and she would say, "Oh, we do not know, perhaps she does not look at it just as we do; perhaps she does not see it from our angle of vision."



And now my message to you, my sisters, this morning in the words of Paul, is, "Remember my bonds," and when we are led to criticise one who does not think or speak as we do, let us remember that there may be something hidden away out of sight that binds, something in the home that cripples, something in the early education that hinders, something in the vision that handicaps, and so let us emulate that love, that sympathy, that charity that she so beautifully exhibited in all her life. We look at her beautiful form and say, "She is gone," but, oh, she has not gone, she is here to lead yet, she will be our leader, and I believe from the battlements of glory she will watch our work. I believe she will still inspire, I believe she will whisper to our consciences thoughts of what we may do and what we ought to do, and, my sisters, how much we need her! But the Lord who led her is leading us to-day, and oh, this may be a time of consecration, insomuch that from this day forth the Woman's Christian Temperance Union that she so loved may be such a power in the world as it has never been before. Then she shall be honored!

We say, "How brief her life, she should have lived twenty years longer"; and yet my brethren and sisters, if we measure her life not by days and weeks and years, but by the great work she has accomplished, by the enterprises she has inaugurated and carried on to victory, she has rounded out a grand old age, she has accomplished more in the fifty-eight years of her life than many of us would do were we to live one hundred and fifty-eight years. Into that brief span has been crowded so much of brain power, so much of heart love, so much of the burden of humanity, and oh, how beautifully she has borne it. I say there has been crowded into this life so much, that it has been a long, grand life—a life so broad that it has reached to the extremities of civilization and Christianity; a life so deep that no poor soul had ever sunk so low that her love and sympathy could not reach it. My sisters, let us praise God this morning, that we have been permitted to come into close relationship with her beautiful spirit, and then let us honor her by going out to do the work that she would exhort us to do faithfully. Let us in this divine presence pledge to her, pledge to God, pledge to each other, that we will be more loving, more faithful, more self-sacrificing, more devoted, and that we will honor her by honoring the God she loved and the work to which she gave her life and which she has left to us.

With generous thoughtfulness the people of Churchville had prepared a lunch for all friends, and when they found we must be back at the depot so soon they sent a well filled basket to the train. Fifty white-ribboners came from Rochester to attend the services and from all the country round about people came to pay the last tribute of love and honor to the most distinguished woman that Monroe county had sent forth for the world's work.

When we reached Buffalo we found a great crowd at the depot and nearly one hundred women that "belong" passed through our car, bringing floral offerings, viewing the casket and silently shaking our hands. While tears fell thick and fast, we sang with subdued voices, "Blest be the tie that binds." As our last convention was held in Buffalo, these dear women who had worked so hard to care for us, seemed doubly afflicted. Mrs. Viola Shingler and Mrs. W. H. Leek, two sweet singers of Buffalo, sang a most beautiful and comforting duet as the women passed slowly by. Rev. O. P. Gifford, D.D., a good friend to the W. C. T. U. and an ardent admirer of Miss Willard, with several other men passed through the car with the women.

Our train, somewhat belated, pulled into the Grand Central depot in Chicago, at 9 A. M., Wednesday, and here we were met by relatives and a host of friends. Thus ended a memorable journey. At Rochester and Buffalo representatives of the New York Central and the Michigan Central had come on board to offer any assistance in their power that would add to our comfort. The thanks of everyone in the party were expressed for these kindly courtesies, which we realized were tributes to the beautiful life closed here but gloriously begun on the other side.

INTERIOR OF FIRST M. E. CHURCH, EVANSTON, SHOWING CASKET. —The Inter Ocean.

Arrival in Chicago.

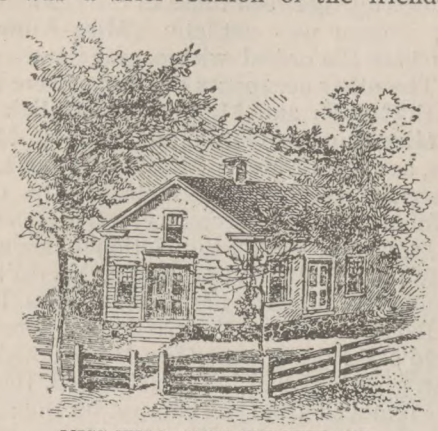
WHEN the train came into the Michigan Central depot it was met by the active pallbearers, Messrs. E. W. Blatchford, James H. Norton, David B. Carse, W. J. Onahan, Joseph L. Whitlock, John Sobieski, David H. Christophel and Oscar Crandall, the honorary pallbearers, and a part of the guard of honor.

The women who composed these two bodies were: Honorary bearers, National Officers, State Presidents or their representatives, National Superintendents, Mrs. C. F. Grow, for the W. T. P. A.; Mrs. M. B. Carse, for the Temple; Mrs. S. M. D. Fry, for THE UNION SIGNAL; Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, for the Temperance Hospital; Mrs. C. H. Case, Crusader; Mrs. Moses Smith, Crusader; Miss Jane Addams, for Social Settlements; Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson, Chicago Women's Club. Guard of honor: Helen L. Hood, Mesdames J. B. Hilton, M. E. Metzgar, E. Waddell, H. L. Clarke, M. A. Gordon, T. C. Reiley, M. Inglehart, Robert Greenlee, C. A. Leech, M. Howell, C. E. Bigelow, Oscar Crandall, H. M. Lemon, Joseph Emerson, Clara C. Chapin, A. E. Carman, M. B. Horning, L. R. Hall, L. A. Hagans, L. B. Tyng, Ralph Greenlee, M. E. Kline, E. Warner, C. G. Davis, Misses Ruby Gilbert, Marie Brehm, C. A. Leech, Sara Johnson, Eva Shontz and Alice Bond.

The meeting between those in the car and the waiting women was pathetic. Miss Anna A. Gordon bore the ordeal with courage and calmness. The other occupants of the car were Miss Elizabeth Gordon and Mrs. Gordon Gulick, sisters of Miss Anna A. Gordon; Mrs. Lilian M. N. Stevens, acting president; Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, recording secretary; Mrs. Helen M. Barker, treasurer—all of the National executive; Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, of Maine, World's superintendent of peace and arbitration; Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, of New York, General Secretary of World's Y Branch, and Miss Mary Powderly.

When greetings had been exchanged, the casket was removed from the car and on the shoulders of the eight pallbearers was borne to the waiting hearse. The procession slowly moved out into the swiftly falling snow that turned the green of the palms and the gray of the silken waterproof that covered the casket into a shimmering, shining robe of white, fit clothing for the body which reposed within.

Following the casket came Miss Anna A. Gordon on the arm of Robert A. Willard, then the four cousins of Miss Willard, Mrs. Joseph Emerson, Mrs. H. M. Lemon, Mrs. Oscar Crandall, Mrs. C. E. Bigelow, and after them the guard of honor and the women who had come from the East.



The procession was escorted from the depot by a specially detailed platoon of policemen, but there was no need of the police to make way when the hearse drew up before the door of Willard Hall, and the casket was slowly and reverently taken out and raised to the shoulders of the bearers. Instantly the crowd fell back and every man bared his head. The doors were thrown open and the women of the guard of honor passed through, and as they went they sang "Rock of Ages."

Then along the tessellated corridor which Frances Willard had so often trod, past the fountain and into the hall, the casket was carried and laid down in front of the platform that is consecrated by the daily offering of prayer.

It is not in the power of human pen to describe such a scene. Beautiful Willard Hall was decked as for a bride, the work having been done under the supervision of Mrs. M. B. Carse, assisted by Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co., who furnished the material for drapery, Messrs. Charles A. Stevens, D. B. Fisk and Gage Bros., who contributed 170 yards of white satin ribbon, and Messrs. Vaughn, I. C. Silliman, H. F. Halle, George Wittbold, florists, and the Schiller Floral Co., who gave floral decorations to supplement the individual pieces. Windows, pillars and the balcony rail were draped in softest white, each graceful fold caught up with a cluster of calla lilies tied with white satin ribbons. Palms were in each window and formed a bank of green both in front of and at the back of the platform, enhancing the beauty of the countless floral offerings whose perfume filled the air, and with the white doves, emblems of peace, poised as if in flight, combined to make a fitting shrine for the casket wherein reposed our white-ribbon queen. It was the altar on which was laid love unspeakable, devotion and loyalty, as the comrades of many years circled about it and sang with brave but broken voices, "God be with you till we meet again." They sang on, while the tears fell like rain, soldiers who would close up the ranks and carry the battle to the enemy's gates, even though the commander had fallen in the thick of the fight.

When the casket was uncovered and they looked upon the dear form at rest after the weary weeks of pain, peace fell upon every heart. There was a brief reunion of the friends who stood closest to her, and then the hall was opened to the waiting throng who had come to pay a last tribute of respect to Frances Willard, the friend of humanity. Fifty policemen had been especially detailed for service at Willard Hall and they rendered efficient aid, preserving through the trying ordeal of handling such a crowd, a quiet, deferential demeanor in keeping with the occasion.

Chicago has never seen such a spontaneous offering as the multitude laid at the feet of our Chieftain, for it was an offering of love. The flags of the city floated at half-mast and many of the public schools were closed. For an hour before the little funeral procession came to the cross-surmounted portal of the hall there were crowds waiting for admission, and for another hour they patiently stood on the wet pavement, with the cold wind sweeping in sleety gusts against them, before they gained admittance. During the day twenty thousand people passed down the aisle, each one pausing a moment by the casket. There were children that had to tiptoe to look, and there were decrepit men and women who leaned upon their sons or daughters for support to their tottering footsteps. Many hobbled in on crutches, and some looked as if they might have newly risen from a bed of sickness. Multitudes stood in line for hours, and through it all there was no evidence of morbid curiosity. The beautiful decorations were a secondary matter to the desire for one last look upon the dear face of the one who slept long and well. Particularly touching to white-ribboners at Headquarters was the entrance of the employés of the printing department of the W. T. P. A., some eighty men and women, led by the business manager, Mrs. C. F. Grow. Miss Willard always felt a peculiar interest in every one connected with the work of the publishing house, in whatever capacity, and had the love and loyalty of the whole force.

A small table at the head of the casket bore a white floral lyre bearing at its base the words, "Home Guard," this being Miss Willard's characterization of the Illinois forces; the floral offering from Lady Henry Somerset, and Miss Willard's well-worn Bible. To the left stood the floral tribute of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, a fac-simile of the first page of THE UNION SIGNAL with the significant date line, "February 17, 1898." On the foot of the casket rested a beautiful sheaf of white hyacinths, lacota leaves and bleeding hearts, the offering of Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, and on the floor beneath them stood Miss Willard's traveling grip and handbag, the latter crowded full of letters and telegrams, mute evidence of the varied interests that the weary hands had laid down.

The beautiful floral offering sent by Miss Lillian Whiting, of Boston, bore these lines so in keeping with the scene:

Lilies of love and peace for thee!
Music and prayer and minstrelsy,
For all thy white-souled purity!

All day long there were strains of sweet music floating through the room, furnished by a choir of fifty voices under the direction of Mr. Archibald Macnair, the Willard Hall chorister. The familiar hymns that Miss Willard loved best, "He Leadeth Me," "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," "When the Mists Have Rolled Away," were interspersed with beautiful solos and other selections rendered by Miss May Hill, Mrs. C. F. Kimball, Mrs. W. J. Austin, Miss Margaret Macnair, Miss M. E. Pratt, Mrs. S. N. Schneider, Miss Lillian Kessler, Mrs. L. W. Whitmer, Mrs. Ada M. Sheffield, Mrs. D. W. Campbell and the quartette of Bethany Deaconesses. Mrs. W. G. Austin presided at the organ, and was assisted by Miss Hill, Miss Jennie Lois Williamson, Mrs. L. L. Dillon, Mrs. S. N. Schneider and Miss Grace Kessler. The efforts of the choir singers were greatly appreciated, there being no interruption to the musical program during the six hours' service.

At the noon hour a brief service was held. Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, World's superintendent of Y Branch, spoke tenderly of our fallen leader; prayers were offered by Mrs. Annie O. Rutherford, president of the Canadian forces, Mrs. Moses Smith, a Crusader, Mrs. Frances Beauchamp and Mrs. S. M. I. Henry. Mrs. Lucy Thurman, superintendent of work among colored women, paid especial tribute to the greatness of heart that enabled Frances Willard to take into her active sympathies all creeds and all races. Mrs. Louise S. Rounds gave this beautiful quotation from Elizabeth Barrett Browning:

"And friends, dear friends, when it shall be
That this last breath is gone from me,
And round my bier ye come to weep,
Let one most loving of you all
Say 'Not a tear must o'er her fall;
He giveth his beloved sleep.'"

In the afternoon Col. French, of the Salvation Army, came in, accompanied by Miss Eva Booth, who had just arrived in Chicago on her way to the Northwest territory. With them were a number of young women wearing the Canadian fur cap with its Army badge of red ribbon across the front. At the coffin the Salvationists knelt, and Miss Booth prayed.

At four o'clock Miss Hood was unwillingly obliged to direct that no more people should be admitted, and many hundreds were turned away disappointed.

Bishop John H. Vincent offered the final prayer. "We give thanks," he said, "for the life led by our departed sister, for her loyalty to righteousness and purity, for the sweet charity that burned in her heart, dwelt in her eyes and went forth in the sweet echoes of her voice. We pray that, inspired by her example, we may live the same strong and earnest life and do good service in the cause she loved so well."

Once more the hymn that has echoed through convention halls was sung, "God be with you till we meet again," the gray casket covered with the white-ribbon star spangled banner and a wealth of blossoms, was raised to the shoulders of the bearers, and the Chieftain was carried from the hall that will henceforth have a deeper consecration to her followers because of her last, brief tarrying there. The procession to the Northwestern depot was accorded notable courtesy by the hurrying throngs of people, and at the station the funeral party was given two private parlor cars by the Wagner company.

Hundreds of citizens and the students and faculty of Northwestern University met the body at the Evanston station at 5:30 o'clock and the pall-bearers who had acted in the ceremonies at Chicago, transferred their charge to the students of the college. Six of their number took the casket tenderly upon their shoulders and bore it to the waiting hearse. The cortége then formed, a guard of students following the hearse on foot to Rest Cottage, the National officers and guard of honor bringing up the rear in carriages. The short journey was soon made and the little cottage resounded with the notes of "Home, Sweet Home," sung with faltering voices, as the still form of Frances Willard was borne into the home she loved so well.

Services at Evanston.

FOR a week, cloud and wind, rain and snow and sleet, had held stormy sway, but the last day of public tribute and farewell was glorious with sunshine.

All Evanston gave up the day to do reverence to the memory of their most beloved citizen. Every business house was closed; college exercises at the Northwestern University were suspended and the high school pupils were dismissed. Flags hung at half mast.

At the door of Rest Cottage—truly a place of rest for that quiet form so often wearied in the stress of life—was tied a wreath of evergreen gathered by the W. C. T. U. and L. T. L. of Oberlin, O., from a hedge planted by Miss Willard's father.

In the quiet parlor, all unwearied by the passing of the silent throngs of Wednesday, she lay—"at home" for a little time. Death was kind. Though he had claimed her earthly house for almost a week, he had laid no mark upon the quiet face that had met him with a smile. But it was the first time that this most gracious of all hostesses had failed to greet her guests at the cottage with outstretched hands and ready heart of help and love.

The decorations were not many, but significant. In the bay window, which was banked with palms, hung a wreath of violets and roses from the Catholic Little Sisters of Visitation, of Evanston. On an easel stood a bas relief of Madam Willard and a picture of her daughter—face to face now and forever. In the fireplace was a cluster of fragrant green bearing this card: "Sweet-brier that Frank planted, Janesville, Wis." The brier root has outlived the little hands that cherished it so long ago, but when the ground shall no more remember its green herb, the world will still hold fresh and fair the memory of the Chieftain.

FIRST SCHOOLHOUSE WHERE MISS WILLARD TAUGHT.

The atmosphere of the little parlor breathed naught but cheer and the brightness that was always associated with the presence of its mistress. Friends passed quietly in and out until the hour set for the final services had arrived. The words of the familiar hymn, "How Firm a Foundation," came sweetly and clearly through the room, then, standing beside the quiet form of her friend and leader, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, of Maine, prayed tenderly, with breaking voice:

Heavenly Father, come near and tenderly and pityingly hover over us at this hour. We thank thee for the precious life of our beloved—so full of beauty and nobility. Help us to understand what she meant when she said, "How beautiful it is to be with God." Help us to know more of that other-worldliness of which she spoke and taught. We thank thee for all the precious memories that cluster around Rest Cottage; for the life of St. Courageous; for all of the holy influences which have gone out from this home. Wilt thou in tender love bless the niece and nephew of our beloved and the other family members who are with us to-day and the absent ones wherever they may be. Wilt thou bless and comfort the one who has been to our promoted leader helper, companion, more than friend, who has been faithful even unto death. Wilt thou console that great heart over the sea who is cast down by this great sorrow. Remember the white-ribbon sisterhood everywhere. Bless the world—for she loved the whole world. We humbly pray in the name of Christ whom she loved so much and served so loyally. Amen.

Again the quartette sang, "Gently, Lord, oh, gently lead us," and the following benediction was pronounced by the venerable Professor Emerson, of Beloit, Wis.:

Now may the blessing of the loving Father who has called the dear daughter home, and of the loving Brother who has led the dear sister to the Father's house, and of the loving Holy Spirit which was the breath of her life here, and is so there, be and abide with us all that we may be now and forever with the Lord. Amen.

Then the precious burden was once more taken up and borne out of the home that had been to the last, "Rest" Cottage.

AT THE CHURCH.

Despite the tens of thousands who on Wednesday had gathered to look upon Miss Willard's face, reverent, patient thousands gathered in and about the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Evanston for the funeral service. Love had outloved itself in lavish expressions of tenderness, through flower and fern and palm and draperies of symbolic white. Behind the pulpit hung a silk flag on whose standard was a gold plate bearing this inscription: "This standard flag of America and the World's Columbian Exposition was carried at the head of the Dedicatory Procession Oct. 22, 1892, and presented to the Board of Lady Managers, World's Columbian Exposition, May 1, 1893, by George S. Knapp and George M. Knapp, Chicago." Also: "This flag has traveled over 4,000 miles of this country and always floats in the interest of liberty, peace and arbitration. It floated over Miss Willard in life and we want it to float over her in death."

Two large American flags hung from the organ and the stars and stripes draped the speakers' chairs.

The words of the solemn processional were read by the Rev. Frank M. Bristol, pastor of the church, who led the long line of mourners. Following, came the faculty of the Northwestern University, President Henry Wade Rogers at their head, and pastors of the Evanston churches. Then came the casket borne on the shoulders of six pallbearers, students of the college: Clay Buntain, George H. Tomlinson, Clarence Thorne, A. G. Morse, S. J. Reid and Harry Little.

The relatives and closest friends came slowly after. Miss Anna Gordon first, then Mrs. Katharine Willard Baldwin, of New York, and Robert Willard of Florida, daughter and son of Miss Willard's brother Oliver. Other relatives followed, also Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick and Miss Bessie Gordon. The honorary pallbearers and guard of honor came next, filling the seats reserved for them in the body of the church. All eyes and hearts turned to the pearl-gray casket, and it is doubtful if many ears took note of the strains of Beethoven's funeral march in organ tones soft and low, or the words of life and resurrection read by Dr. Bristol.

"I wonder if she knows," was the tender, unspoken question of many a heart, as the coffin was placed before the altar, amid such a scene of holy beauty as even she for whom it was, had rarely seen in life. On the floor beneath the casket was a rug of roses and violets, and forming a radiant arch over the beloved sleeper was a rainbow of spring's blossoms—violets, the tender blue of hyacinths, the living green of smilax, pale yellow daffodils and the deeper glory of the crimson-touched tulip—a bow of promise shining through the clouds. She has gone beyond the glory of the rainbow, but for the comrades who follow, the "everlasting covenant" remains.

Beneath the rainbow, and caught away from the casket by a hovering dove, was a broad white ribbon bearing in silver letters these words, the last spoken on earth, and, may it not be, the first enraptured cry of the soul set free from mortality: "How beautiful it is to be with God."

The rainbow-arch was the design and gift of Anna Gordon and Miss Amelia Pemell, World's superintendent of flower mission work. It was fitting that the one whose heart has known its dearest joy in strengthening the hands and lessening the burdens of Chieftain and friend, should at the last surround her with the emblem of God's promises, and that the department whose mission is comfort should thus "speak comfortably" of life and hope to all who mourned.

From the rose-crowned pillars that supported the arch, around and within the altar, up to the open Bible on the pulpit, beyond to the music stand of the choir, were flowers, the fairest that could be found—wreath, cluster, pillow, harp, gates ajar, anchor, crown, massed blossoms, pots and boxes of "growing things abloom," trailing vine, fern, evergreen. It was a picture never to be forgotten, but the heart of it all was a gray casket enshrining the outward form of her whose life was ever of the simplest. The air was sweet with the breath of the coming spring, but sweeter far was the fragrance of her pure, gentle spirit, that was so near to each mourner that day.

The Willard pew, which has been held in the family for over twenty years, was hung in white drapery and piled high with floral offerings. The large bunch of pink roses from Miss Kate Jackson, a lifelong friend, was in the pew. Miss Jackson had occupied it during Miss Willard's absences from Evanston.

Bishop Bowman, of the M. E. church, offered prayer and the choir sang Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar." How often have we heard our Chieftain pray:

"And may there be no moaning of the bar
When I put out to sea!"

a prayer that found its answer in the holy life which at its close knew no tempest of soul.

President Rogers, of the University, was the first speaker, his theme,

Miss Willard as a University Woman and an Educator.

We of the University honored and loved Frances Willard. Once she was Dean of what was then known as the Woman's College, was a member of our faculty, and in these later years, of our Board of Trustees. She loved the University and was proud of what it had become. A few years ago she wrote of it, "It greatly outranks any other west of Lake Michigan, and richly deserves the name of 'The Northwestern,' in the modern sense of that great and comprehensive designation. Steadily may its star climb toward the zenith, growing clearer and more bright with each succeeding year." The last speech she made in this town, which she delighted to call "The Methodist Cambridge of the prairies," her "ain familiar town," was an address to the students delivered in the college chapel only a few weeks ago. How little we thought she was so soon to pass beyond the veil! But had she known then that her life was fast passing on toward the twilight, so ready was she to go, that she might even have said to it:

"Then steal away, give little warning,
Choose thine own time,
Say not good-night—but in some brighter clime
Bid me good-morning."

We mourn that she has been taken, but we do not forget that she was given. She has done a great work, grown weary and fallen on sleep. May the beautiful spirit which dominated her life inspire us all to nobler things!

In February, 1871, she was elected president of the Evanston College for Ladies. At that time the institution had no connection with the University. She was the first woman to be elected president of a college. It is due to her labors that the town authorities gave as a site for the new college what was then one of the chief parks of Evanston. Upon that site was built what is now known as the Woman's Hall. She, with others, made the canvass for the money with which it was erected, and brick by brick she watched its walls as they climbed high above the trees. It was in her thoughts by day and by night, and she was fond of it. She said of it, "It is my sister Mary's that died, and it is mine."

In June, 1873, the institution was incorporated with the University under conditions largely dictated by her, and she became Dean of the Woman's College and Professor of Æsthetics in the Faculty of Liberal Arts. As professor and dean, she had her trials. She taught the classes in English, and met them in the president's room in University Hall. It was a new experience for college men to recite to a woman teacher. They tried her mettle only to find that she understood herself and them. They admired and respected her. She was popular and inspiring, and in every way a successful teacher. It is an ambition worthy of the immortals to build one's own life into the lives of others, and this she was able to do to a remarkable degree.

On June 13, 1874, she resigned her office as dean and at the same time her professorship in the University. Speaking of it years after she declared that this severance of her University relations was the greatest sacrifice her life had known and ever could know. It has been said that she left her work in the University to devote herself to the cause which she afterwards espoused and with which her name is henceforth to be forever identified. That she did not do so is known to all who have read her "Glimpses of Fifty Years," in which she wrote: "It grieves me that I can not truthfully say I left the deanship of a college and a professor's chair in one of America's best universities on purpose to take up temperance work." But it is true that having left the University she determined upon temperance work in the face of tempting offers to teach elsewhere, and that she held to that work though attractive positions in other fields were open to her all along the years had she cared to occupy them. It is no secret that she voluntarily withdrew from the University because she did not approve of the policy which the faculty had at that time adopted respecting certain questions of administration. "There's a divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will." There were other kingdoms awaiting her of which she knew not. This was an hour of disappointment. But Ruskin tells us that in the secret of disappointment, as in the twilight so beloved by Titian, we may see the colors of things with deeper truth than in the most dazzling sunshine. And who shall deny that as she sat in the shadow of her disappointment it was revealed to her what her mission was to be. She could say,

"My bark is wafted to the strand
By breath divine,
And on the helm there rests a Hand
Other than mine."

The story of the severance of her relations with the University reveals that gentleness of her nature which so impressed us all. The world needs nothing so much as gentleness and kindness, and these attributes our friend possessed in an eminent degree. Thy gentleness hath made me great, says the Psalmist. It made Frances Willard great, too, and you may gain an insight into the beauty of her character and the greatness of her soul from the facts she has told us of this crisis of her life.

On the night she resigned as dean of the Woman's College she shut herself out of sight in her suite of rooms at the college and with agony of tears gave way to her anguish. Let me tell the pathetic story of what transpired as she has written it, for it reveals the tenderness and nobility of her nature as no words of mine could do:

"At last everything grew still and sweet and holy, while far into the night the deep June sky bent over me with a beauty that was akin to tenderness. The storm in my soul ebbed away slowly, the sobs ceased, the long sighs were less frequent. As dies the wave along the shore, so died away forever more my sorrow to lose the beautiful college that my heart had loved as other women's hearts love their sweet and sacred homes. In the long hours that followed, the peace that passeth understanding settled down upon my soul. God was revealed to me as a great, brooding motherly spirit, and all of us who tried to carry on the University, while He carried on the universe, seemed like little boys and girls, who meant well, but who didn't always understand each other. The figure was of children playing in a nursery, and one little boy had more vigor than the rest of us, and, naturally, wanted us to play his way, while a little girl, whom I thought I could identify, said: 'No; my way is best!' Then a deep voice declared, 'This is the interpretation—good to forgive, best to forget.' And then the happiness that mocketh speech, flowed, like the blessed, tranquil river of dear old Forest Home, all through my soul, and overflowed its banks with quiet, happy tears." Soon thereafter she went to the president and extending her hand, begged pardon for everything she had ever done and said that was not right and assured him that she desired to be at peace with God and every human soul, and from that hour on they were the best of friends.

It was this spirit that made it possible for her to say that she did not know a reason why any human being should hesitate to speak to her with cordiality and kindness, or why any middle wall of partition should exist between her spirit and any other human spirit that God had made. Had she not sat at the feet of the Prophet Micah, and heard from him what it was that the Lord required of her, that she was to do justly, and to love mercy and to walk humbly with her God!

She was one of the early advocates of the higher education for women. This was to her a sacred cause. She believed, too, in the coeducation of the sexes, and was wont to impress upon her women students that the experiment of co-education was on trial, and that in some degree its future rested with them. "God help you to be good!" she said to them. She believed, too, in the principle of self-government, and many a time rejoiced as she thought how true and self-respecting a set of girls she had around her. One who disapproved her government, said: "The trouble is, these girls are quite too loyal; they make a hobby of it."

It is difficult to overestimate what the influence of her noble nature and magnetic personality would have been upon thousands of students during all these years if her work had continued in educational lines, what inspiration for high and noble living, what pure ambitions to love and serve humanity, what strong endeavors for high scholarship, and great achievement would have been born in the souls of the students coming into close touch with her great soul. She was eminently fitted to be a great teacher. One who has the power of kindling another mind with the fire which burns in his own, who can bring his soul into such close and loving contact with his students that they are stirred by his impulses and fired with his enthusiasms, has in the highest sense the teaching power and is described as the ideal teacher. This rare gift our friend possessed, and in high degree.

The nations of Europe seek to kindle the patriotic ardor of their subjects by putting on speaking canvas the immortal deeds of their great men. And in our own country a grateful public or generous friends enshrine in marble, or bronze, or on canvas the memory of those whose lives have been a blessing to humanity. It is a gratifying reflection at this hour that one of our own generous citizens will soon place in the keeping of the University the face of this woman, whose life was a ministry of love, and whose death leaves the world bereaved. Generations of students as they look upon that marble will be moved to noble living by the memory of her unselfish services, and they will find in it a noble stimulus to purity of life and to a consecration of their powers to the cause of humanity.

The winning personality of Frances Willard and her charm of soul made it possible for her to impress herself upon her students in a manner given to the few. She exerted upon them a far-reaching influence, not only by the thoughts she expressed in her class room, but by her views of life and duty which she revealed to them in her personal and private relations with them. A quarter of a century has almost passed since she retired from the faculty, but those who were associated with her in those days have preserved pleasant recollections of the winsomeness of her personality and the attractiveness of her spirit. We can ask no better thing to-day than that the benign influence of this refined, devoted, noble woman and teacher may abide in the life of this University for years to come.

We lay upon her casket here to-day this tribute of our love and admiration. She has entered within the gate. She has been transfigured, and it has been granted her that she should be arrayed in fine linen which is the righteousness of saints. On her head was placed a golden crown and she was girded with a golden girdle. All the bells of that great city, the holy Jerusalem, have rung with joy, and it has been said unto her, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, state president of Illinois, spoke of Miss Willard as a Patriot.

The white-ribbon women of Illinois feel keenly the death of our peerless leader, Frances E. Willard! Especially are we bereaved, for in a very sacred sense she belonged to this great state.

As a Christian, Miss Willard gathered help and spiritual power from all denominations and creeds, always finding the best in the various beliefs; but like the bees which return to their home cells laden with their gathered sweets, so she brought all her religious treasures back to the altar of her own cherished church, to which she was always a loyal, devoted, consecrated member.

She was accustomed to pivot her broad faith and generous charity upon this formula to which her whole life bore never-failing testimony—"No word of faith in God or love toward man is alien to my sympathy." With such a spirit she was fit to become a great traveler, and all countries contributed to broaden her love for humanity and increase her faith in God. It mattered not how far away she wandered, nor under what flag she found temporary protection, she always returned to her native land and to the flag she loved above all others with renewed feelings of loyalty and patriotism. The "stars and stripes" were to her an emblem of a broader freedom than other countries knew, and thus indicated her own great and grand spirit.

How painfully sad it is that the flag which is displayed from the platform on this sad occasion—this flag which she loved so much to have draped in convention halls where she presided—how unspeakably sad that this flag should to-day wave over and protect the legalized liquor system! How pitiable that the curse for the extinction of which she gave her life should find protection and defense in the laws of our land! He only is a true patriot who is true to the highest and noblest interests of his native land, and we who weep to-day over her cold, pale face, will cherish her parting message: "Tell the women not to forget their patriotism." And we will not give up the conflict until the stars and stripes shall cease to float over a legalized saloon!

Not only was she an American in its noblest sense, but the state of Illinois was loved by her, as perhaps no other state in the Union. In New York she was born and in New York she died, but in Illinois she lived the longest and did her grandest work.

There is wonderful significance in the fact that the ashes of Abraham Lincoln, the grandest man, and the ashes of Frances E. Willard, the greatest woman, in American history, have been committed to the soil of this beautiful prairie state, here to rest until the resurrection morn shall summon all lands and even the sea to give up their dead.

How beautiful as we think of her work and in what harmony with her life are these words which dropped like dew from her pen many years ago: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. That is the deepest voice out of my soul. Receive it every instant, voluntarily given back to thyself and receive it in the hour when I drop this earthly mantle and pass onward to the world invisible, but doubtless not far off."

Dr. Bristol read the Crusade Psalm, and never did its anthem of praise and prophecy seem more harmonious with events. The congregation sang—as best it could, for voices choked with tears—the Crusade hymn,

"Give to the winds thy fears,
Hope and be undismayed!"

Then Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman in tender speech, bore witness to Miss Willard as a Leader.

We have not come here to weep and lament and cry out in our pain. We have come to rejoice. Love is unselfish and must rejoice in the bliss and happiness of its beloved, and we will rejoice though with falling tears and breaking hearts.

She is no longer the "uncrowned queen of America," but crowned a queen in heaven—no more to droop and break under burdens all too heavy to bear; no more to suffer contradiction of tongues; no more to have pain and weariness of a body all too fragile to keep pace with a spirit so eager, so alert and intense and with a mind of such marvelous versatility and power. The fetters of flesh dropped to earth, the glad soul rose and revels in the realms of light, and love, and labor without weariness. Aye, we will rejoice!

Our beloved was a great leader because within her little hand she held the hearts of all who followed, and with irresistible charm she drew those who lacked the courage to follow. All loved her, because she loved all. All trusted her, because she trusted all.

She recognized the best in each, and each reached out and up, and made endeavor because its best was recognized. She had faith in humanity, and humanity believed in Frances Willard. She did not seek her own, but with all her might she sought the greatest good for all.

She had that within herself which awoke the very highest and noblest in others. She was honored by men, and loved by women with a fervor and a constancy unparalleled in history; and this, not alone in the New World, but around the globe. Women of the Orient, the Occident and the islands of the sea lovingly gave allegiance to Frances Willard, and with glad willingness followed where she led. By heroic righteousness of word and deed she drew thousands after her who never looked upon her face, or felt the charm of her gentle, gracious presence.

It has been said that women hold no lasting friendships for each other, yet for more than a score of years one of New England's truest daughters gave the devotion of sister, daughter and lover, which made it possible for Frances Willard to achieve the very best for womanhood, and the strongest, highest type of leadership.

Across the seas a gifted, pure-hearted woman of nobility is stricken in soul to-day, because with us she followed hand in hand—with us she loves and is loved.

Transparently frank and openly ingenuous, our leader never stooped to scheme and intrigue; never swerved one jot or tittle from the straight line of righteous principle. Ever gentlest to those most opposed, she won all true hearts by the power of love. By this sign she conquered.

When the temperance reform shall emerge from the twilight valleys of unpopularity and assumed impracticability to the sunlit hilltops of assured victory—and this hour will come—then, bright and glorious among all who have dared and achieved for humanity, in golden letters of light, will stand the name of Frances Willard—our beloved Frances!

Multitudes will repeat her words, cherish her memory, emulate her gracious gentleness, follow in her footsteps. In thousands of homes, in millions of hearts she is enshrined forever.

Manhood is nobler, womanhood truer, childhood safer because Frances Willard has lived. Her voice calls ever onward through duty, upward to God.

"Ah! she is not dead,
Who in her record yet the earth doth tread,
With God's fair aureole gleaming round her head."

All hail to thee, sister beloved, friend, comrade, brave and trusted! All hail, adored leader! We shall meet again, beyond the smiling and the weeping. Ah, beloved, beloved, farewell, farewell!

Dr. J. F. Loba, of the Evanston Congregational church, offered prayer, thanking God "for this life, which in the midst of perplexity and doubt, saw clearly that the only way of salvation for the home, the city, the state, the country and the world is the path of purity and righteousness and temperance."

Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson spoke of Miss Willard as a Friend.

My sisters have paid their tribute to our best beloved as patriot and as leader. It is left for me in these brief moments to speak of her in the special sense in which she was to thousands and tens of thousands a friend and an inspirer of all that is noblest and best. Frances Willard knew how to be a friend. It is not an easy thing to be a friend in the true sense of that word. It requires rare traits of character. There must be truth and tact, courage and patience, love and helpfulness. She possessed all these qualities in the fullest degree. Hers was the seer's vision to look beneath the apparent real and discover the ideal which after all is the only true real. Hers, too, was the prophet's function to arouse in every heart the longing and the will to actualize that ideal until it should become the apparent real. How she loved we know! How she loved, thousands know all over our land to-day as they sit in sore anguish counting over her tender words and deeds, as the rapt saint counts the beads upon her rosary. We call her the friend of humanity, and she was that in the broadest, possible sense, but she was the friend of humanity because she was first, last and always the friend of the individual human unit. With her the masses were never allowed to absorb the individual. She loved humanity in the abstract but her love for humanity in the abstract was born and nurtured of her love for humanity in the concrete. People were her life, friendship was her native air; she radiated friendliness; she took all the world by the hand, and showed to each one with whom she came in contact her throbbing heart-beats of goodwill.

I have many times tried to analyze the elements which entered into this rare friendliness, to discover how it differed from that which we meet in the majority of people all about us. I have asked myself during these sad days when I with others have been following this loved form on that weary journey which began in New York and will end in Rosehill, what it all meant. What did that concourse of people yesterday in Willard Hall mean? The crowds that stood for hours in the storm waiting to catch once more a glimpse of that loved face? What do the flowers mean that to-day surround that soft gray coffin? What do the tears mean which fall from every eye? Simply this, that the one thing the heart of humanity is hungering for is friendship; that kindness and gentleness are the most priceless of all gifts that we can give one another on this earth: and that this woman stands in the thought of the world to-day as the living embodiment of peace and good-will toward all mankind.

To my thought, the first thing noticeable in her friendship, which after all is only another word for her character, was its reality. She was the most real person I have ever known. There was absolutely no guile in her. She showed forth her inmost heart with a sweet frankness which seemed to take the whole human family into confidence, saying to them, "I feel all this for you and I believe you feel the same for me." Then she was brave in her friendships; she dared to tell her friends their faults. Who of us that have come closest to her does not remember that quaint, pretty way in which she would say, "I think I have a case against thee, dear," and then she would tell out the case without sparing and yet with such sweetness that no sting was left to rankle in one's mind. She of all others could tell one a fault because she was so constantly telling of virtues. She found them everywhere because her beautiful charity magnified the virtue and discovered ground for praise where others might not have dreamed of its existence. She lived in the "sunshine of commendation" as no one else I have ever known has lived, not the commendation which was showered upon her but that which radiated from her to others.

Her friendship was marked, too, by almost infinite tact. No one would have dared to do the brave things she did, or, if they had dared, they would have been unsuccessful in the doing, if they had had less tact than she. She compassed things which were necessarily disagreeable in such a way that one hardly discovered how disagreeable they had been until they were accomplished. She never unnecessarily antagonized, and therefore she won her way by her sweet, gracious tactfulness through many obstacles and over mountains of difficulty which would have rendered impossible the progress of one less divinely gifted. Nothing impressed me more in her friendship than its capacity for gratitude. Indeed, her mind was made up on a different order from that of most human beings in that she always remembered kindnesses and forgot injuries. I have in thought at this moment a little incident that occurred when I was with her last summer in Vermont: Just as we were getting into the carriage to leave beautiful St. Johnsbury, a lady came to her whom she had not met for years, but she remembered her and greeted her as cordially as if they had parted but yesterday, inquiring most tenderly after a brother of the lady's. As we drove away, she said, "That dear woman's brother was very kind to me twenty-four years ago in Chicago." I said, "You never seem to forget a kindness, Miss Willard," and she looked at me for a moment so earnestly before replying, "I should hope not; ingratitude seems to me the basest of sins." It was a sin of which she was never guilty. Indeed, she was always gathering up the kindnesses of her life and keeping them in tender perpetual remembrance.

There was a rare simplicity about her dealings with her friends and with the world at large. Only a great woman could have been as simple as was she. She used to take her audiences into her confidence with a beautiful frankness which always disarmed prejudice. I am sure they felt as I have felt many times, in hearing her speak, "Why, I have had such thoughts often; I have felt just like that about the dear old home, the father and the mother, the blessed early ties of life, but I never dared to tell them lest people should not understand." She dared; she took it for granted that the most sacred emotions of her heart she shared in common with all humanity, and so she told out the things which were most precious to her, and by that very telling helped and strengthened other lives.

The scene I have thought of most often during these days of our terrible bereavement have been of that visit I was privileged to make with her to the birthplace of her mother, in Vermont, last September. A little school-house stood upon the old lot and the people were gathered together from all that country-side to witness the ceremonies connected with the tree planting on the very spot where the old hearthstone had been. She talked to them from the steps of that school-house out of her very inmost soul; she talked of the old home, with its family altar; of the blessed ties of love and friendship which had bound the neighborhood together; she told what home meant to her, and what her work had been for the protection of the home. As she talked, tears streamed down many bronzed and furrowed cheeks, and one old farmer seemed to voice the thoughts of all when he said afterward, "That was the most homey talk I ever heard." All her talks were "homey," and indeed her entire life was set to the music of "Home, Sweet Home."

Faith was as truly a ruling characteristic of her friendship as of her religious nature. She believed in God, He was the most real fact in the universe to her, but she also believed in men and women as sons and daughters of God; and because she believed in them, because she always saw the possible shining through the apparent, she raised them to a plane of belief in themselves. There are countless men and women all over the world to-day living useful lives, filling positions of trust and responsibility who owe to Frances Willard all that they are because her word first aroused their dormant powers and gave them faith in themselves. She more fully than any human being I have known obeyed George MacDonald's words: "The thing I must be when I can, love now for faith's dear sake."

I have often thought that the highest eulogy paid to anyone in the Bible is in that passage in which Moses is spoken of as the friend of God. Standing beside the bier of Frances Willard, I am sure that without irreverence we may apply the same words to her; she was the friend of God, but how did she prove her fitness to bear that high title? Not by spending her days in rapt contemplation, but by proving herself, daily, hourly, through long years, the friend of man, man made in the image of God. She always saw the Lord among His people, and recognized that her service to Him must be given in service to them. She had known how beautiful it was to be with God long before she fell upon that sweet sleep, and the heart of that beauty she had found to consist in being with men in loving, constant service. Dead! Frances Willard is not dead; she is alive forevermore and this is the lesson which comes to us from that casket to-day; this is what she would say to us if she could speak from Heaven: "Serve God by serving men, love God through loving men, bring the beauty of holiness into the everyday life, and lift humanity up to its rightful plane of sonship to the Father and brotherhood each to the other."

It was most touching and peculiarly significant when Miss Johannsdottir, of Iceland, tendered in broken accent and with breaking heart a testimonial of the Chieftain's fellowship in other lands. "Through her, women all the world over are sisters," she said. "Over her grave we can stretch our hands to each other and make our life as she hoped we might make it, and so carry her work on."

Then Miss Johannsdottir read the hymn, "A charge to keep I have," as though she were indeed, for her part, taking solemn charge that hour to bear forward a sacred trust, and the congregation sang the meaningful words.

Dr. M. L. Terry, of the Garrett Biblical Institute, read the following original poem:

Transfigured.

Is that soft light a star?
Or through the dimness of our tearful eyes
Are we descrying in the open skies
Some lovelier sight afar?

Perhaps to us is given
Another vision of that wondrous sign
Revealed of old to Saint John the divine,
When in the open heaven,

By angels guarded round,
Was seen a woman with the sun arrayed,
The moon beneath her feet, and her fair head
With twelve stars brightly crowned.

I'm sure I see a light
That beckons many to a holier sphere;
And with its steady shining calm and clear
There seems to be no night.

'Tis the transfigured face
Of saintly gifted Prophetess serene,
Whose woman-soul could take of things unseen
And give them sightly grace.

To her God's love assigned,
Amid the rush of human cares and fears,
Nigh three score beautiful and hallowed years
To honor womankind.

Say not "She is not here;"
For yet she speaketh from the coffined clay,
And never mightier, sweeter than to-day
Was her voice far or near.

And woman's rights and wrongs,
And mortal sorrows, and the drunkard's woes,
And virtue's claims, by her life's sudden close
Have found ten thousand tongues.

Hushed are all envies now;
Nor breathes the soul would take away from sight
One ray of the aureola of light
That gathers round her brow.

O pure white life divine!
Translated into everlasting day,
Thou shalt pass never from our hearts away,
For Christ's own loves were thine.

The choir then sang "The Homeland."

"There's no sin in the Homeland,
And no temptation there,"

sang the sweet voices, and there could be naught but a song of praise for the one whom sin had so grieved and who had given her life to lessen the temptations of others.

True and beautiful was the delineation by Dr. C. J. Little, president of the Garrett Biblical Institute, of Miss Willard's Public Life.

Frances Willard reminded me, whenever I listened to her, of Matthew Arnold's definition of religion, "morality touched by emotion." She was conscience aglow with divine light.

Her departure from Northwestern University, with its attendant circumstances, caused her intense pain; the remembrance of it was never without its tinge of grief. And yet this departure was, in the old New England phrase, a divine enlargement, the breaking of the chains that held her back from destiny.

Her strong and only impulse at the time was towards the Temperance Crusade movement, then at its height. The religious fervor, the ethical purpose, the moral martyrdom and the feminine character of this movement appealed to her faith, her conscience, her courage and her conception of woman's latent power, and so she entered it "with a heart for any fate."

Her wisest friends dissuaded her. Even her intrepid mother advised against it. Mrs. Livermore alone of her friends commended her resolve. But wherewithal should she and her darling mother be fed and clothed? The noble women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Chicago, whose president she became, would willingly have answered. But she intended to live by faith. She would trust God.

"Frank," remonstrated her brother Oliver, "your faith method is simply a challenge to the Almighty. You've put a chip on your shoulder and dared Omnipotence to knock it off." But God only smiled in His heaven and tried His child a little longer. She did not always have enough to eat; often, when weary with working and walking, she lacked the nickel for her carfare. Soon she fell sick from hardship and overwork. And thereupon her mother chided her into a wiser conception of God and a wiser method of life. She consented to accept a salary from the women of the Christian Temperance Union of Chicago, and thus the slender Wisconsin school mistress started out to be a teacher of the world.

All great moral careers grow out of the confluence of conscience and of opportunity; the compulsion of the soul combines with the compulsion of circumstance, and the real life begins. Years before she had wanted to say something, but what was it? And now the disclosure came. All else had been a preparation for it; her maiden shyness and her maiden independence, the inspiration of her home, the revelations of nature and of books, the experiences of travel, the trials of the school-room, her search for God, her aspirations, her ambitions, her sorrows. The literary gift and the magic of speech were a part of her inheritance. And yet she trembled to appear in public. She had lectured in Centenary Church, Chicago, in 1871. And this first public utterance contains the germ of all she said and did in after years. The sorrowful estate of women throughout the world gave her, she declared, the courage to become a public speaker. It gave her more. It gave her the vision of the woman of the future for whose coming she thought and wrote and planned and prayed.

But not until 1874 did she begin to speak with all her might, for then came to her the sign by which she was to conquer, "God, and Home, and Native Land."

Frances Willard had the gift of eloquence. She was a subtle, thoughtful, thrilling talker. Her presence was not imposing, yet it was always tranquilizing at the beginning, and afterwards full of sweet surprises. Her voice was clear and melodious and strong, with a peculiar quality of blended defiance and deference, of tenderness and intrepidity that gave it an indescribable ring. Her diction was studiously simple; her reasoning luminous and homely; her illustrations full of poetry and humor; her pathos as natural as tears to a child. She was wholly unaffected, taking her audience so deftly into her confidence that she conquered them, as Christ conquers, by self-revelation.

There was sometimes a lyric rapture in her utterance that wrought her hearers into a delirium of anticipation. The New Jerusalem of the twentieth century, the transfigured homes of a new commonwealth, seemed to be so near and so real. And there was always when she talked to women and to men such a sublime confidence in their latent nobility and their ultimate righteousness that for a time, at least, they became in their own eyes the beings that she pictured them, and sat enchanted with the revelation. This blending of prophetic ecstasy with practical shrewdness, of rapture with woman's wit, gave to her tongue the accent of both worlds. The note of gladness with which she mentioned Christ (and she did it often), lifted her auditors into the presence of her divine Companion, and then the child-like mockery with which she pelted some feminine folly or some masculine stupidity dissolved the splendor again into ripples of human merriment that brought her listeners safely back to mother earth. Webster was majestic; in the days of his grandeur men trembled at his god-like flashes. Beecher was superbly human, conquering and controlling multitudes by his rich and robust and royal manhood. Wendell Phillips was demonic, casting his auditors into chains, and arousing within them all the elemental passions. But Frances Willard attracted and enchanted; she spake as never man spake, and yet with the charm of Him who conquered the grave in order to restore the shattered home at Bethany.

The Willard children had a genius for organization; they played at forming clubs and societies. Frances developed this skill during her years of teaching. She managed her pupils with rare tact, choosing for them both the direction and the method of activity. But the fulness of this power never revealed itself until she became the president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union in 1879. She stood for a liberal and a radical policy, and was indeed the incarnation and the inspiration of it. Of the multiplied energies that began to cluster around her fertile brain and nimble fingers I have no time to tell. They proved too many for her at the last, exacting as they did a superhuman strength of mind and will and pulling at her heartstrings all the time.

Miss Willard has been criticised severely for her transformation of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union into a political organization and just as severely for her blending with the cause of temperance the cause of woman suffrage and various projects of social reform. But it must not be forgotten that from her point of view this was logical and inevitable. She was an idealist and not an opportunist. They misjudge her who suppose that any merely negative movement could have absorbed her wholly. Her famous motto lays bare her inmost thought. The excitement of the Crusade had revealed to her an opportunity and started her upon a great career. But her intellect was too strong and too sagacious not to perceive that temperance was after all not the chief question. The chief question was the home. Whether men should drink or not, affected women so profoundly, because their drinking polluted domestic life, destroyed the family, corrupted the blood of unborn children and perpetuated the barbarisms of masculine law and masculine tradition. She perceived that the ideal home which was denied to her personally, but which hovered constantly before her as the prize and perfection of the future, must be held up before her sisters and her brothers as the real goal of human effort. This involved, however, the lifting of women to another plane—the plane of political equality with men. It involved also the lifting of the masculine standard of morality to that agreed upon for all true women, so that the movement for purity blended itself inevitably with the movement for prohibition. Nor could she fail to see, when she studied the problem deeply, that the causes of drunkenness and domestic misery among the poorer classes were largely economic. This created a sympathy with labor movements and labor organizations which urged her quite rapidly towards the newer social ideals that alternately attract and repel the modern mind.

It was natural for Mr. Gough to confine his philanthropic efforts to the temperance work and to the principle of total abstinence; it was equally natural for Henry George to expect the regeneration of society from purely economic change. But Frances Willard's mind was at once too broad and too deep, and her conception of woman's place in society too exalted for her to grasp the temperance problem or the economic problem in this one-sided fashion. "Society," she rightly said, "needed mothering." She was indeed a preacher of temperance and of a new commonwealth; but she was also the soul of chastity, heralding a nobler maternity than the world had dared to dream of hitherto; and therefore the herald of a nobler manhood, a nobler society, and a nobler humanity.

Like all idealists in the history of social progress, she took little account of time, so that the result of future centuries seemed as the stars do to the children of transparent skies just above her head. And this immediateness of the heavenly vision made it possible for her to tarry for it. She knew that it would surely come.

"The benefactors of humanity," writes Amiel, "are those who have thought great thoughts about it." For the human race needs heartening always; ideas must be translated into hopes that faith may overcome the world. And Frances Willard translated her ideas of home and of society into a great hope with which she thrilled the women that surrounded her. As that great hope transfigured her, old prejudices lost power. She stretched forth her loving hands to the women of all creeds and of all sections, to the women of the south and the women of England; the past was forgotten in the rapture of a great expectation. The daughter of the abolitionist embraced the daughter of the slave-holder, the child of the American democrat found her last great sister in the child of the English nobleman, the daughter of the Puritan knelt beside the Catholic mother who prayed to Mary as she prayed to God.

Among the precious relics of her latest days is a little scrap of paper containing these beautiful words of T. P. O'Connor: "Why should we talk of the futility of life and lose ourselves in vain regrets as if dreams and mere personal longings were all we had to live for? Life is futile to those only who seek for its fruits in self-gratification. To those who see in it an ever enduring conflict for others it is ever fresh and full, a joy and an inspiration and a hope. Ring out, then, ye Sunday bells! I awake from my selfish dreams. I am a worker, a fighter and a man again!"

On the margin of this scrap of paper is written in trembling characters the following simple words: "As the outcome of a life's experience I rejoice in these brotherly words of T. P. O'Connor. Frances E. Willard, New York, Jan. 29, 1898."

"The outcome of life's experience!" She knew it then! The Sunday bells were ringing her a welcome home! She had done what she could! She had given her life to the poor and had followed Jesus Christ. She was going to Rest Cottage and to her heavenly wages and to the great white throne.

Did she die too early? God must answer that, not we. She might have lived longer, if she had learned to spare herself, but then she might have lived less. Her fifty-eight years were rich in experience and in thought, in grief and in aspiration, in affection and admiration and achievement. They were indeed more than centuries of common life. They were for her "years of enduring conflict for others;" for she was a worker, a fighter, a woman. And the shock of her death reveals the weight of her influence. She is no longer a voice and a corporeal enchantment weaving about us the spell of a luminous conscience and a pure heart. She has taken her place in the choir invisible—the choir audible forever to God and to humanity. Whatever may be the future of the methods from which she expected such political and social transformations, her ideal of home will not perish from the earth. The strong and serious women of the future will be her daughters and as they bow the more to reason and to conscience, her image and her voice will guide them from the shadows of ancient bondage to a companionship with men in which the perfect interchange of thought and the perfect harmony of action will reshape the heavens and the earth and establish beneath new stars a whiter and a happier commonwealth.

Rev. C. F. Bradley, D. D., professor of New Testament exegesis, Garrett Biblical Institute, gave splendid tribute to Miss Willard as a Woman and a Friend.

It was thought fitting that the tributes to Miss Willard as a public leader should be followed by a few words concerning her as a woman and a friend.

Yet it is impossible to mark here a well-defined separation. In a rare degree she threw her whole self into all her work. It was as a woman and a friend that she taught, wrote, spoke, organized vast forces and led them in the war for righteousness. In public as in private life she was ever womanly and always friendly. The wealth of her regnant nature, the fruits of her varied culture, the consecration of her devoted life,—all these she carried, with her simple graciousness, into the intimacies of private life. The mourning of millions to-day is over the loss from our midst of a great woman and a friend of mankind such as the world has seldom known. A certain Roman Catholic sisterhood bears the affecting title of "Little Sisters of the Poor." Of Miss Willard it may be truly said that she was the sister of every one, rich or poor. Everywhere she went she met people with a winning smile and a cordially extended hand. She believed profoundly that God is our Father and that we are all brothers and sisters. These beliefs were to her more than articles of an accepted creed, far more than beautiful sentiments. They were the controlling principles of her daily life. Beyond any woman of her age, and, so far as I know, of any age, she has a right to the title of the Sister of Man. Everything which that name can signify of wise, strong and loving helpfulness, that she was in purpose and, according to the measure of her strength, in fact to all.

Better AND Cheaper.

THE ROYAL BAKING POWDER is more economical than other brands because of its greater leavening strength, as shown by both the U. S. and Canadian Government Reports.

The other baking powders contain from 20 to 80 per cent. less leavening gas than the ROYAL. So the ROYAL, even should it cost more than the others, would be much the cheaper.

In addition to this the superior flavor, sweetness, wholesomeness and delicacy of the food raised by ROYAL BAKING POWDER would make any difference in cost insignificant.

Highest of all in leavening strength.—

Yet, speaking of friendship in its ordinary sense it is difficult to conceive the extent of her circle of friends; to estimate the numbers of those in England and America and in other lands, who have the right to say of her, "She was my friend." It was out of a wide experience that she framed the new beatitude, "Blessed are the inclusive for they shall be included." One who knew her well has said: "In nothing is she more marked than in her lavish kindness and truth to friends. It would be impossible to say how many lives which have touched hers have been inspired to nobler purposes; have realized the balm of her sympathy in sorrow and the help of her wisdom in perplexity; have proved that even her wounds are the faithfulness of a friend whose very loyalty was demanding of them their best."

But Miss Willard's life has not only been marked by a universal friendliness and blessed by a liberal host of friends, to each of whom she gave her affection in rich measure; it has also been distinguished by a few extraordinary friendships. It is not the least of the sorrows of this hour that those who alone could speak adequately of the deepest things are unable to speak at all.

Miss Willard's love for her own family was most intense. The close intimacies in this circle were with her sister, her mother and her brother's wife. The Providences which ended these close associations opened the way to two others. One of these began in New England twenty-one years ago. Through all these years, amid many vicissitudes, it has never failed to deepen and strengthen. It is worthy a place among the few great friendships of history. The other friendship began in Old England, amid scenes of romantic beauty and united women of most diverse training but alike in rare talents of mind and one in their active sympathies for the fallen and the oppressed. When we consider the labors, the sacrifices, the sorrows which Miss Willard endured, it is comforting to consider the sources of light and joy she had in these two radiant friendships. In both there was that absolute confidence, unfailing affection, and utter self-bestowal which makes such devotion between man and man, or woman and woman, shine with a radiance little less than divine.

The circumference of Miss Willard's friendly sympathy has been truly said to have included the human race. Its center and source are to be found in Jesus Christ. Her whole life shows this.

The greatness of Miss Willard's powers and the clear call which ordained her to eminent public leadership often interfered greatly with the privileges of home and social life. She frequently expressed her sense of this loss, and her Evanston friends have sadly missed her during her long and many absences. But we could never doubt the loyalty of her affection, and we have never failed to love and honor her. "When I go home to Heaven," she said, in her quaint way, "I wish to register from Evanston." That too was our wish for her. This was her home. The most sacred memories of her family life centered here. The most potent forces in her education were brought to bear upon her here. At this altar she took the vows she kept so faithfully. Here she received her call from Heaven and went forth to raise the fallen, to strengthen the weak, to relieve the oppressed. We gave her to the country and to the world. She has fought a good fight; she has finished her course; she has won her crown. Her victory the world knows. And the world, as if on waves of honor and grateful affection, brings back as a sacred trust to this city, to Rest Cottage, to this altar, to our hearts, the dear form which was the temple of so much power and goodness and love.

The closing hymn was one which Miss Willard had asked for when she was nearing the end—one often sung around the family altar at Rest Cottage: "Gently, Lord, oh, gently lead us" and it was sung as white-ribboners sing it:

Gently, Lord, oh, gently lead us,
Through this vale of smiles and tears.

Then Dr. Bristol pronounced the benediction. When all had been said—how immeasurably less than could have been said!—it was time to say good-by, the old-time "God be with you," the "hail" that is ever folded within the "farewell" of those who are in Christ. Once more the long, silent procession filed past the beloved form, lying, oh, so still in its resting place. Who shall describe the scene? One common sorrow and one common love had made one common rank. It was a sublime leveling up. Grief was as pungent and majestic on the face of the laborer as on that of the student. Dark African features were touched with the soft light of reverence that crowned the fair white brows of maidens. Crusade mothers, infirm with the weight of years, lads and lasses from school, aged men, some who crept painfully by on crutches, little children lifted in parent-arms to look upon the sleeper—for nearly two hours the line moved slowly on, all too fast for the love that wept to linger by her side. But at last the coffin lid was lowered, and God only knows what it shut away from them that remain!

The white-ribbon star spangled banner had draped the casket-home of our leader's wearied body all through its week's journeyings. "It is washed in our tears," wrote Kate Lunden, and when they lifted it for the last time before the beloved form was borne out on stalwart shoulders, fresh tears fell and hearts were baptized anew to "the work."

"This banner of world-circling love ere shall wave
In the name of our Christ, who is mighty to save."

Down aisles and stairs, out to the waiting hearse, the crowd followed, to stand in the cutting east wind until the line of carriages containing the relatives and near friends, the pallbearers and guard of honor had passed from sight.

AT THE CEMETERY.

At the cemetery—beautiful Rosehill—its pure white covering of snow dazzling in the sunshine, the vault was decked with evergreens, and branches of living green strewed the pathway to the entrance. The pallbearers, for the last time, took up their precious burden, and after a brief, simple prayer by Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, the casket was placed in an outer case of dark oak clamped with burnished copper. The floral offerings were deposited by weeping friends and then the ponderous, bronze doors shut her from their sight—no, not her, our beloved, but the precious clay, the outgrown garment of the flesh. A few months later it will be placed beside that of her mother.

One by one, in twos and threes, by carriage and street car and railroad train, the friends dispersed, and it was a beautiful thing they saw. Sunset had begun—so long had they lingered about all that was visible of their beloved comrade—and in the western sky hung a rainbow! There had been no storm, only the gentle rain from sad eyes had fallen. Shall we not say that He who weeps with His weeping children, had set the bow of promise in the heavens to cheer and comfort? May we not take it as a message from Him, and from her, to "Look up, not down"?

Letter to the National Officers.

EASTNOR CASTLE, Feb. 18, 1898.

MY DEAR SISTERS:—What can I write with blinding tears and bleeding heart, only one fervent heart prayer that we may follow that way? That is all I can think to-day, but my love goes out to your orphaned hearts, and I feel that our Saint is whispering words of comfort to us for her great, unspeakable gain. We shall never see her like again, but may God in His infinite mercy grant that we may be truer and nobler because we have loved her. Of my own loss I cannot speak. It seems as though the light of life had gone out. God be with you till we meet her yonder. Your loving comrade,

ISABEL SOMERSET.

Our Loved Leader.

BY FRANCES E. BEAUCHAMP.
Assistant National Recording Secretary.

THE greatest woman who ever lived is dead! No human being was ever enshrined in so many hearts. Wonderfully gifted, she never buried a talent in a napkin; she had the grace to let her light shine. Like the "Sun of righteousness" she shed her rays on "the evil and the good, on the just and on the unjust."

The tiniest little seed of possibility hid away in any with whom she came in contact was warmed and developed into usefulness by the genial rays of inspiration she shed upon them. Thousands are to-day lifting the world to higher planes, nearer to God and Christ, who were first moved to activity by her personal touch, by her confident expectation that they would help the world to be better. She believed in God. What is equally essential in a Christian leader, just as Christlike and far more rare, she believed in humanity. Humanity responding to the divine in her instinctively reached up a trembling hand to be helped to the higher plane on which she stood. More than any one I ever knew, she made me believe in the possibility of regenerated humanity, lifting up Christ in their daily walk and conversation so as to draw all men unto Him. For the Christian church to live one year on the plane Frances E. Willard lived on would mean the conversion of the world.

She absolutely thought no evil. We who were closely associated with her used to tell her that to receive double at her hands one had only to persecute her. Bishop Vincent showed himself a student of human nature when he said "she was the best exemplification of the thirteenth chapter of first Corinthians he ever knew." I was never in her presence socially, but her gentle, child-like simplicity made me remember that they who would enter into the kingdom of heaven must become as little children. She was so perfectly transparent that designing persons could not understand her. She carried her point by her straightforward candor.

Her most unique characteristic was that she always forgot an injury and always remembered a kindness. With such regal grace did she bestow a favor that she made the recipient feel that she was the one blessed, and I doubt not that her Godlike nature reveled far more in the opportunity to give, than the beneficiary did in receiving. She was a revelatiou of the possibility of womanhood, and women for all time will be larger, nobler, more useful for the inspiration of her life, while men will be gentler and purer for the standards that she raised. Great in her life, she is hardly less great in her death. To-day not a state or a nation, but a world mourns her loss. When she was gone New York and Chicago honored themselves by vying with each other as to which should pay the greatest tribute to the greatest of women.

Lexington, Ky.

Tributes.

FOR lack of space, only a very few of the hundreds of tributes and resolutions which have been received can be printed. Expressions of loving appreciation and deep sorrow have been received at National Headquarters and THE UNION SIGNAL office from all the state presidents and a very large number of other officers and members of the W. C. T. U. We would gladly publish every word, but our constituency will realize that it is impossible to do so. For the same reason we are obliged to pass by the many accounts of memorial services which have already been held by white-ribboners and churches throughout the country.

THE white-crested waves of this inland sea, Lake Michigan, flowing so near the earthly home of our translated leader, remind me to-day that beyond the seas in every land the hearts of our young white-ribboners are sorrowing with ours. They will be watching by each mail to learn about her last days on earth.

Some one once asked Miss Willard if she would like to be here "at the finish," when victory should come to the temperance forces. Her reply was, "I would rather fall in the heat and dust of the battle, for it's victory all along." So, in the midst of her years, at the height of her mental vigor, in the center of America's greatest city, where the highways meet, in a public hotel, the earthly armor was put off and the victor's crown received. She had fought a good fight, she had finished her course, she had kept the faith. At the close of this century, called "woman's century," it seems fitting that such a matchless woman should be the theme of uncounted eulogies which the Y's of the world will read; but just now they will wait eagerly for personal details.

Rheumatism Conquered by a Marvelous Remedy.

FREE SAMPLE PACKAGES ARE MAILED FREE TO ALL.

Costs Nothing to Try This Remedy--Send Your Name and Address To-day.

It is a frequent experience to meet people who firmly believe that no remedy exists that will cure rheumatism. They have tried a dozen or two "sure cures" and still they suffer. Some are in hospitals, others at home hopelessly helpless, while others are hobbling about on crutches. John A. Smith, of Milwaukee, cured himself of just as bad a case of rheumatism as one will find in a month's journey. At times he was so helpless that he had to take morphine. After considerable doctoring with leading physicians, who were unable to help him, he gave up in despair. He began studying into the causes of Rheumatism and after much experimenting and repeated failures, he finally found a remedy which cured him in a short time. After this glorious escape from the clutches of Rheumatism he called the remedy "Gloria Tonic." Then he went to work and cured his friends and neighbors and now proposes to cure the world. But Gloria Tonic cured him, so that he hasn't had a twitch of pain. He sends a trial package of his remedy free to any one who will take the trouble to write for it. The remedy cured an old man in Texas who had suffered forty years. It cured H. Bucholz of Norborne, Mo., who had suffered 25 years and although 70 years of age at the time was practically given a new lease of life. Mrs. Persohn of Amsterdam, N. Y., tried a free trial package and the result induced her to get more of it. She was entirely cured after having suffered for years with the most intense pain. Mr. Smith has a wonderful array of testimony to show that Gloria Tonic will cure any kind and stage of rheumatism, and he wants every one who has even a touch of this painful disease to write him for a free trial package. Don't be skeptical about this remedy. Remember it costs you nothing to try it and it is good evidence that Mr. Smith would not go to the expense of sending trial packages free unless there was real merit in the remedy. Mr. Smith's address in full is John A. Smith, 187 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

MEAD CYCLE CO., 279 Ave. P., Chicago.

Every comfort and attention which loving friends could bestow was offered before her eyes closed. Skilled physicians, trained nurses, the hotel proprietor, his wife and every attendant gave of their best to allay suffering and retain life; but most of all, did the nearest and dearest one, Anna Gordon, minister day and night. Her tender thoughtfulness and constant care were superhuman; even the doctors looked on in wonder; to those who for years have linked the names, "Miss Willard and Anna," this was not strange. It was no transitory consecration made by Anna Gordon when she came forward in that Boston church to perform the first office of Christian love for Miss Willard. The friendship was heaven-born, and who shall say that the untiring attentions and self-sacrificing devotion of the younger to the elder were not blessed to the continuance of that life and its great achievements.

The National Y's, through their general secretary, sent long sprays of ivy leaves with lilies of the valley for the service in New York. The World's Y's sent feather palms, symbols of victory, thenceforth to be their emblems. These floral offerings were taken with the casket to Churchville, Chicago, Evanston and Rosehill.

Our promoted leader has said, "Bring flowers to the living also," and in the midst of our mutual bereavement the Y's of the world would pay grateful tribute to Anna Gordon, and by their prayers and proffered services seek to bring some surcease to her aching heart.

Dear young women, a star of wondrous magnitude has crossed the vision of this world and still shines on from the world above. We must follow the gleam.

FRANCES J. BARNES,
World's Supt. Y Branch.

TO all of us this is a most sorrowful and irreparable loss. She died as I am sure she always wanted to do, in the harness. And she has been spared the long years of uselessness that so many have to go through. Blessed Frances! What do we not owe her for having lived and been our friend? She was more to me, far more than any other woman ever was or could be and never, I am sure, either in this world or the next shall I see her like. I have often said she was the sweetest and grandest woman God ever made. I cannot tell thee how empty the world feels without her and as to the work all heart seems taken out of it. But for her sake we must go steadily on and make everything she began a true success. My heart is full of untold sorrow, but I force myself to think of her side of the question, and in the face of what must be her joy and content in the presence of the King, I feel it is selfish to grieve.

HANNAH WHITALL SMITH.
Westminster, London.

YE women of the sad earth's greatest, sweetest hope, why stand ye gazing up into Heaven? This same Frances Willard which is taken up from you into Heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen her go!

God takes no chances with this universe. The distributions of its forces are forever in balance to a hair. The way to heaven ascends thither no more than hither it descends. No holy life goes up out of our sight but it comes down before our eyes, a Holy Ghost, a comforter, a guide into all truth.

So, get ye down with your wide, tear-stained eyes from Olivet! Gather your whole enterprise into an upper room, and from there "work" your own hard-hearted, poverty-stricken, sin-cursed, hopeless, pitiful Jerusalem, and "wait for the promise of the Father!"

JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

I HAVE WORK FOR YOU IN YOUR OWN HOME.

MEN AND WOMEN.

I send a Crayon Portrait free of charge as a Guide to each student.

I send each of my students a Crayon Portrait of any person. The best is of some one dear to you, or of some one you know well, because you would learn quicker on a face you know. Also do I send you a print of of this person, for you to finish, with all material and instruction. The Portrait will be a sure guide for any one and is painted the same as my instruction teaches, and as Portrait and Print are of the same Photograph, any person can do the work if they only try. Send for my book at once; it will be sent to you the same day when I receive your letter or card; so that you do not need to wait too long for the work.

Read the following very carefully; it will keep yourself and your home.

PAYING EMPLOYMENT AT YOUR HOME

EXPLANATION.—I have agents in every State of the Union and Canada; also do I furnish newspapers, magazines and stores with Crayon Portraits which they give to their customers as premiums. I am under contract to furnish two of our leading magazines with Crayon Portraits; one magazine in New York with 30,000, and the other in Washington, D. C., with 40,000 14x17 Crayon Portraits. I am considering additional contracts. My experience has been, for the last five years, to teach good reliable parties at their homes, and send my work to them or let them come to my studio.

HOW CAN I DO IT? In the first place I teach them my own method, and so can depend on their doing good work rapidly, thus saving money for myself. My method is easy—a child can learn it. I would be pleased to have you take up a branch of my work, which consists in the making of Crayon Portraits. These portraits are pictures which my agents, magazines, etc., send me to enlarge, and are copied in Crayon by the aid my copyrighted print system.

You can send your Print back just as soon as you can finish it. If you have the time finish it the first day, and if fairly done I will return the print the same day with a box of work and payment for same. You do not need to practice all day, but only one hour, or less time; and after I have taught you I can get my work cheaper by you than if I employed a first-class artist at a big salary. This is the reason I can offer my work to agents, etc., cheaper than others, and I have agents in every State and Canada, and at the same time you can make fair wages from the start. An ordinary person can earn eight to sixteen dollars weekly, some do better still. You can execute the work by day or lamplight; it can be taken up and laid aside at will.

If you will engage with me, and will work faithfully, I have all the work and more than you can do. I do not ask you to give me ten hours a day of your time, but whatever time you can spare. No matter if you can spare but an hour a day so long as you do spare it. The work calls for no special talent, and if a person can read and is willing to follow my instructions, I guarantee you success from the start.

ENDORSEMENTS AND TESTIMONIALS.

To Whomsoever It May Concern:—I, the undersigned, take pleasure in saying that Mr. H. A. Gripp, the German artist, of Tyrone, Pa., has furnished my wife with work amounting from $30.00 to $50.00 a month, since she has learned to do satisfactory work.

Tyrone, Pa. To Whom It May Concern:—H. A. Gripp, of our city, has done business with us since 1892, and we believe him to be a man of high personal integrity and honest in his dealings.
T. J. GATES, Cashier Blair Banking Co.

Tyrone, Pa. To Whom It May Concern:—The reputation of H. A. Gripp, German artist, of this place, is good. I personally believe that he will make every honest effort to carry out all he promises.

JOHN DIETHELM.

Brookshire, Waller Co., Texas.

MR. H. A. GRIPP, Tyrone, Pa.—Dear Teacher and Friend: At the beginning of my letter I want to thank you over and over again for the abundance of work I have received during the past eight months. I have been, to quote an expression from one of your other pupils, "snowed under with work from Mr. Gripp." In two days I received $20.00 worth of work. Oh! dear Mr. Gripp, I can never show you how I appreciate your goodness. Some of my friends thought that because I lived so far away I would not get any work, but I am so glad I can say they were mistaken. I am learning to work so much faster, too, and if my eyes did not trouble me I could make $50.00 every one of these long Summer months, but in the cloudy Winter days I simply cannot see well enough to do that much work. I would not change my present occupation under any circumstances, and if every young girl knew of your work there would be fewer in other vocations. But as you well know, there are so many fraudulent advertisements nowadays, that the much imposed upon public are loth to believe the truth when they see it. If you wish, Mr. Gripp, you may publish this letter and perhaps it will influence some one. If any one wishes to ask anything concerning the school and will enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope I will gladly answer all questions.
Your grateful student, LELLA MAUD LESLIE.

Gardenville, N. Y.

H. A. GRIPP, Dear Sir: I enclose a picture of myself just after finishing a picture for you. I always dreaded the possibility of having to go out to work, but since I learned how to make Crayon Portraits by your method and received both my work and pay promptly my mind is eased. I thank you for employing me and paying me so well.
Most respectfully, ANNIE SCHULTZ.

ANNIE SCHULTZ.

Berne, Ind.

MY DEAR MR. GRIPP: I cannot speak too highly of your method of teaching Crayon Portrait Painting by mail. I have found it as represented in every respect and would advise any one wishing home employment to take up the work. I received your check for $18.00. Many thanks. Will send work received from you this morning, in a day or two. I am very truly yours, H. H. LEMMING.

Victoria, Minn., June 8, 1897.

Mr. H. A. GRIPP, Dear Sir: Please accept my thanks for check of $14.50, received this a. m., in payment for last week's work. I also return the roll of work which I finished yesterday. I am not working today, although I have another roll of work lying here. I want to have a few days' lay-off after working for you a year without missing a day. Please do not send me any more work until further notice as I want to finish my orders which I have from friends, and am going with a party to Lake Park at Lake Minnetonka on a fishing trip. You can easily imagine that I am on the level otherwise I could not go to Lake Park, which is the greatest summer resort in the north. And, just think of it! the idea, being as poor as a tramp when I started to learn your system a year ago having no hopes whatever of succeeding when I answered your advertisement, judging you to be a catch-penny concern and never anticipating to learn your system of portrait painting in three week, as I have done, although I had to study your instruction book while I was learning. I am now at the top of the ladder. Everyone calls me an artist and I can associate with the best class of people which I could not do before I knew that there was any one in Tyrone whose name was H. A. Gripp. You may use this letter as a testimonial and I will gladly answer any inquiry for information about your system, etc., providing they enclose a stamp. Thanking you again for past favors, I am Very respectfully, JOHN DIETHELM.

I have issued a little book which will instruct you how I send my work, and explains how to finish the work, and how much I pay for each print. Also gives name and address of lots of my students, who have learned and are working for me now all over the United States and Canada. If you really wish to make some money in spare time or wish to devote all your spare time to the work, send for the book at once and I will send it free of charge. This is no bogus advertisement, but necessary for me to engage good persons to work for me and a godsend for many homes. Address plainly,

The Danger Before Us.

We have already alluded to the importance of housekeepers paying more attention to the kind of baking powder used in leavening their bread. This is a matter to which we cannot draw attention too often, because it is something which involves the most serious consequences to the general body of mankind. Temperance apostles tell us—and there is ample foundation for the statement—that there is disease both moral and physical in the intoxicating cup; and in the same way there is disease slow, perhaps, but certain, in the leavening agent which is employed in one-half the homes on this continent; sickness, perhaps death, in the bread we eat at every meal—slow poison, placed there, too, by loving hands, by mothers whose every thought is for the health and happiness of their children, by wives whose chief solace is the life and comfort of their husbands. The victim of intoxication goes to his fate with a full consciousness of what he is doing; but the victim of the adulterated and poisonous baking powder falls and knows not whence comes the blow that struck him. The certificates of chemists with high sounding titles have been read in confidence; the toothsome cake has been given in generous abundance to the children; the daily bread has been eaten in fancied security. But all the time the poison has been working its slow effect. There come spells of headache, loss of appetite, a fluttering of the heart; the child is seized with an apparently causeless cough. The coating of the stomach is destroyed, perhaps; one of the vital organs is rendered almost useless; the kidneys are attacked with Bright's disease. The health of the child is irreparably broken down; the adult becomes a chronic invalid. These are the doings of the modern cheap baking powders that are composed of lime, alum, acids and other vile things.

In view of these facts surely all housewives should exercise the care that is, we know, now exercised by some in their selections of a proper brand of baking powder. She who does not do so, whether the neglect is the result of ignorance or recklessness, cannot free herself from the responsibility for the health, perhaps life thereby endangered. No housewife need be ignorant of the quality and composition of the article which she uses to leaven her bread, biscuit and cake. The official reports of the government chemists, who are certainly unprejudiced, have been published and show very clearly the quality and strength of all the baking powders in the market. The Royal Baking Powder, which is accessible at every hand, is reported absolutely free from lime, alum, phosphatic acid, or any injurious ingredients. It is further stated by the most eminent authorities on food hygiene that food leavened with it is more wholesome than when raised by any other method. Its use is therefore to be commended. It is to be regretted that no other baking powder, when there are so many in the market, some of which will find their way into use, is free from all of these substances. They all contain either lime or alum. The housekeeper who regards the health of her loved ones should not only order the Royal, but make personal examination to be sure that no other brand is sent her in its place.

BY the death of Miss Frances E. Willard, one of the noblest women of the age as well as one of the grandest representatives of the principles of temperance, has been called from the scene of her toils, trials and triumphs.

She was a noble woman; unswerving in her fidelity to the cause of righteousness and truth. Her self-devotion to the temperance reform won for her the affectionate admiration of millions of people in all lands and of all sects and classes, while her education, culture and womanly graces enthroned her in the heart of the best people of America.

She had the courage of her convictions; she "dared to do right"; she was the friend of the oppressed everywhere, neither her pity nor her sympathies were controlled by the color of the skin or the grade in social life. She was the brave champion of the rights of the people irrespective of color, creed, condition or nationality. This beautiful woman has won a name which deserves to be written in letters of light in the annals of every righteous reform. As the foremost of her sex in advocacy of total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the state, and whose leadership tens of thousands of the best women of the land followed as an inspiration, her loss will be greatly felt, and our prayer is that He who gave to her wisdom to direct, a voice to speak, a pen to write and hands to work so efficiently, will raise up some one to fill her place and carry on the work she loved so well and in which she so faithfully labored. She has gone, but her works do live, and for all time to come her influence will be felt, and a magnificent harvest will be the result of her years of seed-sowing. Words are wanting to adequately express our profound sense of the loss to our National Temperance Society, of which she was a vice-president, and from its existence had been its fast friend and helpful co-laborer. But infinitely greater than any selfish loss, is the loss to the whole country and to humanity itself, for her sympathies were as wide as the world, and her large heart and beneficence reached out to every class and clime.

The Board of Managers express their deepest sympathy for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union at this sad bereavement. To the God of all comfort and consolation we commend that grief-stricken organization.

BOARD OF MANAGERS OF THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.
JAMES B. DUNN, D.D., General Secretary.
New York City.

WE join the multitude of those around the world who grieve to-day over the loss of one of the foremost women of the century, Frances E. Willard, and to her closely associated fellow-officers and co-workers, we give our heartfelt sympathy. We have long recognized in Miss Willard those commanding and exceptional qualities which make the great organizer and leader; and we have been witness to the entire devotion with which she has spent her life in efforts to crush out wrong, to lift up those who have fallen and to hasten the reign of righteousness throughout the earth. We rejoice to live in the same day with a woman of abilities so consecrated, of life so Christlike; one in whose great heart there was no room for selfishness or resentment or bitterness, and who realized in her own character our finest ideals of all that is womanly. The eloquent voice is hushed, the inspiring presence is gone; but in spirit Frances Willard is still the loved chieftain, and we pray that the influence of this rare and noble life may move us and women everywhere to higher purpose and larger faithfulness in the work of helping to make the world better.

THE FACULTY OF WELLESLEY COLLEGE.
ELLEN HAYES,
SARAH F. WHITING,
ANGIE CLARA CHAPIN, } Committee.
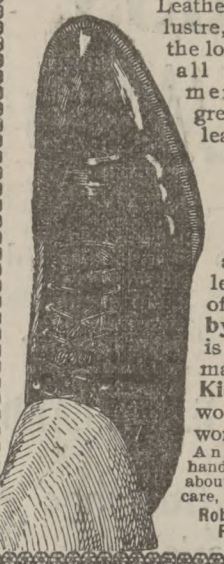
Wellesley, Mass.

THE intellectual powers of Frances E. Willard were unusual, but the harmony and balance of those powers were still more unusual. One finds many men of rare gifts to one man of large and sober thought. Perfect symmetry is the supreme excellence everywhere. The admirable proportion, the even poise of Miss Willard's powers, were most remarkable.

She owed this largely to the predominance of a spiritual purpose. Her mind was full of light because she looked upon the world with a single eye. She had a clear insight into spiritual life, and made of it a ruling, harmonizing motive. This is well illustrated in the steadiness with which she pursued temperance as her primary work. She gave a large meaning to the word. She saw how much it involved. She gathered in its many accessories, but she allowed none of them to divert her from the primary purpose.



She did as much for prohibition as those who make it their exclusive end; yet she was never simply a prohibitionist. She entertained a liberal opinion of the political rights of woman. She was a suffragist and advanced the cause as much as its most ardent advocates; yet she entertained it always as a part—and only a part—of a larger purpose.

It was this fact, of mind, heart and life, perfectly reconciled and supremely ruled, that gave her at once a rest within herself, and a power over others altogether her own. She left an abiding sense of fulfilment and hope in every household she touched at all. We found it so while she lived, and even more do we find it so, now that she has gone forward.

Her presence was one that gains an omnipresent power and blesses every moment it illuminates.

there seemed no end to the heart-broken messages which came from individual white-ribboners. We should be glad, if space permitted, to print quotations from all these, but it is an impossibility.

WHERE MISS WILLARD TAUGHT LAST.

The editors of THE UNION SIGNAL sent the following telegram:

After death, life. God reigns and all is well. Peace and comfort be with you.

In addition to these official and semi-official communications hundreds of letters and messages have been received from relatives and personal friends. Without doubt no other death ever carried in its wake such universal heartache and sympathy.

Miss Gordon received the following telegram, as we go to press, from Booker T. Washington, Tuskegee, Ala.:

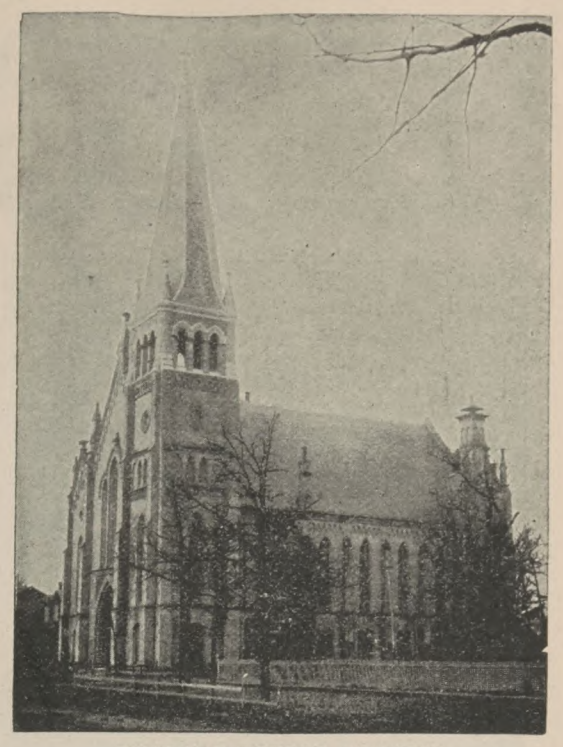
I send you by to-day's mail a tribute to Miss Willard. She was a great and good woman. We all loved her.

Extracts from Letters to Miss Anna Gordon.

I want to share with you and with all Christians and philanthropists, the world round, in grief for the great and beautiful one who has been taken to her beatitude in the Lord. It seems to me besides a kind of personal and family bereavement, for Miss Willard inspired in me a fraternal affection and the many little notes and messages she has sent to me in the last fifteen years have seemed so cheery and sisterly that I see what a great deprivation my life has met with, now she is no more. When I learned she was sick in New York I was afraid and wanted to send some greeting to her and now she has gone beyond the reach of mortal greeting! May the Lord comfort us all.—J. E. Rankin, Washington, D. C.

The holiest service that can come to any soul is the privilege of attending a Saint in her last moments. * * * It would afford me great joy if I could speak a word of comfort this day to every woman who wears the insignia of the white ribbon in this and every land.—Dr. John Hall, New York City.

I cannot tell you how my heart aches for you in the loss of your noble leader and dear friend—there is hardly a relation that two noble women may possess for each other, that yours and her friendship did not stand for. I thought so much of you those dear last days when all our hearts turned to that New York hotel and all who loved her sat weeping with you at her bedside praying the good Father to leave her yet awhile with us. It was a selfish prayer. Surely she had stood enough of the heat and burden of the day and watched enough of the reapers fall from her side. Leadership has its sorrows and its isolations as well as its terrible responsibilities and complications. I am sure Miss Willard needed rest. —Fanny Casseday Duncan, Louisville, Ky.



The blow has fallen. From the world has been taken another lover of humanity—from you, your soul's friend. There are no words to express the grief you feel—none to express the loss to the world and to the world's workers, and none to portray the glory into which the beautiful soul has entered. May a merciful Father comfort you in your unspeakable loss.—Helen Douglass, Anacostia, D. C.

You have so long been identified with Miss Willard that you seem a part of her. And you more than any one else will sorely miss her presence, her inspiring personality, and the large and varied ministry which she fulfilled, and in which you were yourself so constantly and actively engaged. I sympathize with you in the loneliness and the sense of loss you are bound to experience. And yet I must turn condolence into congratulation! How rich your life in memories, in assurances of sincere affection from one of the purest, most loyal and most loving women the world ever knew, and in continual opportunities for useful service. —John H. Vincent (Bishop M. E. church) Topeka, Kas.

"Peace and glory are hers!" What a heroic life, what a full life, crowded into the few years! The "well done" is hers, and those left must earn it—work for it. We have sent a wreath, that our name and color may have place among those who will express love and gratitude for the life that is the "loved one gone, not lost."—Susan B. Anthony, Rochester, N. Y.

It is with profound sorrow that the Janesville chapter D. A. R. have learned of the death of Miss Frances E. Willard, one of the most distinguished members of the National society. We greatly regret her untimely departure especially here in her childhood home where her sweet voice was so recently heard in her last public address. We tender to the members of her family and to Miss Anna Gordon, our condolence in their great affliction and our sympathy is extended to the W. C. T. U. in the loss of their loved president. We as loyal daughters will imitate her virtues, and strive to possess the same Christian spirit shown throughout her entire life of unequaled earnestness and purity, that it may be said of us, as has been said of her, "Well done, good and faithful servant."—Janesville, Wis., Chapter Daughters of the American Revolution, Mrs. Fannie H. Wright, Regent.

The heart-breaking news of Miss Willard's death has just reached me. The world has suddenly become poorer, how much so God only knows; for all over the world a great loneliness, a great sense of loss will be felt; her kingdom amongst us was founded on love, her talents were beyond those of any woman I ever knew; but greater still was her love for our work, for all of us, for every white-ribboner all over the globe. I am all undone and heart-broken. Our loss is so immense, it is altogether impossible for me to give any expression to my feelings. She was the greatest leader any woman's movement ever had. We were arranging to give Miss Willard a delightful welcome at our annual B. W. T. A. meeting in May and our dear Lady Henry was looking forward to welcoming her. Alas! what this translation means to her!—Agnes E. Slack, Secretary World's W. C. T. U., Ripley, Derbyshire, England.

It is so impossible to imagine Frances not in this world—she whose love-inspired task it was to make it a better world. We shall not look upon her like till we greet her glorified self in the heavenly country.

Dear heart, she was so ready to go, so full of the life and spirit of heaven that at last she breathed her native air.

For you, for the work she loved, it is loss unspeakable. God help us all!—Mary B. Willard, Berlin, Germany.

Mrs. Shaffer and I have had for many years a strong and warm affection for Miss Willard which broadened and deepened during the recent visit at our home.—J. C. Shaffer, Evanston, Ill.

The sweet and consecrated spirit has passed on and it is ours to say, "Thy will be done." Of all the mourning hearts now struggling to say these words of resignation my loving sympathy goes out most keenly to you, dear Miss Gordon, for I feel that this loss is more to you than to any one else in the world. I trust it will not hurt but comfort you a little to know my most heartfelt gratitude to you as the one who contributed most of all to the help and care of Miss Willard during all the years of her great labors. May God comfort you and help the

W. C. T. U. women to be wise and true.—Anna Garlin Spencer, Providence, R. I.

I cannot tell you how sad I felt when I heard of the death of my dear friend, Miss Willard.

How well I remember the day that I stood in the parlor, at Rest Cottage, by the casket of her dear mother and lay on it a large palm branch, and she asked me to sing, "Palms of victory, crowns of glory, I shall wear." It was a favorite hymn with her mother. I sang softly one verse, when she said, "Yes, Amanda, my dear mother is no more, her battle is fought, her victory is won."

How glad I am for the privilege of having known her for the past twenty-five years. It was at a surf meeting at Ocean Grove where I first sang in her hearing what she was ever afterwards pleased to call her favorite song,

"There's a wideness in God's mercy
Like the wideness of the sea."

May God bless and comfort you.—Amanda Smith, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Miss Willard is now beyond all earthly cares. It is pleasant for me to think that the redeemed spirits are watching with earnest desire for the extension of Christ's kingdom here on earth. May you have heavenly wisdom to guide you.—Mrs. William E. Dodge, New York City.

I cannot tell you how deeply I have sympathized with you during these dark days. The world has met with a loss that will not soon be replaced, if ever. But I have felt that upon you the shadow has fallen darkest and deepest. As for her I feel that she was not sorry to lay down her heavy burden of care and go to rest, and receive her sure reward, "to creep in with mother," as she said, and to be forever with the Lord.—Marietta Holley, Bonnie View, N. Y.

Miss Willard's spirit had grown too large, and her work too large for her to do it any longer on this side—and now she is nearer to us and to the heart of humanity. Frances Willard was never so alive as now. Like her Lord she "so loved the world" that she "gave up her life for it." —Mary A. Lathbury, East Orange, N. J.

All here learn with profound sorrow of the death of our esteemed co-laborer and grand leader, Miss Frances E. Willard. I believe that those who die in Christ are nearer to us after the hour of death than they were while in the flesh.—(Dr.) I. K. Funk, The Voice, N. Y.

I am sorrowing with you to-day not only as one of the world of women who are sore stricken because the great leader has been called into the presence of "The King," but as the individual woman who loved and revered Frances Willard.—Isabella Charles Davis, secretary National Society King's Daughters, New York City.

What a blow the telegram of Friday has been to us all. There are not many women whose death would be such a loss to two great countries as that of our beloved leader. For her it is glory and rest unspeakable, for us the deepest sorrow and loss. To know her at all was to love her. If the Atlantic did not roll between us nothing would have prevented my showing my love and reverence by following her to the grave.—Agnes E. Weston, Supt. of Work among Sailors for World's W. C. T. U., Portsmouth, England.

There was very little of Frances Willard that could die. She was a spirit living to a far greater degree than almost any one else the spiritual life. Shall we not enter into her joy?—Lillian Whiting, Boston.

That something of my words (in "Kindly Light in Prayer and Praise") comforted our beautiful sister, so tender, so true to the whole of humanity, is a very sacred thing to me. I bless God for giving her to our world. Her work by the grace of the shadow of death will increase here into an ever greatening spiritual power.—(Rev.) John M. Scott, New York

I have been with you in spirit in your lonely journey toward the setting sun and I can see you to-day in the Temple with that precious body. It is not only the women who feel lonesome without Miss Willard who was so dear to all who knew her. Many men who did not know her personally have spoken so tenderly and sweetly of her memory. I sincerely hope that you may be able to bear up under this heavy burden and go on with the work which was so dear to her.—(Dr.) Alfred K. Hills, New York. (The physician who attended Miss Willard.)

The world mourns a grandly equipped leader of all good causes. Her life is a prophecy and harbinger of the good time which has been so long on the way. Miss Willard will be mourned in all the continents. I found her name as familiar and dear in Asia as in America. Twenty years hence her name and deeds will loom up larger than even to day.—John Henry Barrows (D. D.), Chicago.

We as a household are personally bereaved; the whole country, yes, the world, has met with a loss that seems irreparable. God alone understands and will send comfort and help. I write in Dr. Strong's absence.—Mrs. Josiah Strong, Greenwich, Ct.

It is with the profoundest sorrow that we have heard of the death of Miss Willard, the most useful as well as the most loved woman in America.—William Hayes Ward, The Independent, New York.

"If ye loved me ye would rejoice." Isn't that what our beloved Miss Willard is saying to every one of us who are mourning her departure hence? A great light in the spiritual sky has vanished making the world seem dark and lonely.—Mrs. Joseph Cook, Newton Centre, Mass.

Thank God for faith! Oh, what a happy meeting when all tribulation is ended!—Sarah Hill Hall, Churchville. (Miss Willard's aunt, sister of "Saint Courageous.")

Our hero is fallen, and the pulse of the world will beat in unbroken sorrow and sympathy. She is one of the hosts of witnesses that surround us.—Mrs. Dr. Cullis, Boston.

I am so overcome with the sad news, but God knows best. He gives and He takes away.—Mrs. Westover Alden, New York. (Tribune.)

This morning's paper tells the sad, sad story. My tears flow with yours over the sacrifice Miss Willard has made to her noble work.—Mrs. Dio Lewis, New York.

All I can think of in connection with Miss Willard's life are the words, "Of whom the world was not worthy." She belonged in heaven. The fight has been long and hard, and now she will see by sight the oncoming victory of all her cherished hopes.—Margaret Bottome, New York.

REST COTTAGE, FRONT VIEW.

No international bereavement has ever been as extensive among the women of the world as this for Frances E. Willard. We all rejoice that we have been blessed by her human preparation for the real life just commenced.—Elizabeth B. Grannis, National Christian League for the promotion of Social Purity, New York.

I see by the morning papers that the dreaded blow has fallen and that the busy brain so full of plans for the world's betterment, and the throbbing heart so aglow with love for humanity have ceased to act. Please accept my sympathy and even now my congratulations that you have been so close to one of the world's most peerless characters.—E. J. Wheeler, New York.

OFFERED BY DR. SIMEON GILBERT AND ADOPTED BY CHICAGO CONGREGATIONAL MINISTERS' UNION:

We, the members of the Congregational Ministers' Union of Chicago, desire hereby to extend to the officers and members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union our deep sympathy in the loss of their beloved leader, Miss Frances E. Willard, and to express our profound sense of the nobility of her character, the value of her personal influence, and the importance of her services to the cause of redeeming the homes of the world through the gospel of temperance, purity and love.

We desire especially to put on record our gratitude to God for the gift not alone to America, but to the world, of a personality so richly endowed by nature; so favored in her early home-life and training; so variously developed by the best educational advantages and associations; so early inspired by beautiful strange impulses deeper than words could express, and fascinated by loftiest ideals of service; so manifestly led on, step by step, by the almost invisible hand of God; so gifted with the prophetic vision in apprehending the meaning of her time and the divine opportunity of it; so ready for utter sacrifice of self; made so fearless as if with somewhat of God's own courage in going the way He leads; so filled with the spirit of an infinite pity in view of the world's sin and sorrow; so distinctly a genius, a genius sanctified by the spirit of Christ, not only for eloquent and persuasive speech and consummate organizing force and faculty, but for friendships—such friendships among the more enlightened Christian women of the world as have served to draw them, during these recent years, into a great new form of world-wide comradeship, itself one of the most shining and impressive tokens of that unity for which our Saviour prayed and which the coming century is sure more and more to reveal in the immensely hastened advancement of the kingdom of Christ among men, in our own and in every land.

MEMORIAL DAY

FOR FRANCES E. WILLARD,

combined with the observance of Prohibition Day, Sunday, March 20, the birthday of General Neal Dow.

Notes and Comments.

IT should have been stated in our memorial number that the larger picture of Miss Willard on page 2 of cover was taken in the parlor of The Cottage, Reigate, England, and was used by the kind permission of Miss Helen Hood, who had the plate made for the Illinois Watch-Tower, of which she is editor. The picture on the same page showing interior of Willard Hall was taken by flashlight just after the casket, with its white star-spangled pall and floral pieces, had been carried out for the journey to Evanston. Friends will also be interested to know that at Rest Cottage the casket was placed in the bay window of the parlor, pictured on last page of cover.

MRS. STEVENS has been in Chicago since Miss Willard's funeral, and is every day at National Headquarters, encouraging and comforting all hearts by her strong, gentle presence. Important business calls her to Portland for the 20th, where she will remain for about three weeks, and then return to Chicago for a short time. She is planning to spend as much time at Headquarters as the interests of the work seem to demand. The National Union has great cause for thanksgiving that so tried and true a hand is upon the helm in this crucial time. Miss Anna Gordon is also in Chicago, busily at work upon the memorial volume, which, at the request of the General Officers and as one of Miss Willard's literary executors, she is preparing. After the book is completed Miss Gordon will probably go to England for a time, at the urgent invitation of Lady Henry Somerset.

A CABLEGRAM from Lady Henry Somerset to the officers at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, reads: "My greatest joy is to render service at any time. One in Love." This message was sent in return: "Loving loyalty to you World's president." We are glad to be able to state that Lady Henry's health is much improved and that she, with a sorrowing fidelity that is deserving of the devoted loyalty of all white-ribboners, will take up the important duties devolving upon her as president of the World's W. C. T. U.

DURING that sadly memorable week, Feb. 18–24, W. C. T. U. National Headquarters at the Temple was the Mecca for sorrowing comrades and friends. White-ribboners from distant states, and friends—men and women—representing every section of the country, came to express as best they might the universal grief. In the reception room a large picture of Miss Willard was decorated with white carnations and a broad, white ribbon pendant, sent by the Nashville, Tenn., union. On a stand under the picture was the Crusade Bible, open at the Crusade Psalm, also the gavel Miss Willard always used at Conventions, this tied with white ribbon. The center table held a wreath of magnolia and palm leaves, sent from Florida. The windows and doors were draped in purple and white bunting, looped with white ribbon and ferns. The Illinois office was also draped in white bunting. In the editorial rooms and the offices of the Temple Trustees and Chicago Central union were white carnations, and on the doors streamers of broad, white ribbon entwined with smilax.

WE ask the forbearance of those white-ribboners and friends whose contributions and official communications to THE UNION SIGNAL have been delayed. In spite of the space already given to the subject filling all our hearts we still have on hand a multitude of tributes in prose and verse, resolutions and reports of memorial services to which it is impossible to give place. In view, therefore, of the large number of unions which will hold memorial services on Sunday, March 20, in this and other countries, we beg to suggest that reports of these meetings come to THE UNION SIGNAL through the regularly appointed state reporters, whom we ask to kindly crystallize them into a few short paragraphs expressive of the thought and feeling of their respective states upon the loss of our great leader. It would doubtless be a melancholy satisfaction to every union to say at least a word in its own personality, but of this all may be sure, that the world at large, as well as white-ribboners, know the love and loyalty and the sense of loss that exists throughout the rank and file of the W. C. T. U. army at this time.

MRS. AMANDA A. SUDDUTH has gone to join her loved ones in the beautiful Beyond. She passed from earthly life on Saturday, February 26, at her home in Colton, Cal., the news reaching us just too late to report in our issue of March 3. The death of Dr. Sudduth in 1895 was a severe blow to his lifelong companion and its prostrating effects finally culminated in the illness which caused her death. Mrs. Sudduth was an active W. C. T. U. worker from the early days of the organization, first in Illinois, afterwards in California, where she was president of her local union and county superintendent of capital and labor until last year, when failing health made it necessary for her to decline renomination. She leaves a son, Dr. W. X. Sudduth, a prominent physician of Chicago, and two daughters, Miss Alice Sudduth, National and state superintendent of flower missions, and Miss Margaret A. Sudduth, known and loved of all white-ribboners through her eight years connection with THE UNION SIGNAL.

JUST as we go to press the following tender message is received:

EASTNOR CASTLE, LEDBURY.
March 4, 1898.

Comrades beloved, whose loyal affection long ago made America home to me:—

I send a word of greeting to you from my aching heart, because in sorrow we turn to those we love, and our best consolation is that they understand with that intuitive sympathy that needs no words. What Frances Willard was to us, we need not tell each other. What she has been to me through the last seven years, our Heavenly Father only knows; so tender, so true, so real, so devoted a friend is never given but once in life, and then comes as a benediction from the Giver of all good. Where our treasure is there shall our hearts be also, and so to-day our hearts must be very near heaven, where our sweet saint rests in the paradise of God. "If ye loved me, ye would rejoice" are the words that ring in my ears, and loving her as we do and feeling how thin is the veil that separates us, for heaven is our home, we can not but rejoice that the heavy work, the hours of weakness, the thought of times ahead when she could no longer devote herself to all she held most dear, are passed away. The ripple of the great river washed over her so gently that she seemed borne by angel hands, and laid to rest like a little child, and her last words will be our watchword until we meet her yonder: "How beautiful it is to be with God." To be with God in the daily struggle against the forces of evil; to be with God in the midst of the combat and the heat of the strife; to be with God in our deep sympathies one with another, in a love like hers that knew no metes or bounds, but flowed out to others as the sunshine floods the world, and then to be with God where Frances is for all the summer time of heaven. God make us all she wanted us to be.

Your loyal comrade,

Isabel Somerset.

Sleep Well, Brave Heart.

BY MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

[Written while Mrs. Dickinson sat by the side of Miss Willard's casket, Monday, February 21.]

SLEEP well, brave heart! Beloved of Christ and crowned,
He gives thee sleep.
The wide world's love enwraps thy slumber round,
God gives thee sleep.
His angels smile; His stricken children weep;
Yet smiles, nor tears, shall break thy blessed sleep.

Oh, wondrous face! whose mystic, solemn grace
O'er-floods the gloom,
Till grief — in all this sorrow-haunted place—
No more finds room.
Show us, dear God, what glory greets her eyes,
Let us, too, hear the voice that bids her rise.

Chide not our tears! So weak we are and blind,
Yet she would share
Her gladness with us who are left behind.
Heed Thou our prayer!
Not yet. Not yet? Tarries the vision still?
Then, grant us, Lord—with her—to love Thy will.

To work Thy will, to follow where she trod,
Without a fear;
To drink her cup; to climb the heights of God
Knowing her near;
To make her joy more joyful by our strife.
So may we share even here her glorious life.

So may our homes, our land in shame so long,
Be cleansed from wrong;
So may our breaking hearts through love be strong,
Through love be strong.
Bless still, through us, earth's sinning and oppressed.
Thy work rests not, dear heart. Take thou thy rest.

Tributes to Frances E. Willard.

HAVING learned of the death of Miss Frances E. Willard we desire to put on record our high estimate of her noble character and world wide influence for good as well as our profound sorrow over the loss of such a powerful ally to every good cause.

For largeness and pureness of heart and intellect Miss Willard certainly had no superior. Her unselfish devotion to the interests of the wronged of both sexes and of all lands has secured for her a warm and an abiding place in the affections of her contemporaries and will cause the record of her life to be as ointment poured forth to the generations following.

THE PROHIBITION CONFERENCE OF WESTCHESTER COUNTY.

Yonkers, N. Y.

I CAN hardly tell all that I feel in the departure of Miss Willard. Certainly a gap has come in my life not to be filled. I had for so many years followed her grand work, noble character and great purposes, and always with admiration, which were intensified by a too brief personal intercourse, that I cannot but feel her loss most deeply.

Through her "Autobiography," which she so kindly gave me on her last visit to E——, I can still converse with her, learning more and more of her beautiful and marvelous life. The end of this beautiful life on earth was, I trust, but the prelude to the glorious hereafter reserved for God's faithful ones.

SISTER M. F. DE SALES.

THE rarest, purest, sweetest spirit has left the world and we are all poorer, weaker and sadder for it.

Dear Miss Willard was a most gifted woman. Nobody could know her without honoring and loving her. She seemed to be purified from the earthly and yet she was in closest sympathy with all suffering humanity and with all the wayward and sinful. She had tireless energy, firm and dauntless courage. She retained every womanly grace in her warfare with evil and against wicked and powerful men. There was more to be admired in her than in any reformer or acknowledged leader that I have known.

CYRUS HAMLIN, D. D.,
First President of Robert College, Constantinople.
New York.

THE world has lost a friend in the passing of Miss Willard. For her own sake none can sorrow that she has entered the higher life, nor can her Christ-like spirit of gentleness and love ever pass from the earth. Her first public address was made in the interests of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society at Centenary Church, Chicago, and a recent letter to me proved that she ever retained warm interest in this sister organization. "To be a road-maker across the Apennines of life" was her destiny, and she built well. How many times in the days to come, when difficulties seem unsurmountable, we shall say, "Oh, for an hour of Frances Willard!" May the God of all consolation, who lets us know best His love in time of grief, be the stay of the W. C. T. U.

LOUISE MANNING HODGKINS,
Editor of Woman's Missionary Friend.

Boston, Mass.

THE death of Frances E. Willard is an irreparable loss to the human race. She was the most eminent woman in this nation, holding her eminence by the use of extraordinary powers for the highest ends; and her work was far from finished. All that Christianity can ask of a human soul she strove for, and in large measure attained. In her natural powers she belonged to the highest order of human beings, the supreme traits of whom are, to know the right—that which makes for the highest welfare of mankind; to love the right and devotedly pursue it; and to possess in immeasurable degree the power of winsome control over others. All these she had to any heart's content; and there was in her nature a high fineness of quality which is the delight of every right-minded soul. If there be any flower from heaven that blooms on this earth, her soul was such a flower; and the ecstasy of the blooming of that flower was that it drew to itself the same kind of souls, and intensified in all the souls that it drew every element of nature that tended to the same high character.

There is no measure by which to measure the good work which this high soul wrought. She permeated the moral atmosphere of the American nation with a spiritual ozone which is a quickening tonic to every noble impulse and every true aspiration of man or woman alike; and that nation will ever be of a higher grade because she lived in it.

In all this it was not chiefly what she advocated, but what she was, as shining through and according with what she advocated, that was the great power. She showed in her soul what a true Christ woman is; as she declared in her teaching what a true Christ woman should do.

While they live who saw her, heard her voice, felt the magic of her eloquence and appreciated the high nobility of aim and trend in all that she did, the memory of Miss Willard will be cherished as a blessed recollection, and her name will be inscribed among the immortals of mankind.

NONE were more pained at the news of the illness and death of Miss Willard, than were we. She was our true and faithful friend and has helped us in many ways. We share in common with others the great loss and sorrow. Our efforts, in behalf of the cause which Miss Willard so much loved, and to which she gave her dear life, shall be untiring.

We send to Miss Cornelia Dow in this mail a check for five dollars—which is a contribution to the Temple fund and wish that we might send more.

May He who doeth all things well supply her comrades with strength and help necessary to continue the great work.

IN the death of our beloved friend, Frances Willard, we have lost one of the noblest souls that it was ever the privilege of any organization to have for a leader. Men and women everywhere without regard to differences of opinions on religious and other questions, unite in regret for the loss of one whose life was so useful and full of unselfish zeal for humanity. Will the organization please accept assurance of my personal sorrow and of my deepest sympathy for its loss.

THE young people of Methodism have lost a dear friend and noble example in the death of Miss Frances Willard. Her pure and spotless life will be the goal to which thousands upon thousands will aspire.

On behalf of over five thousand members of the Epworth League of the Chicago Northern District (which embraces in its territory the city of Evanston) I desire to tender sincere sympathy to the great temperance organization of which Miss Willard was the revered leader.

ALFRED DIXON,
Pres. Chicago Northern District Epworth League.

SPEAKING of lives potent in the annals of the race, a week ago orations were delivered, sermons were preached which had for their incentive the recounting of the deeds of one of earth's "Great Hearts," the "Greatest ever born of American mothers," Abraham Lincoln, who stands for all that is noblest and best in American manhood, and whom more and more we delight to honor. And it seems a strange coincidence to me, that as a week ago so many minds were turned to thoughts of him who fifty years ago said the time was coming when there should neither be a slave nor a drunkard in our land, that as then our thoughts were directed to him who more than any other stands for American manhood, so, to-day, we are called upon to mourn the passing of her, who, of heroic personality, embodied in herself the incarnation of the purpose which is surely bringing to pass the second part of that prophecy of Abraham Lincoln, and who, more than any other, stands for American womanhood—Frances Willard! I have no hesitancy in naming her with the great emancipator, and saying that we mourn to-day the passing of the greatest woman born of American mothers. History will so write her. A week ago thousands of freedmen thanked God for Abraham Lincoln; to-day, while they mourn, thousands of freed men and women thank God for Frances Willard!

IT is no common chance that takes away a noble mind. The ancients said "Death is not an evil because it is universal!" But in the death of Frances E. Willard, the great soldier fighting upward and onward for the liberation of humanity, the poor have lost a benefactor and the world a dauntless leader, who felt it to be a more noble and complete thing to lift up the fallen than to crush them low. Her motto was "Level up; never down!" She at least always lived in the ampler ether and the diviner air of her ideal. Our leader was the Joan of Arc of the nineteenth century. Frances E. Willard's field was the world. She was greater than Joan of Arc. She took up the cause of "ballotless woman"; the cause of a motherless government; the cause of purity and total abstinence. She taught, too, in her own loving way the sweet, sad music of humanity.

Frances E. Willard (for I know not thy new name in Heaven), brave, pure, noble, sweet-souled patriot woman and statesman, hail and farewell! . . . The love of the world has made thy name and thy memory immortal. To-day we come not to shed tears over the fullness of this glorious life. She died to make women free. She possessed a soul of fire incased in a shell of pearl. Frances Willard was a woman of whom the world was not worthy! God married her to humanity. In her lips was the law of kindness. Her glorious life-struggle was to emancipate woman and to educate mankind to the higher life.

Like a star unhasting and unresting, our God took her to His beautiful Heaven. That was her coronation day—great, sweet, tender, uncrowned queen of the world!

RESOLUTIONS.

COOK COUNTY BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE CATHOLIC TOTAL ABSTINENCE UNION OF ILLINOIS, John F. Cunneen, president, February 27:

WHEREAS, Almighty God has called to her eternal reward Frances E. Willard, President Woman's Christian Temperance Union; be it

Resolved, That we place on record an expression of our grief at the loss of the great leader who unsparingly and unselfishly devoted her brilliant attainments, pure, honest, and upright life, to the cause of humanity; and that we sympathize with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in their bereavement, and hope that the memory of the steadfast devotion and wonderful accomplishments of their departed leader will inspire them to continue undiminished their noble work, in the cause which we all have so deeply at heart.

THE CHICAGO SINGLE TAX CLUB, R. J. Kennedy, corresponding secretary, February 18:

WHEREAS, The cause of social reform has lost, in the death of Frances E. Willard, one of its most brilliant, broad-minded and effective advocates;

Resolved, That the single taxers of Chicago extend to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union affectionate greeting and profound sympathy in this their great bereavement. Recognizing as we do her high character and great moral worth as a leader in the cause of humanity, the single taxers wish to express their sorrow at the loss of one who recognized and appreciated their philosophy. Our humble tribute to her worth is the more sincere and affectionate because Miss Willard was farsighted enough to see, and broad-minded and brave enough to declare, that "the present economic condition of the country, the misery of millions of our people, the vast number of the unemployed, and the still greater number forced into unnatural employment at small wages, call for reforms which, if they could be brought about, would vastly diminish the tendency to drink."

STATE CONVENTION OF THE PROHIBITION PARTY OF RHODE ISLAND, PROVIDENCE, Elisha T. Read, secretary, February 22:

Inasmuch as it has pleased Almighty God to remove from the midst of her earthly labors the long honored President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Miss Frances E. Willard, be it

Resolved, That we the representatives of the Prohibition party of Rhode Island, in convention assembled, do express our hearty appreciation of the character, ability and resolute leadership of this wonderful woman, that we put on record our sense of personal loss in her departure to a higher leadership, and our prayers to the Infinite Father that he may send forth just such another brilliant heroine into the battle; be it further

Resolved, That we express our sympathy to the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union throughout the whole world in the loss of one who can so truly be called a martyr to the cause of temperance.

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF THE LIBERTY PARTY ASSEMBLED AT COLUMBUS, OHIO, Offered by Rev. C. E. Bentley, February 23:

Resolved, That this conference has heard with profound regret and sorrow of the death of Frances E. Willard, the distinguished leader and advocate of the National and World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union,

That in the death of Frances E. Willard every organized reform the world over has suffered an irreparable loss, and that this is especially and peculiarly true of those reforms which aim at the destruction of the legalized drink traffic, the overthrow of sex suffrage and that system of class legislation that robs the masses to enrich the few,

That it is with a sense of personal bereavement that we extend our sympathies to the great organization of which for nearly twenty years Miss Willard has been the recognized head in matchless leadership, and that we unite our prayers with them that God will endow her successor with the qualities that make for abundant and speedy success.

THE METHODIST PREACHERS OF TROY, N. Y., AND VICINITY:

Resolved, That we, the Methodist preachers of Troy, N. Y., and vicinity assure Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Vice-President of the National W. C. T. U., and through her the members of the National and World's W. C. T. U., of our sorrow at the great loss our church, the W. C. T. U. and the world at large have suffered in the death of Miss Frances E. Willard, the great leader of the W. C. T. U. movement. We pray God that the work begun and so successfully prosecuted by Miss Willard and her worthy coadjutors may be heartily sustained by the churches and all good citizens so that the time may soon come when the drink traffic in our nation and the world shall be entirely done away with and purity and peace prevail.

VICTORIA JUBILEE LODGE, 3, MILLMEAD ROAD, TWERTON, SOMERSET, ENGLAND, E. Powley, I. P. C. N., secretary, February 26:

Kindly convey a vote of condolence, passed on February 21, 1898, by the brothers of the above Victoria Jubilee Lodge, to the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, on the sad death of their noble leader, Miss F. Willard.

THE NATIONAL SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION, Susan B. Anthony, president, Washington, D. C.:

Resolved, That the death of Frances E. Willard has removed from the world one of the great forces that make for righteousness; an unequaled educator of conservative men and women to a belief in equal rights; the friend, guide and inspirer of thousands; a great heart always ready to feel for sorrow and suffering; a great brain, fertile in a wise and far reaching plan to make the world better; a great soul, ever following the light and drawing others after it with a power as sure and certain as gravitation. We grieve not for her, but for ourselves, and we tender our sympathy to those most near and dear to her in this time of their and our affliction.

Resolutions have also been sent in from Young Woman's Christian Association, of the City of New York, New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, Independent Order Good Templars, Chicago Culture Club, Board of Managers of the National Temperance Hospital, and from a large number of other societies, unions and churches.

The Passing of Frances E. Willard.

BY MRS. S. M. I. HENRY.

WE heard her pass; her eager step
Had such a dainty, martial ring;
Yet she was shod with peace, and came
Good tidings of great joy to bring.
How beautiful, how beautiful,
Upon the mountains bare,
Her feet that brought Christ back to men
Who fainted with despair!

We saw her pass all clad in white,
Which is the righteousness of saints;
And at the vision faith took heart,
And hushed were murmurs and complaints.
How selfish sorrow grew ashamed
Before the greatness of her love,
That, self-forgetting, drew us on
The Christlikeness she was to prove.

So she has passed! and we bend low,
Like those who listen for a strain
Of music, that they hope to catch
Just once again, O once again!
Just once again to hear her step;
Her voice, so like the Shepherd's own.
But she has passed; and listening
We hear the voice of Christ alone.

Ah, she has passed! A friendly light
Lent for a few dark lonely miles
Of life's sad journey; to bring cheer
To those who safer walked the whiles.
And, passing, she has left the mark
Of her small foot upon the way
That He had trod before, who came
To guide us to Eternal Day.

So she has passed; and left the place
She filled, empty of all but God.
No other form but Christ alone
We see upon the path she trod.
His voice alone we hear to-day,
Since hers to such strange silence fell;
And so we can but answer, "Lord
Since thou art here, 'tis well, 'tis well."

Excerpts From the Eulogies of Miss Willard by Our Religious Exchanges.

THE vivid quality of Miss Willard's nature was such that she could invest any subject with interest, and the excursive quality of her mind was so great that she could touch the whole circle of human thought and flit among the sciences as a bird from tree to tree. Jeremy Pycroft, in his book on "The Art of Reading," speaks of bees, spiders and butterflies lighting upon the same flowers; the bee extracts honey, the spider, poison, the butterfly, nothing. She touched upon all flowers of thought, extracted no poison, but much honey, which she did not hide in a hive, but distributed freely to all who came in her way. . . . . .

A collection of her addresses to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union would be self-revealing, exhibiting the different stages of her development and the strange power she possessed of uttering her sentiments at intervals, as though they were everlasting principles. Most instructive would they be in illustrating the operations of the highest type of the feminine mind in grappling with the mighty problems of development, government, civilization and ideal reform. Her power of attracting friends has hardly been surpassed among women. Her relations to Lady Isabel Somerset illustrate it. When these two met, the one untitled except by the suffrages of her hundred thousand constituents, the other of noble birth, they were henceforth lovely and pleasant in their lives, until there came a time when the difference of opinion was so wide that they drew apart in public attitude, though not in personal regard. Deep was the grief of Miss Willard, and doubtless equally sincere was the sorrow of Lady Somerset. It would seem to be an unusual mercy, since Miss Willard was to die, that she could know in her sickness that the cause of that divergence was removed.—The Christian Advocate.

IT is doubtful whether the death of any woman, save possibly Victoria, Queen of England, could have produced as widespread and so profound a sorrow as will be produced by the death of Miss Frances E. Willard. . . . The saint of mediæval Christianity retired from the world to keep herself pure; Miss Willard went out from coveted retirement to purify the world. She thus set an example which many women have followed who never belonged to the organization of which she was president. And both she and they have shown that the grace of womanhood need not be sacrificed in order to accomplish beneficent results in world activities. We are far from intimating that Miss Willard has been the only leader in this great movement. Generosity to her memory does not require, what she would be the first to condemn, injustice to others. But greatness is shown perhaps in nothing more than in a clear perception of a great providential tendency in the midst of which one is living, so that one can perceive neither its historic source nor its ultimate issue. To perceive such a tendency, to avail one's self of it, and to guide it in noble and right directions, is the function of the prophet; such a prophet we count Miss Willard. —The Outlook.

A TENSE and lofty Puritanism, freed from repellent rigidities and ungracious sternness, was incarnate in the sweet, strong life of Frances Elizabeth Willard. In no other personality were power and suavity fused in more perfect unity; ethics and æsthetics harmonized in her attitudes and judgments by an intuition that never failed in impulses of conduct or ideals of character. She loved the beautiful; and if she was a "reformer," it was because she desired to reconstruct all society in harmony with the loftiest ideals of moral and spiritual beauty. To her, evil was not only profoundest folly, but most repulsive deformity, and her life ministry became a passionate endeavor to restore the lost grace of beautiful living in home and state. An atmosphere of self-evidencing goodness environed her; she radiated the spirit of purity, and her God-inspired activities were an inevitable, irresistible appeal to the best qualities of the soul.—The Western Christian Advocate.

ONE did not need the lesson of the departure of Miss Willard to suggest that she was one of the most notable, if not the most notable public woman in modern civilization. The argument is summed up in the statements that the lady was a matchless leader of women, and a leader under a moral constitution and in an ethical commonwealth that are beyond compare. We say "are" beyond compare, because the enterprise survives. The leading depends not on the one woman alone, since it is in the hands of a supreme power that never fails so to fill vacancies that the recent captain always says "Amen!"

There are two kinds of leadership. One finds raw recruits, infuses enthusiasm, glorifies the motive of a campaign, and makes men and women happy to die for a great cause. The other finds waiting and outfitted patriots, recognizes their divine aspirations and leads into the arena those who long have sighed for the hour of battle in God's holy name. Miss Willard savored of both kinds of leadership. She knew how to gird the hesitating and also how to utilize the zeal of a subordinate who had been upon the mountains of faith and vision during the night, and had descended to the camp with a message of improved plans of holy campaign. . . . Be it said that hers is a glorious army to lead. It almost went of itself. It had vowed a great vow unto God, and God sent Frances Willard. Under such circumstances an army is greater than any leader, and so thought and said Miss Willard herself.—The Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE Woman's Christian Temperance Union is to-day a great power in this country, and is growing in all parts of the world. It has done and is doing a great work for the home. The organization has reached such a point that loss of its leader, though a serious one, will not retard progress.

Miss Willard's life displayed in unusual measure the qualities of a successful reformer. These are, the ability to see a great opportunity, and the power to make others see it so strongly that action is inevitable. It might well have been that the enthusiasm of the seventies, which during a few months seemed to promise the great weakening of the saloon power, would have died out and left no trace behind to tell of the prayers and tears and victories of those days. But that spirit, which led noble women at one time to be forgetful of conventionality and careless of public opinion in their crusade, was embodied by the leaders of the W. C. T. U., of whom Miss Willard has been almost from the first an acknowledged chief, in a permanent organization.—The Standard.

A FRIENDSHIP of almost twenty-five years has taught us to honor Frances Willard as one of the bravest, truest, greatest of the world's benefactors of the nineteenth century. She ranked high among the noble women who continue to hold the homage of their own sex after admission to closest friendship. Queenly in spirit, with interest world-wide, she freely gave her attention and sympathy to the humblest whom she thought she could help. Thousands of young girls have been lifted to higher ambitions and nobler visions by the clasp of her hand and a kindly sentence, uttered in that clear, sweet voice that charmed those who heard it, whether there were thousands listening or one alone standing beside her. . . . . .

Miss Willard sought to realize the ideal for mankind with a chivalry and devotion which knew no limit till they exhausted her vital powers. On the platform, in the pulpit, in the editor's chair, in political campaigns, in organizing and leading new movements against intemperance, impurity, poverty—all human sins and ills—no knight of olden or modern times ever more deserved to be called "without fear and without reproach" than Frances Willard.—The Congregationalist.

NO woman's name is better known in the English-speaking world than that of Miss Willard, save that of England's good queen. No woman in our generation has crowned herself with more royal achievements, or shown herself possessed of finer qualities of leadership, or wielded so supreme an influence over her own sex, or carried a great reform, rather a series of great reforms, to a larger success. To evoke, organize and direct such forces as are combined in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union indicates the possession of extraordinary power; and it is the simple truth to say that in the death of Miss Willard the foremost woman in the public life of this country has been removed. . . . We have to-day outside the Church no moral, educational and reformatory agency which compares with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in the scope of its activity, the completeness of its organization, or the wide reach of its influence. The heart of Frances E. Willard inspired it, her brain planned and developed it, her executive hand guided it in its magnificent course. Both the temperance cause and the woman's cause were advanced and set on a higher plane by this lovely and masterful woman. —The Independent.

LESS than two years ago Miss Willard was asked the question, "Have you a life motto?" Her reply was, "Yes, indeed! it is, 'Mea Vita Vota,' my life is a vow." Right nobly has that vow been carried out, and her life is now an investment, one of the most helpful lives that has enriched the world during the past fifty years. . . . Aspiration led her ever upward until from a higher level than any of the high places of earth she heard the invitation, "Come up higher." Heroism she has displayed in a conspicuous manner, for she has been the recognized leader for more than a score of years of that great army which is fighting "For God and Home and Native Land," and she gave her life for the cause that she loved.

As for the laudable ambition of which she made confession, to be widely known and to be loved and believed in, what woman in the ranks of reform can take precedence of her in these respects? She is the Victoria of temperance reform, the uncrowned queen of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, now wearing a crown of life, a woman eminently worthy of trust and who is rich in the love of uncounted admirers.—The Advance.

MISS WILLARD was doubtless the most famous American woman of her day. Not only in America, but wherever the English language is spoken, her name as president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union had become a household word. From her childhood, as she confesses in her autobiography, she had a keen appetite for praise, a hunger for fame. But deeper than all that was the primary and overmastering passion of her life to deserve it, alike by what she should be, and what she should do and achieve. And then, while she loved well enough approbation, no one was ever more unselfish or more generous than she in recognizing every fine quality in others. In her loving praise of others she showed a real genius for saying the right thing in the most felicitous way. . . . . Miss Willard was "Methodist born and Methodist bred;" nor did she ever deny her loyalty to her own church ; but a finer instance of the true Christian liberality toward religionists of every sort it would be hard to name. In this was one of the secrets of her power. In her view the garment of the Christian spirit was ever a seamless robe. With no palaver about Christian unity, she began by recognizing it as already existing, under whatever distinguishing name she found a life that was dominated by love and apt for any Christlike service.—The Interior.

MISS WILLARD was a statesman. Her mind easily grasped great problems of state and reform. She was a politician in the best use of that term. She understood the history, life and purposes of the different political parties among us, and comprehended fully the drift and the possibilities. With all the delicacy, chasteness and modesty of noblest womanhood there was linked the strong practical grasp of a man upon the social, reformatory and political life of the country. She would have been the peer of the ablest if she had occupied a seat in the United States Senate. There seemed no place in public life which she could not have filled creditably. Upon the platform she was a queen, presiding over mammoth conventions with perfect ease, signal poise, and masterly power. She was a marvelous executive, and possessed the ability to turn off a great amount of literary work by dictation with unusual felicity and grace. She was eloquent and impassioned, commanding the intellectual assent of cultivated people on both continents. She could speak well upon an endless variety of themes. . . . As a reformer she has no peer in American or English womanhood.—Zion's Herald.

TO a rare intellectual equipment, keen and penetrating philosophic insight and unusual depth of spiritual feeling, Miss Willard united executive abilities and the gifts of successful leadership to a degree unsurpassed in the history of her sex. And to all her other gifts and powers were added the less definable but still more potent influence that came from the gentle, sweet and gracious spirit of a true woman. Before her advent on the stage of action, various causes championed by women had suffered greatly in the estimation of the most earnest and thoughtful Christian people by their close association and their identification in some instances with openly anti-Christian teachings, and by the coarse and violent methods sometimes adopted in their propaganda. Miss Willard's character and influence went far in changing all this, and in giving an entirely new aspect to the cause of woman in its various and best-known phases. Herself a devout Christian, an active member of one of the evangelical denominations, and a woman of dominant spiritual gifts, she threw all her great influence in every movement in which she was identified on the side of Christian truth and Christian faith as held and taught in the evangelical churches. In her multitude of books and pamphlets and in her innumerable public addresses there was no note so constant, no thought so dominant, as her faith in God and her love for Christ.—The Christian Work.

MISS WILLARD'S life was truly noble, both by precept and example. She was a most indefatigable worker in the noble cause of the moral elevation of humanity, and her charity recognized no lines of denominational difference. She was broad-minded and liberal, and had a deep love for the good she saw in the Catholic church, and she was beloved by those Catholic co-operators with whom she was so frequently brought into philanthropic intercourse.—The Catholic Standard and Times.

THE world knows brave Miss Willard best by the badge of white ribbon, worn only by the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Almost twenty years she was president of the National society, and for ten years of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Little need be said here of her temperance work. The secular and religious press have spread world-wide her precepts and platform. Fierce war has been waged over her advocated methods of reform. Good men and women have criticised. Societies and parties have split. But to-day every sword is sheathed, every critic voluntarily silent. The thinkers of the world, the leaders, the home-makers, young men and maidens, old men and little children, with one accord pay to her memory an honest tribute of affection and honor.

As a speaker Miss Willard appealed not to sense, but to soul; not to ambition, but to chivalry; not to loyalty even, so much as to love. For success, per se, she cared little. Succor was the keynote of her endeavor. Her texts were varied, but they all led to the Rome of her heart's desire—the extermination of the legalized saloon and the establishment in the world's homes of "a white life for two."—The Epworth Herald.

IT is hard to speak in moderate terms when writing of Miss Willard. She filled all her friends with so ardent an admiration and affection, her outgoing personality came to occupy so large a part of every life she entered, that all words seem tame in trying to describe her. We are fortunate in being able to present in this number one of the last articles that came from her gifted pen, a most characteristic essay, bearing a solemn and weighty message to the young people who, next to her own dear Y's were closest to her heart. Upon the office door of the state executive rooms, overlooking Boston Common and the beautiful region beyond the city, white crape and a great bunch of violets speak silently of the dead leader. Fragrance and purity! How well they symbolize her life!—The Christian Endeavor World.

SHE was queen in the realm in which she lived and acted. But her regal qualities lay not in the desire that others should obey her, rather the potency of her sway lay in her purpose to induce men to dethrone wickedness and to crown righteousness as the ruling power in their lives. Unnumbered presidents and potentates will occupy the pages of history as mere names, but should the historian neglect to record the name of Frances Willard, the world would scarcely note the omission, for so much of the nobleness of her life was wrought into the life of the generation in which she lived that the countless years will not obliterate the transmitted line of her beneficent influence upon the character of humanity. She will not cease to speak and act in the lives of an innumerable multitude into whose souls she has breathed the music which is and ever shall be the gladness of the world.—Onward.

The Relation of the Home to the Saloon.

BY MARY H. HULL.

(Concluded.)

ALL traffic is but a housekeeping affair. The "biscuit" and "soap" and "sugar" and "coal" affairs—everyone is hatched of the one little social cell called the family; but the liquor business alone stands out as its born enemy. It attempts to supply the home with something answering to food and recreation, amusement, etc., and would indeed be happily reckoned upon if it dealt out a true and not a false service. But as it is, the home and saloon forces are to be pitted against each other most fully, not only at the ballot box when woman comes to vote, as she surely will, but at the fireside where woman must be equal to the situation and win with home life in dead earnest against the allurements of the saloon.

Our present remnant of life, which has survived from centuries of conquest, then of centuries of get, grab, steal, would seem to be merely in its babyhood, animalhood rather, when we consider the possibilities of how a nineteenth century ought to end, but ends only in material defeat. This survival shows that the home is the fittest thing, indeed; yet it is nearer its danger point to-day than ever it was, and it is because of its "belated industries" and narrow, or whimsical, or fashionable or poverty-stricken, uneducated keepers, while in the meantime the saloon is getting in its best work.

Why do we not rise as women of the nineteenth century and, not abdicate the throne of home, but enlarge its borders, organize its labor, and entertain and invent and amuse, not with foolish imitations of life, but with abundant life, simply, not extravagantly, with brains and learning and truth and love, not with "fads" and pure nonsense? Honest American men cannot turn into French dandies, and pose and flurry around mere nothings, but they are ever ready to entertain and to be really entertained. Even among the poor it is because the dumb, driven wife is ignorant, and the daughters mere struggling bits of finery, or have to go out and "make a living," that "he" goes off hungry for a bit of life, leaving the wife at home also hungry for the same thing.

Are there not a few hints in the following incidents from real life as I found them? (greatly in contrast from those mentioned in the beginning of the study).

Once a large, front room, something like a parlor, opened cordially to every one who sought to enter. Only friends and acquaintances really sought entrance. A sideboard was full of "free lunch" (hospitality), while opposite, on sale, was the poison, alcoholic drinks. There were easy chairs, sociable round tables and cheerful screens here and there, adding coziness (in the poorest saloons I always found suggestions of sociability, comfort and rest). The woman who kept this saloon, or salon, kept also her cooking and her baby's crib, and carried on general housekeeping quietly in the next rooms, the front room really being but her parlor, her reception room, a homelike saloon. Here she chatted with neighbors and kept happy and gave happiness.

Another woman I knew, with one of the brightest boys and kindest of husbands (who carried on a little other business), kept her salon going in front most cheerfully. I once found her ironing in the rear room—the side entrance (meaning not the awful mischief here it does in most places), admitting me to her home, cozy and warm and neat. Best of all, it was a neighborly place and very respectable. She believed emphatically in respectability, and was respected as far as the article was understood in the neighborhood. Her son, fourteen years of age, told me he often kissed his mother on the lips and loved her a thousand times better than all the Armour Mission Sunday-schools in the world, because the teacher there taught against the saloon. She was a most cordial and attractive, motherly woman, and if she had been an educated and wise, rich woman, I wonder if she could not have helped to solve "the problem" by changing the saloon into a home, or the home into a saloon at least, by keeping open in more neighborly fashion than we yet know of her salon, instead of a saloon?

This is really what these women were doing and succeeded in doing as far as the happiness of their families was concerned, and also the happiness of friends and neighbors, and did not know it. All of this, I believe, in spite of the deadly liquor which was dispensed, and not because of it. It was friendliness and sociability they dispensed; it was a kind of open house they kept. Be it far from me to advocate promiscuousness in general, but all things depend upon the person. Women being freer to do and be seen, can do almost anything in these days if it is well done.

A gentleman being asked if he could endure the bloomer costume for women on the bicycle, replied, "It all depends upon how it is worn. I can endure anything with a good woman inside of it." It all depends upon the character, the person, and in all our doings of late years, can it not be possible to do something genuinely original and feminine by keeping better homes? The saloon, dreadful as it is, meets a felt want—that of sociability. The brothel makes the same diabolical bid, and the home alone must supply this home want, competing with other false attractions, becoming more and more, and not less, of a salon, a resort, a cordial board, for great and small, rich and poor.

The social settlements, by their simple scheme of neighborliness, are doing more to hurt the saloon than all the talk and writing, necessary as it all is, because they are "given to hospitality." They have been described as similar to the old hospitals where travelers passing through the Alpine wildernesses were entertained; our ordinary city selfishness being the wilderness, while scattered here and there are these warm and rich hospitable settlements open to needy hearts. Friendly visiting also is the newest and best suggestion of real life of late, but best of all is home if it can only understand itself.

Nothing is so needed in wealthy neighborhoods as real social settlements. The club houses make an attempt, but are soon rarefied into form without substance, and the masculine and feminine element separated. No! home, old fashioned, newest fashioned home is what holds things together. Society must degenerate without the social force of home life. This is the cell, the unit of civilization containing the whole scale of human harmony, from the masculine bass note to the feminine soprano, with all the baby voices included. No saloon can produce any such harmony nor any such discord within itself as can the home.

The saloon is "an hireling" and an imitator, producing only the false friendships, false foods and amusements, and must go down before the truth, the true social force. But it behooves this force to be awake to its enemies and not be trifling in its mighty business. Unskilled servants, inartistic grounds and surroundings too often allow flats and boardinghouses to supplant home-life. Still there is a quality that can survive even these things if it is but aware of itself. Let there but be more of it so that it will spill out into neighborliness.

A Thrilling Letter From Japan.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Our hearts are aflame just now with indignation over the recent revelations concerning the state of things in some classes of society in the Far East. If Mrs. Charlton Edholm would come to Japan, she could write a second volume of "The Traffic in Girls," more thrilling, even, than the first.

I have told you about the Rescue Home work which was begun here four years ago; now I want to make social conditions clearer if I can, so you may see the stone wall of difficulties which confront us. You know that in this country when a girl is redeemed, it is by the payment of a certain sum of money—which amount varies in different cases—to the institution which she leaves. In the first place, her father sells her to the brothel-keeper in order to get money to pay a debt,—and this debt is sometimes the paltry sum of $2.50! When she enters her new home (?) she has no suitable clothing, of course, so fifty or a hundred dollars' worth of beautiful silks are purchased for her, with the understanding that she is to return the money, in easy payments, as she earns it.

The girls with virtuous hearts, and we believe there are many such living lives of shame in Japan, look forward to the time when they shall have paid their father's debts, and their own, to their new master also, but the latter has planned more cruelly than they dreamed. He has no idea of allowing any one of his victims to escape so long as the shadow of her girlish winsomeness remains. Months before the old account is settled new clothing is required, and somebody's once merry baby girls find themselves as truly slaves as though they wore the chains. When the truth of the situation dawns upon them, different persons are affected differently. Some intense natures, losing hope, throw themselves with complete abandon into the life. Others, more conscientious perhaps, become despondent, droop, and almost die. Of this last-named class the keepers are always glad to get rid, so occasionally word reaches the W. C. T. U. that at a certain place a girl may be secured by the payment of so many dollars, which sum is tantamount to her indebtedness for handsome clothes. This is the way, then, that we get hold of the girls whom we shelter, teach some useful employment, and try to lead to Christ. No one who has gone out of the Rescue Home has ever yet disappointed us by going back to her old life. We have been greatly encouraged, and have been planning to add a new building with the money promised by Mr. Crittenton, and open up the work in a larger way.

But now comes the sad part of my story: Recently a young woman whom the committee had bought—how dreadful it seems to use that word in connection with a human soul—in one of the interior towns, was brought to Tokyo to be put into our Home. Imagine our feelings when we found that with the money we had paid for the girl, this demon—I dare not disgrace my brothers by calling him man—had bought five little girls to be trained for this black life! Our utter helplessness almost crazed us. No sleep came to me that night. In agony of soul I pleaded with our Father to send again the "Comforter." We could do no more. But new hope came with the morning. I knew that our work had not been in vain, and that our God had let this startling knowledge come to us, perhaps, to test our faith, and to better prepare us for the battle that was on. He is more mighty than all the hosts of darkness, and He is on our side. "I will early destroy all the wicked of the land."

The "social evil" is licensed in Japan and confined to certain limits, one whole district of the city generally being given up to it. Not long ago I visited the Yoshiwara, as such places are called, in Tokyo. Twenty-seven hundred girls were imprisoned there, three hundred of them in the hospital! Not one looked as though she had reached mature womanhood, and few of all the hundreds were there from choice! I trust that the impression which this picture leaves, may make the heart of the reader throb in quicker and in tenderer tune.

Nor have I yet told you all. A devoted missionary gentleman who is deeply interested in the purity movement, said in his pulpit not long since, and has given me the privilege of using it in this letter, that in a certain city little girls of seven and eight years of age are immolated by sporting men for the sake of the health of fine breeds of dogs! Incredible! you will cry. But the gentleman whom I quote is not a man given to making extravagant statements, is not a sensationalist, but a man who would be the very last to say such things unless he knew whereof he spoke. I would not fail to say here, in justice to the Japanese, that these disreputable sporting men are foreigners.

With all license in this land, men soon show of what material they are made. Truly, "the half has never yet been told" of the diabolism of men in some of the far eastern ports. My earnest prayer is that this message may send every father of girls to his knees; that he may stay there and cry out until all Christian parents hear, and not only hear, but enter the fight and declare that, with God's help, these things shall no longer be. "Do you hear the children weeping, oh, my brothers?" Oh, for the time when fathers shall stretch out their hands as quickly to save their neighbor's girl as they would to save their own!

You want to know what we shall do next? Our present plan (and we are asking our Father to put it into some of your hearts to help us) is to "sow the country knee deep with literature" on the terrible sin of selling girls. Wise Japanese leaders are preparing burning words. Who will help us to send them out to every pastor, to every home in Japan?

There is another side, thank God, to the picture which I have been holding up to your view. The news that Japan had won the World's banner at Toronto has intensified the interest of all. The temperance workers of this country have certainly never been so active as at the present time. Only two weeks of the new year have passed yet we have had four meetings of national character—meetings of four different organizations—besides many local conferences in the interests of union. In addition to this, the native W. C. T. U. observed the week of prayer each day from eleven to twelve, and at the union prayer service where missionaries worship, the meeting took the form of a temperance revival on the third day. "What hath God wrought?" Though I know my message is already too long, I cannot forbear telling you one or two more encouraging things. Personal letters were sent to native pastors asking them to observe the fourth Sunday in November as temperance day, and many enthusiastic replies, reporting meetings, have come from all parts of the Empire. Nearly three hundred women attended the annual meeting of the Tokyo city union, December 5. Last year a mere handful were present. The W. C. T. U. missionary ladies at their second convention, November 23, broadened their policy by adopting seven more of our departments, and by deciding to publish a plan of work, which is now about ready to go out. The society sustains a great loss this year in the return to America of our leader, Miss M. A. Spencer, who is universally admired and trusted. Miss Denton succeeds her as president, which is fitting, and the work will go forward still.

And now may I add a personal word? I fear I can not longer answer all of the hundreds of precious letters that come to me, and which rejoice my heart so much, but will not the friends continue to write just the same? Remember the address, 22 Nakano-cho, Ichigoya, Tokyo.

I trust that the new year brought many blessings, and that you all had "a fresh glimpse of the love that gave our Lord."

Yours for helpless girlhood,
CLARA PARRISH.

The Mills Hotel and Its Object.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—I have received so many letters of inquiry from old prohibition and W. C. T. U. friends relative to the Mills Hotels, of which I have the honor to be the manager, that I reproduce for your readers an address I delivered before the Church Temperance Society annual meeting at the Astoria-Waldorf Hotel, New York city, January 11, Bishop Potter presiding:

"Properly speaking, the Mills Hotel has but one object, and that is to be the best hotel in the world, a place where respectable men of small means can secure 'all the comforts of home,' barring such as are inseparable from the presence of mother and wife and child, for a small price. This seems simple enough, but I have been somewhat bewildered by suggestions as to what is implied by 'all the comforts of home.' One western evangelist spoke with enthusiasm of the sight that must be presented when our guests were gathered for family prayers morning and evening in our spacious sitting-rooms. One of our guests announced that he had never stopped at a hotel charging less than a dollar a day until the opening of the Mills Hotel, and intimated that he expected special privileges and courtesies that the average guest had no right to expect. He seemed much surprised when informed that the hotel was built not for him, but for men who could not afford to pay one dollar a day for hotel accommodations, and that each guest would be treated alike. Another suggestion has been that a pawnshop and employment bureau might be combined with the hotel with advantage to those for whom it was built.

"All of these are more or less wide of the mark, but it is not an unreasonable assumption that a place seeking to provide all the comforts of home would naturally be a counteraction to the saloon, which in effect destroys 'all the comforts of home.' The Mills Hotel is a counteraction to the saloon in several ways.

"First, How. 1. By restrictions in the lease. Before the hotel opened Mr. D. O. Mills, its beneficent founder, stipulated that no liquors should be sold in any of the stores in the block, and in spite of numerous offers of twice and three times the rental asked for stores, this restriction has been rigidly enforced, and there is at least one city block in the crowded resident districts south of Washington Square in which there is no saloon. Here is a very practical and effective prohibition against which even my belligerent friend, Secretary Robert Graham, will not care to tilt a lance.

"2. No liquor is sold in the restaurant. In the hotel restaurant there is a large public patronage, including very many people of foreign parentage, and we have never furnished a drop of intoxicating liquors since the hotel opened. I consider it a striking example of the common sense of the average man that no patron of the restaurant has even asked for intoxicants to be served with his meals. It is regarded as the reasonable and proper thing that the Mills Hotel shall be conducted on absolutely temperance principles.

"3. No intoxicants in the hotel. From the first notice has been served upon our guests that bottles are to be broken whenever and wherever they are found. We have had occasion to smash a few flasks, and there has never been a murmur of protest upon the part of the owner. Here again common sense asserts itself, and it is regarded as the proper thing.

"4. No intoxicated persons are allowed in the hotel. Since the hotel management is not responsible in any way either by the rental of liquor stores on the premises or by the sale of intoxicants in the restaurant or hotel, for making men drunk, we can with perfect consistency bar out such as are made drunk outside, and we do so with absolute impartiality. No man is exempt from this rule, whether he has paid for his room for one night or for a month. We refuse to furnish rooms to any man who is drunk, and if one who has already purchased his room presents himself at the hotel in an intoxicated condition, he is quietly stopped at the entrance, conducted to the registry office where any money he may have paid is refunded to him, and is courteously but firmly ejected from the hotel. No feature of our policy has been more highly commended by our guests than this, and I am very glad to be able to say that the hotel receives the hearty support of its guests in the enforcement of this law.

"5. Turning from the negative to the positive counteraction to the saloon, the Mills Hotel furnishes all the attractions of the saloon minus intoxicating liquors. We have warm, well-lighted sitting-rooms, a library well selected and well patronized, games, such as chess, checkers, dominoes, etc., which are used by, I am told, expert players, fine baths which show unprecedented statistics in the way of bathers, the first week in January an average of 370 daily bathers out of a population of about 1,560; good nutritious food carefully selected, well cooked and neatly served at low prices; beds that are an invitation to cleanliness and decency; and all of these without being hedged in and hampered by vexatious rules, regulations and restrictions. In short, the Mills Hotel is Liberty Hall to self-respecting, gentlemenly men.

"Second, RESULTS. Fifteen hundred and sixty men every night is the roster of our guests. George Francis Train, who is one of the number, says they are 'the most respectable men in New York city, since every man has paid his bill.' I think I may fairly claim for them that they are as law-abiding and orderly a class of people as could be found anywhere in the world. Fifteen hundred and sixty men represent the population of a good sized town. There has not been a single fight since the hotel opened, not even a quarrel or loud disputation that it was necessary for us to quiet. There has been a most gentlemanly response to every suggestion looking to the courtesies of social life, and hearty coöperation in every effort to promote order, cleanliness and comfort.

"Who are these men? They are students to whom each month of economy means additional study and better preparation for life work; clerks, salesmen, newspaper reporters, musicians and writers with small incomes; elderly unemployed men, and others who have sought vainly for weeks and months for employment. Some transients who visit the city either on business or in search of employment, and who have little money to spend for hotel accommodations. All these are saved from the cold hall bedroom with no sitting-rooms, or from the rapid descent from moderate-priced hotels to the low, cheap lodging house and dossing ken. The miseries of such places flog men into the warmth, light and devilish allurements of the saloon. The Mills Hotel beats the devil at his own game.

"Finally, if it can be proven that the largest hotel in the world (for such the Mills Hotel is in the number of its guests) can be run at a profit without a bar, and that a restaurant catering to a large, foreign-born patronage can be a success without beer, the Mills Hotel will be the forerunner of many temperance hotels and restaurants in this and other cities of the United States, and will be a most fit monument to the sagacious philanthropy of its founder, Mr. D. O. Mills."

QUESTION.—What is the Chautauqua salute and how and when should we use it?

ANSWER.—The Chautauqua salute, as its name implies, originated at the great summer assembly, Chautauqua, N. Y. An eloquent lecture had been delivered by a man who was totally deaf and who could not, therefore, be encouraged by the usual method of applause. At its close Dr., now Bishop Vincent, arose and asked the audience to show their appreciation by waving their pocket handkerchiefs. The idea "took" at once and has ever since been the favorite way of receiving noted guests at Chautauqua. It has been quite generally adopted by the W. C. T. U. and other societies for conventions I feel that the frequent, promiscuous use of the salute should be discouraged in our organizations. There is nothing more disheartening than to see a few women arise here and there, waving their handkerchiefs whenever any one is presented. Let it be understood that this salute is to be reserved for people of note and then, as at Chautauqua, let it be carefully announced at the time of introduction.

Q.—In how many and in what countries is the W. C. T. U. organized?

A.—In fifty-five: United States, Great Britain, New South Wales, Canada, Hawaiian Islands, New Zealand, Queenland, Victoria, South Australia, Tasmania, Bulgaria, Japan, China, Siam, Straits Settlements, Burma, India, Cape Colony, Madagascar, France, Denmark, Chile, Natal, Orange Free State, Sierra Leone, Korea, Bahamas, New Foundland, Egypt, Madeira Islands, Spain, Italy, Greece, South African Republic, Australasia, Argentina, Uruguay, Brazil, Norway, Jamaica, Western Australia, The Netherlands, Austria, Mexico, Finland, Germany, Iceland, Belgium, Ireland, Turkey, Panama, The Transvaal, Sweden, Syria and Armenia.

Q.—Can a union elect a young lady to the office of secretary who does not belong to the union and is not in attendance at the time of election; indeed, has never been in a meeting, but who sends in her name for membership after her election?

A.—Under ordinary circumstances I should judge this to be an extremely unwise mode of procedure. A secretary ought to be as well known and her ability should be as thoroughly tested as the president herself. At the same time I can imagine circumstances where such a thing might be done to the advantage of the work. If one who was well known as a local worker in another union should move into a town where the union was in need of a secretary it would be quite right under such circumstances to elect her.

Q.—Suppose a local union has no superintendent of Christian citizenship or legislation and petition, and in a meeting the corresponding secretary, not as corresponding secretary, but as a member, urges attention to the call for petitions for certain bills before Congress, is by the president requested to urge that the motion be carried and the petition signed by the four General Officers, and nothing said about who is to attend to the matter, and there being urgency for promptness, the president pushes the matter and sends the petitions, is she taking out of the corresponding secretary's hands the corresponding secretary's proper work? Is the report of this work to the county, district and state officers to be counted as corresponding secretary's work or as union work under the head of legislation and petition?

A.—The work of petition is not the special province of the corresponding secretary. The motion should have covered the point as to who should circulate and send the petition. Since it did not, it was certainly the duty of the president, as the highest executive officer, to attend to the matter. It would not have been out of place for the corresponding secretary to do so, as originator of the plan, and, if the motion to send the petition had been made by some one other than the corresponding secretary, it would have been courteous to add this clause: "And that the petition be circulated and forwarded by our corresponding secretary." Since it was not done, however, I can not see that the president has in any way exceeded her province. The work should be reported as having been done by the union under the department of legislation and petition.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

O Lord, I am oppressed; undertake for me. And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write. Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them.—Isa. 38:14; Rev. 14:13.

OUR glorious leader has gone! but in her upward flight she left a shining path of light behind her. On that sad night that her sweet spirit soared away from us, as I lay stunned from the awful blow that had turned the world into blackness of darkness, moaning in my agony, I exclaimed, "What shall we do without her?" A heavenly visitant—and I am sure it was Frances herself—came to my bedside and whispered, "Fear not, the work I did on earth is but a cipher in comparison with what I shall be able to do from heaven for you," and then it was given me to see a vision of her glory as she passed within the gates. Ever since, she seems nearer me, more regnant, even, than when on earth. I am doubly anxious now to see the work finished that was so near her heart and for which she was planning until the last conscious hour of her life, and I am sure the same desire possesses the heart of every woman in our ranks.

I have had letters of condolence from all parts of the country, and I take this opportunity to thank our dear white-ribboners for their tender sympathy in this dark hour when our beloved leader has fallen, she who at Buffalo stood so bravely at my side and championed the cause of the Temple, pledging to it life and fortune. Let us pick up her standard, "For God and Home and Humanity," close ranks, and with double quick step march forward, never ceasing our endeavor until we plant it on the highest pinnacle of the "House Beautiful," redeemed from debt and made a monument to the noblest, purest, sweetest woman that ever trod this round earth.

Another page of THE UNION SIGNAL contains a resolution passed by the Temple Trustees in regard to renaming the Temple, Willard Temple, as soon as they have secured entire ownership of the stock; $225,000 in cash over and above what has already been subscribed, it is expected, will put them in possession of the $600,000 worth of capital stock of the building. We have sent out to the unions 400,000 fifty-cent subscription cards and are about to send out 100,000 more. These cards have been sent to presidents of unions with the request that they distribute four to each member of the society. They in turn are asked to send out four cards to friends outside the union's ranks, and when they receive returns this money is to be sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple, Chicago.

White-ribboners can now put wings to their request by saying to their friends that the Temple is to be a memorial to Miss Willard. None, I am sure, will refuse the small amount asked. If all work faithfully there are enough cards out to redeem the entire capital stock of the building. Shall we not by the first of July not only have the Temple trust bonds redeemed, but the entire stock owned by us so that we can cut on the granite portals of the House Beautiful, Willard Temple? My sisters, this can easily be accomplished by a united effort. The Temple trustees call upon every state president and other state officials to encourage their women to push this work with all rapidity.

All orders for Temple Wheels, Temple bricks, mite-boxes, Baby Band lists and Temple programs should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two-cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel, mite-box or subscription card. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

The Rainy Birthday.

BY AURILLA FURBER.

IT'S going to rain and rain and rain.
God isn't one bit good.
When only once in the whole long year
My birthday comes, He surely could
Have had the sun shine on that day
If all the rest of the time were gray.

My dear, He has girls and girls and girls
And boys by the hundred score,
And grown folks—they have birthdays, too,
That makes how many, many more?
Would He be good to forget all these
His one little blue-eyed Bess to please?

If all the days of the year were bright,
There came no blessed rain,
You know the flowers and the trees would die
And the fields and fields of grass and grain
And beasts and people would perish too
If only sunny birthdays grew.

And what are you going to do to-day?
I'll tell you, little girl.
You'll smooth the wrinkles out of your face
And put your yellow hair in curl
And we'll have a home picnic, a laugh and a song,
And a house full of sunshine the gray day long.

A Sketch of Miss Willard's Life.

BY ETHEL MAY PATTEE.

(Aged 12 years.)

FRANCES ELIZABETH WILLARD was born in Churchville, near Rochester, N. Y., September 28, 1839. She was a delicate baby, who could not walk until she was two years old. When she was three years old the family moved to Ohio, where, before she was four, she was put on a chair to sing for the entertainment of guests. After living in Oberlin, O., for four years, the Willard family moved to Janesville, Wis. All they had was placed in three white covered wagons. They were three weeks on their journey, and Frances and her sister, the Mary of "Nineteen Beautiful Years," sat on a writing desk during the journey. They had to build a house after they reached Wisconsin. This home they called "Forest Home." They moved into the house before it had either windows or doors.

Here the little Frances lived from her seventh to her nineteenth year, a free, happy child of the country. Her brother Oliver had a freak of walking on stilts, when, behold! up went his two sisters on stilts as high as his, and came stalking after him. Oliver played marbles with the boys, and—out came the two girls. He played quoits with horseshoes; so did they. Frances was given to questioning everything. When she was told that the Bible was God's Word, she asked, "How do you know?" She was brought up with a strict regard for truth. She was taught to love books, not driven to housework, and encouraged to read and inquire. Her mother had the satisfaction of seeing her daughter a member of the Methodist church before she was twenty years of age.

It was a great trial to this young lady when her mother decided that her little daughter had grown too tall for short dresses and flowing hair. In her diary, written after she first wore her hair turned up, Miss Willard says: "My back hair is twisted up like a corkscrew. I wear eighteen hairpins. My head aches miserably. My feet are entangled in the skirt of my hateful new gown. I can never jump over a fence again as long as I live."

When she was seventeen years of age, she was sent to Milwaukee Female College, then graduated at Northwestern Female College, Evanston.

When twenty-one she went out to be a school-teacher. In 1868 she started on a two years' trip to Europe with Miss Kate Jackson, who defrayed all expenses. They traveled extensively visiting Great Britain, every country on the continent, Egypt and the Holy Land. On her return to America she became president of Evanston Female College, which position she held until she resigned in June, 1874.

Miss Willard became deeply interested in the Crusade women in Ohio and began to study the temperance question. Refusing an offer as principal in an elegant school for young ladies in New York city, and in opposition to many of her friends, Miss Willard accepted the presidency of a small temperance association in Chicago. This was the real beginning of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. There was no money in this work, and Miss Willard had her mother dependent upon her as well as her own expenses to meet. Wondering where the money was to come from one day, she opened her Bible and this passage met her eye: "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." With only this Bible promise to uphold her, she began her work as a temperance leader. In 1877 she was associated with Rev. Dwight Moody for a short time. During this year Miss Anna Gordon, of Boston, became her private secretary, and through the twenty-one years since, has been her most faithful friend. In 1881 and 1883, Miss Willard made a tour of the Southern states, pleading the cause of gospel temperance. In 1883 she founded the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union and served until her death as president. In 1885 the order of the White Cross was adopted by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and she became the leader of this movement.

During her life Miss Willard traveled about three hundred thousand miles, a greater part of which Miss Gordon accompanied her. Miss Willard died at the Empire Hotel, in New York city, February 17, 1898, surrounded by her faithful friends. She will be greatly missed all over the world.

Polly Putoff.

HER real name was Polly Putnam, but everybody called her Polly Putoff. Of course, you can guess how she came to have such a name. It was because she put off everything as long as she possibly could.

"Oh! you can depend on Polly for one thing," Uncle Will would say. "You can depend on her putting off everything, but that is all you can depend on." And, I am sorry to say, he spoke the truth.

"Polly, Polly," mother would say in despair, "how shall I ever break you of this dreadful habit?"

It was just three days to Polly's birthday, and she had been wondering very much what her mother and father intended to give her. She thought a music box would be the best thing, but she was almost afraid to hope for that. A man who went about selling them had brought some to the house, and Polly had gone wild with delight over their pretty musical tinkle.

"Polly," mother said that morning, "here is a letter that I want you to post before school."

"Yes, mother," answered Polly, putting the letter in her pocket.

As she reached the school-house she saw the girls playing, and she stopped "just a moment." Then the bell rang, so she could not post the letter then. She looked at the address. It was directed to a man in the next town. "Oh, it hasn't got very far to go. I will post it after school."

After school she forgot all about it.

"Did you post my letter, Polly?" asked mother when Polly was studying her lessons that evening.

Polly's face grew very red, and she put her hand in her pocket. "I will post it in the morning," she said, faintly.

"It is too late," answered mother. "The man to whom the letter is directed went away this evening, and I haven't got his address. It really only matters to yourself, for it was an order for a music-box for your birthday."

"O mother!" exclaimed Polly, "is it really too late?"

"I don't know where he is now," said mother. "If you had not put off posting the letter he would have received it before he started, and sent the music box. It is too late now."

Wasn't that a hard lesson? It cured Polly, though; and she has nearly lost her old name.

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—There have been many sorrowful days at Headquarters since we had our last chat in the Cozy Corner! The news of Miss Willard's death came like a sharp blow to the whole country, but especially so to us who had parted from her so short a time before. A great many little letters have come to me expressing sympathy, for the children loved her, even as she loved them. I know that your hearts will go out to our dear Anna Gordon who has been so much to the L. T. L. She has lost her dearest friend as well as her Chieftain, and we can best show our sympathy for her by rallying to the work and enlisting all the children in the cause to which Miss Willard gave her life.

Our Cozy Corner grows and grows, but there is always room for more, and there are no special conditions attached to membership. I cannot print all the little letters, but I enjoy reading each one, and have a loving thought for the boy or girl who wrote it. The enigmas are all carefully filed away and will be given publication in turn. Some of them are minus the answer, which should always be given, so the authors will please send them along.

Lovingly yours, AUNT MARY.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I like to read the Cozy Corner and find so many L. T. L's. My mamma is leader of the L. T. L. here; we have about seventy-two members; they don't all come but I think they keep their pledge. Our Legion sent fifty cents to the Temple the other day. I have two brothers in school at the State University who wear the white pins. My papa wears one, too. I have four sisters, and we all belong to the L. T. L. except my grown sister, and she was raised up in it. Your little niece,

A Message from the General Officers.

THE following has been sent out to the National executive committee, and is now passed on to the entire organization:

DEAR SISTERS:—The rod of affliction has been laid heavily upon us as a society, and we cry out to God from sorely burdened hearts. While the blow has fallen upon the entire organization—and indeed upon the entire world—there is a sense in which your General Officers are stricken as are no others, because upon us has come the responsibility of taking up the work the tired hands of our leader have laid down, and the burden seems, at times, greater than we can bear. We turn, first of all, to God; then, under God to you for strength in this hour of trial. We know how true and loyal are your hearts, and how dear to you is the work to which you have laid your hand. We feel sure that you will not fail in this hour of extremity, but that you will each do all that is in your power to make it God's opportunity for our beloved work.

We pledge ourselves anew to God and to the white-ribbon, and pray that He may give us strength to prove faithful to our great trust. So far as Miss Willard's plans were known to us in any direction we shall use our utmost endeavor to carry them forward. We are under no "new administration." Frances Willard was, at Buffalo, elected our National President for the ensuing year, and we feel that, although unseen, she is still the vital, inspiring force which beckons us forward to heights of victory.

Dear sisters, there is but one medium through which we may show our love and loyalty to our departed president, and our sorrow that she has gone from us. No marble mausoleum could be a fitting tribute to her greatness. No house made with hands could shadow forth her worth. Only in deeds can we prove our sorrow, our love and our loyalty to the principles for which her great life stood. When sobriety and purity shall become the rule, and not the exception, of the individual life; when justice and righteousness shall be enthroned in our nation's laws; when each shall esteem others better than himself and find his highest weal in his brother's welfare; hen children shall be born into the world of a true heredity and surrounded from birth by a right environment; when it shall be made easy for all men to do right and difficult for any to do wrong—then, and not till then, will Frances Willard's true memorial be built.

The day seems far distant now, but, sisters, it is for the inbringing of that day that we stand. It is nothing less than all this to which we have pledged ourselves, heart and hand. Now, as never before, are we called to prove whether our devotion has been to a principle or to an individual. If we faint and grow discouraged, then have we been unworthy our leader and unworthy our high callgin. What nobler memorial could we rear than to come up to the next Convention with a doubled membership and with redoubled activity along all our lines of department work. Shall we not pledge ourselves to a supreme effort to bring this about? She would have wished it. Can you not hear her say what she so often said, "Let every one get one new member?" It seems such an easy thing. Shall we not try? And will not you, as state presidents, urge your loyal constituency not to be content with endeavoring each to secure one, but let us each try for those who may possibly fail.

Your attention has already been called to the observance of March 20 as Memorial Day, and you will, doubtless, pass the word along to your local unions. It ought to be a day of wonderful uplift, and refreshing to our work. It ought to mean new consecration, new zeal, new members. It has been suggested that the collections taken on that day should be for Miss Willard's Temple Fund, and the money sent to Miss Cornelia M. Dow, Portland, Me. You will, of course, use your own judgment in the matter, but it would give us great pleasure if it should seem to you wise to comply with the suggestion.

A call for a special day of prayer appears in another column. We hope you will not fail to observe the day in all your local unions. We must look to God in this hour, but we must also look to each other. This is the time in which we may "share our mutual woes, our mutual burdens bear." Now, if ever, must we prove ourselves worthy descendants of our Crusade mothers, and > "Give to the winds our fears,

> Hope and be undismayed."

"God is not dead, nor does He sleep," and that God, who, with a worm can thrash a mountain, can still use our beloved W. C. T. U. for His honor and glory.

It is a significant fact that the General Officers took for their motto in their first meeting after the Buffalo Convention, "Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust and not be afraid." We are sorely tempted at times to yield to fears, but our faith claims strength to "trust and not be afraid." Will you not help us to cast our burden of fear and of responsibility upon the Lord? And shall we not together claim that those our great leader shall slay by her death may be more than those she slew by her life?

In confident trust in that white-ribbon tie which never yet has failed,

Yours in loving loyalty,

LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS,
KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

"Hoodoos."

MORE than unusual interest centers about battleships at present. The words lucky and unlucky serve as rallying cries for those who believe in "hoodoos," or who think it necessary to pander to the current superstitions of sailors. We are told that Mrs. Winslow, in deference to the wishes of her husband, Lieutenant Winslow, U. S. A., will break a bottle of wine across the bow of the Kearsage as it leaves the ways, and that Miss Bradley, daughter of Governor Bradley, Kentucky, is likely to be required to use champagne in christening the Kentucky, in spite of the frequent announcements that she will use spring water. Champagne is alleged to be necessary because of the fears entertained by naval officers and jack tars that a vessel christened with water will be a "hoodoo."

Edward T. Lincoln, late of the U. S. Navy and Past Captain of the Naval Veteran Association of Illinois, has kindly furnished us the official record of a number of United States steamships in the matter of christening.

The Constitution, "Old Ironsides," the pet ship of the navy in the 1812 war and thereafter, celebrated in song and story and known and loved by every schoolboy, was christened with water taken from a spring on Cops Hill, where the battle of Bunker Hill was fought, and a bottle of salt water, broken over her figurehead as she left the ways.

The United States ship Hartford, built in the Charlestown navy yard, and launched November 22, 1858, was christened by a fair sponsor who broke across its figurehead a bottle of Connecticut river water, and by another young lady who broke a bottle of Hartford spring water, and by the late Admiral Preble, then a lieutenant, who concluded the ceremony with a like quantity of ocean brine. No ship except the Constitution has had anything like the record of the Hartford. She left the Charlestown navy yard in 1859, consigned to the East India squadron, commanded by Commodore C. K. Stribling, and returned to the United States December 10, 1861. She was commissioned January 19, 1862, at Philadelphia, Pa., as the Flag ship of Commodore David Glascoe Farragut, of the west gulf squadron. She was in the battles, as is well known, below New Orleans, April 24, 1862, and in all of the engagements above New Orleans, and was hit over 240 times by shell from the Confederate works. She also did noble work at Galveston and Mobile Bays. It was to her mast that Admiral Farragut was lashed during most of the fight at Mobile bay that he might clearly observe and direct the movements of his fleet. She now lies at Mare Island navy yard, San Francisco, Cal., being put in first class order for future service. The Hartford has a record second to no vessel in the world as a lucky ship. She never had an accident, or any ill-luck, and every old sailor is proud of her, and gives unstinted praise for her services—and yet she was christened with nothing stronger than water.

In contrast with these two "water" ships, lucky, renowned in history, and well beloved, read the record of the following ill-starred "wine" ships. The President, a large gun exploded and killed several visitors, government officials, on the Potomac river. The Mississippi, lost on the river of the same name in the Civil War. The Huron, lost off Cape Hatteras, over one hundred lives lost. The Ornado, run into by an English vessel in Bombay harbor, over one hundred officers and men lost. The New Ironsides, destroyed by a torpedo in Charleston harbor, with large loss of life. The Tecumseh, lost in Mobile Bay, with every one on board. The Nipsic, the Vandalia and Trenton, all lost in a hurricane near the Samoan Islands, Pacific ocean. The Texas, ran aground, was sunk, had many mishaps, and is known as the hoodoo of the navy. The Maine, "the pride of the navy," blown up in the harbor of Havana, Cuba, and nearly three hundred men lost.

In the face of these facts the tables are completely turned even on the low plain of popular superstition. Tell the truth and even the jolly tar will cry for water rather than wine. We hope that Miss Bradley will stand firm and decline to act as sponsor for the Kentucky if she is not allowed to use water

The christening of the Kentucky is to be on the twenty-fourth. THE UNION SIGNAL asks the believers in water to address a line at once to "The Builder of Battleship Kentucky, Newport News, Va.," asking him to allow Miss Bradley to use water.

Mrs. Hobart Passes Away.

ON Thursday morning, February 17, another of our oldest and most devoted W. C. T. U. workers went to her heavenly home. Mrs. Harriet A. Hobart, of Red Wing, Minn., was for many years state president of the W. C. T. U., resigning in 1894 on account of ill health; and at the time of her death was president emeritus. She did an immense amount of heroic pioneer work in Minnesota, and never lost her anxiety for the success of all that the organization represents. She was an educated woman of fine native ability, great courage and perseverance, and made for herself a warm place in the hearts of white-ribboners.

Although frail and suffering for several years past, she was confined to her bed but a single day. When Mrs. Scovell, state W. C. T. U. president, visited her the week before she died she said: "The end can not be far away." And so it proved. Her unusual intellectual powers remained unimpaired to the last. Her aged husband, Rev. Chauncey Hobart, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, is left to mourn her departure. All of the state officers, except Miss Palmer, attended her funeral at the First M. E. church at Red Wing, Saturday, February 19, and Mrs. Frances Neal, who organized the first union in the state, and Mrs. Scovell, state president, and a number of ministers, paid tributes to her memory. White-ribboners dropped a sprig of smilax tied with white ribbon in the casket as they passed by to take their places as a guard of honor. Resolutions by the state officers were read, appropriately recognizing her thirteen years given to the cause, and pledging themselves anew to her uncompromising attitude toward the liquor traffic.

Thus one by one they follow that way, and receive the plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." She was a power in the church as well as in the W. C. T. U., and her memory will abide among her own people and the National executive, of which she was a member until 1894.

A Call to Prayer.

THE importance of the following official leads us to give it place on the editorial pages:

Frances Willard, our beloved leader, is at home with God. While we rejoice at thought of her victory and crown of glory, the shadow of an inexpressible sorrow is upon our hearts. The great work from which her strong, true hand is taken must not suffer. Instinctively, we turn our tearful faces to heaven. Believing that all hearts will respond to the call for a day of prayer, and as superintendent of the evangelistic department, I summon our white-ribboners in all the local unions to set apart Friday, April 8, 1898, as a day of special prayer and consecration.

On this, Good Friday, which celebrates the supreme event of history, let us gather about the cross of the world's Redeemer in universal and united prayer for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, so sorely bereft, and in earnest consecration of ourselves to the work for which our leader gave her life, remembering that "the true cross of the Redeemer was the sin and sorrow of the world."

Liquor for Jurors.

THE jurors' bill for wine, cigars and billiards during the nine days' trial of Martin Thorn for murder was $1,811.25. A new trial was asked for on the ground that the jurors were incompetent from the effects of liquor. It may not be generally known that it is customary to serve such drinks with meals to jurymen who wish them. A few months ago white-ribbon women waited upon a Chicago judge upon this question. His reply was to the effect that men accustomed to their drams were rendered incompetent without them, and that it was a difficult matter to adjust. On the other hand, it is easy to see how men who love it would take advantage of the free drinks, and how one who takes it at all might hanker for it under the strain of a long and weighty case that taxed his nervous forces. Right here is a strong argument for prohibition. What man on trial for his life would be willing to have his interests jeopardized by a single juror broken up, unstrung, nervous, irritable, sick and incompetent for lack of a stimulant to which he has long been accustomed; or on the other hand, by even one man dulled, muddled, blunted or made fiery, rash or vindictive by a little more than usual, or something he is hardly accustomed to? It would be well for attorneys to reject all as jurors who ever touch intoxicating liquors, which means beer and wine as well as whisky. The people pay these enormous bills for guzzling juries to pervert justice all over the land, whether they know it or not, and thus unwittingly aid and abet the legal murders which twelve men sworn to impartiality cause to come to pass; and yet, there is not money enough to offer common necessities to poor people outside of the saloons. Shame on our boasted civilization which licenses drunkshops to make criminals and then pays a round sum for drunken jurors to try less fortunate criminals! While this awful waste continues there never will be money enough to give better environments to the poor unfortunates whose numbers are now so great as to awaken alarm in the breast of every thinking man and woman.

THE woman question is "moving on" in China. The papers chronicle what is believed to be the first public speech ever made by a Chinese woman of rank. The occasion was a banquet given a few weeks ago at Shanghai, by the wives of ten mandarins to the wives of the consuls and other prominent foreign ladies—fifty in all—and the object was the establishment of a school similar to that founded by the empress of Japan at Tokyo, for the education, in modern style, of the daughters of the nobility. When we remember that according to Chinese custom the wife of a Chinaman never appears when he entertains foreign guests (even when there are ladies in the party) and that it has been a flagrant breach of etiquette to allude to her, this innovation is all the more remarkable. It was brought about by three native young women, graduates of the University of Michigan, and the little speech voicing the desire of the hostess to enlist the coöperation of the foreign ladies in their project, was translated by one of these American-educated girls, and heartily applauded. After other speeches by Chinese ladies and their guests another meeting was arranged for at which practical steps will be taken toward securing a building and teachers for the proposed school.

MRS. M. E. DAMMARELL, 167 Western Ave., Chicago, is still strong in the faith that the plan of the West Side Chicago union will succeed, for securing a million pledges to "vote in 1900 for only such officers of state and nation as represent a party that will put into its platform a plank for the annihilation of the liquor traffic, and the repeal of all the license laws in the District of Columbia and in every state and territory of the nation." She reports Dr. Lorimer as promising to help in Boston, Bishop Turner among the colored people, Rev. M. C. Ward among the colleges, and Rev. C. F. Goode as giving his time to the work, and that bishops, professors and presidents of colleges have endorsed the effort. One union has secured over 600 pledges. It is claimed that there are 4,200,000 voters who will come in when the first million are pledged. After these are secured, it is proposed to hold a convention to arrange for further action. Requests for pledges should be accompanied by a stamp and addressed to Mrs. E. V. Wilson, 860 Warren Ave., Chicago, as should all contributions to the enterprise. She also reports Mr. Chapman, editor of the Ram's Horn, as saying that he will be responsible for 100,000 voters.

A WHITE-RIBBONER in one of our large towns writes: "I am amused often by explanations. I met one of our ex-mayors Christmas day on the street with a gallon jug in his hand, which I did not notice until he volunteered the information that it contained distilled water for his wife. I was passing a saloon one day from which a lawyer was just stepping out. I did not notice the place until he said apologetically, 'I did not buy any liquor there, I just went in to get a cigar,' which he held up in evidence. I was told of a resident of our town who said to a friend, 'When I was in Paris I never took a drink of liquor but I looked over my shoulder to see if Mrs. —— were looking at me.' I had never spoken to any of these concerning total abstinence." This testimony is a good commentary on what we stand for and represent, the core and center of what a white-ribboners' influence means.

Young Woman's Branch.

Official.

THE beautiful picture of Miss Willard in the Y Almanac should cause every one to desire a copy now more than ever. She is still the great inspiration of our work and our loyalty to her and the cause ought to enthuse us in the World's work which Miss Parrish is so faithfully endeavoring to carry on.

Besides those from which no returns have been received we still have on hand about two hundred almanacs.

The General Secretary's Letter.

DEAR YOUNG WOMEN:—I am sure that in the death of dear Miss Willard every member of every Y, active or honorary, mourns the loss of a personal friend.

Her life touched humanity along so many lines, her personality was so strong, her individuality so great, her womanliness so perfect, that no woman of the century has done more, or done so much, to mold the civilization of the day as she.

Our lives are largely molded by our ideals; Frances Willard's was an ideal character, and the young women of the nation, the Y's of America, mourn to-day their loved and honored President.

She was a leader of reformers. It is an easy matter for a general to move an army, for all are under military discipline. It is another matter to lead an army of reformers, for each is a woman of opinions and convictions; that is what has made her a reformer, and our Chieftain knew well how to guide and direct our great army. She has gone on before. I would that every Y might study her life and learn the secret of her greatness and devotion to the temperance cause, and may there come to the young womanhood of the nation that same "divine touch" that called her to such great service for humanity. Loyalty to her memory demands increased loyalty and devotion to the temperance cause.

Let us strive for more effective service, and to gain more members and workers. If every active and honorary member gains one new member, who can estimate the good? For from the young men and women of to-day must come some of the workers of the future.

May God instill in the heart of every Y the lessons of the life of Frances Willard, and may her work go on, and on, and on, until victory crowns the cause. ELLA A. BOOLE,

Gen. Sec. Y Branch Nat. W. C. T. U.

Y's at Work.

NEW JERSEY.

THE ninth annual conference of the Y. W. C. T. U. of New Jersey was held in the North Baptist church, Jersey City, February 4 and 5. The consecration hour was an inspiration to the entire conference. The roll-call of unions was answered by brief reports of the condition of each one represented, growth and progress being the usual happy state. Sixteen unions were represented, with forty-one delegates. We had with us Mrs. Bourne, state president, and Mrs. Demarest, state corresponding secretary.

Mrs. Bourne spoke of the "Relationship existing between the W and the Y." Miss Kate Lunden then gave an address on "The Temperance Hospital and our Y bed." She spoke feelingly of the five weeks spent in the hospital as our guest, and made a most earnest plea for any assistance which the Y's could give towards the raising of five thousand dollars by the first of May to pay off old debts and interest on new lots. Miss Maud Miller, state superintendent of physical education, read a paper, after which she gave an exercise along her line of work. "Sparks from two great fires," was a sprightly report from our delegate to the National and World's Conventions, Mrs. Kate Raphael, the state Y secretary. The afternoon session closed with a Bible reading by Mrs. Ella Boole, National Y secretary, on the "Pearl," from Matt. 13:45, 46.

At the evening session welcomes were given by Miss Randall, Jersey City Y; Mr. Clapp for the North Baptist church, also by representatives of the Epworth League, Christian Endeavor and Baptist Young People's Union. Miss Woodhull, of Roseville, heartily responded. The closing address of the evening was made by Mrs. Ella Boole, on "Great battlefields."

Saturday morning session was opened with devotional exercises, led by Miss Maud Cox, of Bridgeton. Mrs. V. Cox, National superintendent of Sabbath observance, spoke on, "All the world awheel and no time for rest." Mrs. Cox recommended the use of the wheel on the Sabbath when used for the glory of God. A very bright paper, on "How to make a Y meeting interesting," was read by Miss Carrie Young, of Morristown, also one on "Finance," by Miss Hope Clark, of Camden.

The following resolutions were presented and unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, Our organization is pledged to do all in its power to elevate humanity, and believing in a God who says that if we ask great things with faith, that great blessings will be given us, be it

Resolved, That in view of the disclosure of the sale of liquor to students in sixty-six saloons, within two blocks of Yale campus, we, the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Jersey, representing seven hundred and fifty-nine members, in conference assembled, will do all in our power to influence our brothers and the young men of our acquaintance who are contemplating a college course to select some other institution where they may be surrounded by a more healthy moral atmosphere and will be subjected to fewer temptations.

Resolved, That we demand an equal standard of purity for men and women, a "white life for two," training our young people to this idea.

Resolved, That we urge upon the Sunday-schools and the Young People's Societies, the need of definite temperance work.

Resolved, That we heartily approve the "anti-cigaret bill," which is now before Congress, and that we do especially hope that the law will be enforced with regard to the selling of cigarets to minors.

Resolved, That as Mrs. Frances J. Barnes has been called from us to a larger work, we do by this means wish to show our appreciation of her untiring labors among us, and also that we will endeavor to help and sustain her successor, Mrs. Ella Boole, and will do what we can to lighten her burden here, in New Jersey.

Resolved, That we view with alarm the increasing desecration of the Sabbath, caused by the bicycle, and that we pledge ourselves never to use it for pleasure on the Lord's day.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

ABOUT the middle of January an earnest Y was organized at Ward Academy, Burnside, Charles Mix county, by Mrs. Luella A. Ramsey, state president. The president of the new Y is Miss Sarah Hughes, who is also preceptress of the school.

The Madison Y's are holding interesting meetings, and on the evening of Dec. 17, 1897, gave an anti-saloon oratorical contest, the proceeds from which were devoted largely to the Temperance Temple at Chicago and the state work of the Anti-Saloon League. This Y is given a column and a half of space in the local papers, which is filled with selected matter, considerable of which has been compiled from papers written by students in the State Normal and high school. These papers were written in answer to the following questions given them at request of the Y:

"Do you wish Madison to continue having saloons? If so, why? If you wish the town to get rid of them, why do you so wish?" One hundred and fourteen papers were returned, well written, with answers in full, all but three expressing strong anti-saloon sentiments.

Sioux Falls Y's are having interesting meetings with an average attendance of nearly fifty. This Y is doing special work along purity lines, having two inner circles, a White Cross for young men, and White Shield for young women, which meet alternately with the Y every two weeks. In this connection the following resolutions were unanimously passed at a regular meeting held January 1, 1898.

Believing that all works of art as well as literature placed before the people of a country, exert a great and important influence for good or evil in the lives and morals of its citizens, and

WHEREAS, Our attention has been called to a circular sent out by "The Dunckley Celery and Preserving Company, of Kalamazoo, Mich.," in which it makes use of the pictures of nude women, and also uses as a further advertisement of its business, a portfolio of such pictures; be it

Resolved, That we, an organization composed of fifty young people, do most earnestly and emphatically protest against the use of the human figure for any such purpose.

Resolved, Further, that a communication be sent such company requesting the discontinuance of such a means of advertising.

Resolved, Also, that we, collectively and individually, use all our influence and utmost efforts to induce our parents, friends and relatives not to purchase any of this company's goods until such method of advertising is permanently discontinued.

Petitions requesting Congress to enact laws relative to sale of intoxicating beverages in all government buildings; a Sunday rest law for District of Columbia, and a law to protect state anti-cigaret laws are also being circulated by this Y.

All of the Y's in the state are busily engaged in trying to raise their apportionment of the one hundred dollars pledged by them toward paying off the indebtedness on the Temple at Chicago, and are meeting with good success.

KARA G. SMART,

GEORGIA.

OUR organizations in the colleges here in Atlanta are wide-a-wake and accomplishing much in some lines of the temperance work. We are soon to hold our Y conference when we hope to elect a Y organizer who will stir up the work more generally.

We helped to send our state president to the Buffalo convention and have been amply repaid for it by the beautiful report she gave us on her return.

At this writing the Y's are preparing for a service to be held on Sunday in memory of our dear Miss Willard. May her mantle fall upon the young women all over the land and inspire them to carry the work forward in her name.

Plans for the Hospital Fund.

MY DEAR WHITE-RIBBON SISTERS:—That the Y's all over the land may rally to the aid of our National Temperance Hospital and assist in disseminating our principles concerning non-alcoholic medication, I would urge you to hold a public meeting, using selections from literature as suggested below.

I believe we can have interesting and instructive exercises, which will be educational and broadening in their effects. We Y's have been sadly indifferent to our duties and privileges, the treasurer's books showing but $21.50 paid since September 1. Think of it! when we have a beautiful Y room containing two single beds, the cost of endowing each being $350 annually. We have obligated ourselves to this, but have never cancelled it any one year during the twelve of the hospital's existence. We have thus compelled the board to make up the deficit, and so cramped them in their work for charity patients. This $350 endowment is, as you see, less than $1 a day, and, of course, less than it costs the board unless there are several endowed.

We can not be true workers if we are not faithful to our obligations, and I feel sure that each and every local union will wish to do all in its power to help. "Let us, then, be up and doing!" I feel that I do not appeal in vain, for sisters, it is so small a thing to do, and yet means so much to our cause. With very little preparation a delightful evening can be planned. It may be that some of us do not know as much about the hospital as we should; if so, by undertaking the meeting as recommended, we will become conversant with the efforts being put forth and aroused to the importance of work being done along these lines. You understand, the hospital is yet in its "hired" house on Diversey Ave., Chicago, but the board has purchased a fine building site on the West Side, among surrounding hospitals and medical colleges, where we hope soon to erect a suitable home for our own noble institution.

The value to our work of this object lesson is inestimable! but funds are needed, and I believe every Y girl's heart will throb and quicken at the thought of doing her small share in making our new hospital an established fact.

The first $700 of the moneys sent in will endow the two Y beds for this year, the remainder being applied on the building fund.

Send to the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago, for literature as follows: "Substitutes for Alcohol in Medicine;" "Safe Remedies," quoting a few for common ailments; Responsive Readings of December, 1897, using a portion; "Alcohol in Medicine: What physicians say;" "Alcohol in Medicine: Why it is not necessary;" "Alcohol in Medicine: Results."

You do not need all of these readings, but culling the best from them, preparing good music and plenty of it, will enable you to present to your townspeople an evening's entertainment, bright, pleasing and profitable. Urge upon them a generous collection, and kindly send directly to me by draft or postoffice money order. At close of meeting distribute non-alcoholic literature, and for this purpose "Safe Remedies" is especially recommended, as a copy should be in every home. Kindly report the success of your meeting either to your state superintendent of non-alcoholic medication or to National superintendent, Mrs. M. M. Allen, Newark, N. Y.

Larimore, S. D.

The above is a letter I have sent to every local Y union in the United States in as far as state secretaries have responded to my request for lists of unions with president. If those who have not will kindly do so at once, I shall be greatly obliged. Since the death of our beloved leader has saddened all our hearts, there comes the feeling that we must not fail her trust in us and her high hopes of our endeavor. We must not allow any line of our work to suffer through our indifference, so I add this, hoping each may be more resolved than ever to do her share. If for any reason you can not hold the meeting as recommended, please help, no matter in how small a way, and send your mite, with a loving thought and prayer, and God only can tell how much good it may effect.

Miss Willard.

THE British Women's Temperance Association's National Executive meetings at Southport, closed on February 22. On the 23d a large number of the members of the executive left Southport by an early train for London, in response to the invitation of Lady Henry Somerset to meet her at our British Women's Temperance Association's headquarters.

She conducted a memorial service. We sang "Blest be the tie that binds;" then after such a prayer as I have rarely heard, which made "the veil between" seem very thin, she spoke to us of the one we all know had been the greatest joy and light of her life; her face had a far-away, transfigured look, and the sadness of it all was beyond any power of description. She seemed to be talking with God. Her address was one strong, perfect prayer. All the time the tears were in her voice and in her eyes. Her last words were, "She was a saint." Then we sang "Rock of Ages." Never will any one of us forget that service. It was a consecration service in the fullest sense.

Afterward we went to St. John's church, Westminster, where Canon Wilberforce conducted a memorial service and spoke of our precious leader very beautifully, tears stealing down his cheeks most of the time. The church was crowded. My thoughts wandered off to Willard Hall, to the service at that hour being conducted there and I could only sit and weep the whole time, for though we know she is happy and with our Saviour, our loss is a living thing and I thought of dear Anna Gordon, of another who is my dearest friend—of you dear American women; and I knew this overwhelming sorrow must bring us all nearer to each other, must lead to greater effort on our part. Mrs. Pearsall Smith and Mrs. Poole were near me; Lady Henry sat alone on the front seat. An enormous holiness has come into her life. May we make her feel that white-ribboners all the world over are sympathizing with her, and this will be a vast comfort to her. I am hoping to have a number of copies printed of Miss Willard's address at Toronto. Every one of our women should possess a copy of that unequaled speech. Mrs. Nicholls, the president of the Australasian W. C. T. U. has cabled: "Australasia mourns." Letters of sympathy are pouring in.

In the sacred bonds of common sorrow, I am, dear sister comrades, affectionately and loyally yours,

AGNES E. SLACK,
Hon. Sec. World's W. C. T. U.

Western Australia.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have been appointed by the W. C. T. U. of Western Australia your correspondent in this colony. Our convention was held during the last week in September, commencing with an evangelistic service Sunday evening, the 28th. Mrs. Nicholls, our Australasian president, was over from South Australia, and presided at most of the meetings during convention. This is the first time in which the public men of the colony have come forward and taken any interest in temperance work. Two ministers of the government, a judge and several members of parliament took part in our meetings. The drink bill of this colony is the highest on record in Australasia, and it is very uphill work to rouse public opinion against prevailing evils. "That it has been and always will be," is a fallacy generally advocated by people who should know better.

After convention Mrs. Nicholls visited the local unions throughout the colony, and was successful in opening a branch on the gold fields at Coolgardie. Gold attracts men here from all parts of the world, and women are in the minority; very much that is undesirable results from this state of things. An effort was made in some quarters to obtain the state control of immoral houses, but with the valuable aid of the press and the good will of the government we are thankful to say that this danger is laid, for the time being, at any rate. We are endeavoring to obtain the extension of the franchise for women, and hope to have it carried in parliament before the next elections, which will probably occur within the next four years. The liquor laws have been considerably amended this session, partly owing, no doubt, to the representations of our union. Stringent clauses against the adulteration of liquor were introduced. The period was raised from three months in the following clause: "If the licensing magistrates shall at any quarterly meeting, have refused any application for a publican's general license, or for a provisional certificate, such application shall not be renewed in respect of the same premises, or any part thereof, until six months after such refusal, and if the licensing magistrates so order at the time of such refusal, until twelve months thereafter." Other important amendments were also carried.

Our Sailors' Rest department is a very active branch of work. Weekly concerts and gospel meetings are held, and the sailors have a true friend in Mrs. Captain Smith, our superintendent. Flower missions are carried on by several local unions. During November we had a visit from Mrs. Barney, the World's superintendent of prison work. She held missions in Perth and Fremantle, and had meetings in some of the suburbs. We appreciated her very much. The Lord is so manifestly with her in her loving ways that her very presence does good to those with whom she comes in contact.

Tennessee.

FOR the first time since I have been your state reporter, I failed to get a letter in on time. Owing to illness and other uncontrollable circumstances, my December letter to THE UNION SIGNAL was not written. I hope such a thing may not again occur.

As state corresponding secretary, I have been in close correspondence with the unions since October, and I am rejoiced to find that there is a good degree of activity in the unions all over the state. Our number is not great at best, but some of our unions are doing magnificent work, and most of them doing something to further the cause of God and home and humanity.

One of the best unions in the state is the Mary T. Lathrap union at Knoxville, which is doing good work along many lines, though their special work is the sustaining and looking after the Home for the Friendless. This home was established in March, 1894, and in less than four years cared for 528 people. During the past year it had 154 inmates. These were homeless women, children, babies, sick people, aged women, Man's Inhumanity.

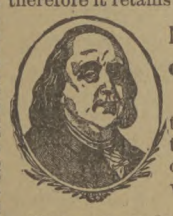
It is unfortunate for mankind that there are men who, for the gain of money, will adulterate food intended for the human stomach. Savage blows are given to the health by harmful articles placed in food to cheapen, or add taste or color.

It is enough to rouse one's ire to think that we are made to suffer temporary illness, and perhaps permanent disease brought about by adulterations in food that was purchased for pure. All "grain," "wheat" or "cereal coffees" thus far tested, that have a distinct coffee taste, are concoctions made up of part low grade coffee or coffee essence and sold to people for "pure cereal coffee."

The original Postum Cereal Food Coffee is believed to be the only pure article of the kind that is palatable. The pleasant flavor of the milder grades of Java is obtained by the process of manufacture discovered by its inventor after many months of experiment.



Counterfeiters arose who found it impossible to produce a cereal coffee with the taste of Postum and therefore have universally resorted to a mixture of low grade coffee to produce it.

True, thousands of people put ½ to ⅔ Postum in their coffee when unwilling to part with the narcotic effect of coffee; (this we can not prevent) but they know what they are mixing, which is quite a different affair than to use a cereal coffee you expect to be pure, and find that the dishonest maker has put in a portion of the very article the user of cereal coffee seeks to avoid.

The great Physicians, Food Experts, Athletic Trainers, Lawyers, Editors and brain workers in general are in large numbers using Postum Cereal Food Coffee, for the benefit derived in nourishment and health. A ten days' trial will begin the work of renewal of health, and if properly prepared so that it comes to table black, rich and delicious, it will never be abandoned.

girls without hope and without God in the world until rescued and cared for by these godly women. All the members of the board of directors are members of the Mary T. Lathrap W. C. T. U. Gospel services are held in this home every day by Rev. J. R. Lauritzen, and Miss Nannie McCormick has charge of the Sunday-school. They have now at this home a boy baby, two years old, entirely forsaken by his parents, whom they would like to have adopted by some good family.

Erin, through Miss Maggie Buque, reports good work done. Out of a membership of twenty-three, ten are good workers, a good proportion, as every one knows. They keep a weekly column in their county papers, have unfermented wine in their churches, hired a detective to ferret out some "blind tigers," distributed literature, paid their dues regularly, and did other good work, establishing the reputation of not being afraid of anything.

Tullahoma, through Miss M. L. Putman, sent in a good report too late for my last letter. They recorded two public lectures, some petitions to the legislature along the lines of W. C. T. U. work and other good work.

I hold in my hand a report of the intelligence department of the Chattanooga W. C. T. U. which tells of the work done by that union to help the working girls of that city to a comfortable home at reasonable rates. It recounts the great need of such a home, tells of working girls who could not possibly make money enough to provide themselves with a home, to say nothing of their clothing. During the past year more than a hundred calls were made to them for help, mostly from homeless orphan girls. They have done much good work, helping some to good situations, sent seven girls to the Ritten Industrial school at Athens, and did what they could in many ways, with small means to alleviate the distresses of homeless working girls. There stands in Chattanooga to-day a substantial foundation for a Working Girls' Home, begun by the W. C. T. U. women of that city. When the hard times closed in they were compelled to suspend work for a time for want of funds. Now they are trying to raise the funds to complete this home. The unions in the state are requested to contribute something towards its completion, and any good person, whether in the state or out of it, who desires to help the cause of "God and Home and Humanity," could not do better work than to contribute to this cause.

Winchester, through Mrs. Mattie Shook, reports good work done the past year. They held many mothers' meetings, did much charitable work, visited the jail, giving books and papers to the inmates, keep a wall pocket in the postoffice filled with papers, held an entertainment to raise funds for the Armenians, raising $28.48, sent $15 to the Temple Fund, are doing good work in several departments, have tried for the enforcement of the law requiring scientific temperance instruction in the public schools, and are working along such other lines as they are able and opportunity presents.

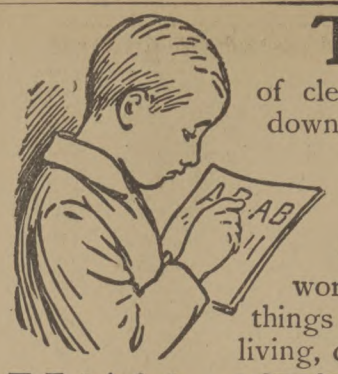
Cumberland Gap, through Mrs. H. F. Campbell, reports some good work along several lines. They spend much time and money prosecuting illegal liquor sellers, the nearness of their town to the state line making it a most difficult task. They have a flourishing L. T. L., under an efficient superintendent, which meets every Saturday. Dayton W. C. T. U., organized by Mrs. Gibson since the state convention, is doing good work, starting out with quite a number of departments.

Mrs. Gibson is now at work in East Tennessee, organizing, and trying to build up the work there. Mrs. Lee is also at work in her district organizing and strengthening the work.

Good reports of work done have also been sent me from the following unions, through their corresponding secretaries; Spring City, Maryville, Athens, Clarksville, Milan, McMinnville, Morristown, Jonesboro and Friendsville. I wish I had space for full reports that it might cheer the hearts of all, as it has cheered mine.

It is hoped that the state minutes will be out in a few days. All persons desiring a copy can have one by sending ten cents to Mrs. M. U. Burris, Chattanooga, Tenn. We have secured space in the Issue, published by Geo. W. Armistead, Nashville, Tenn., for W. C. T. U. communications. Every month official communications will appear in that paper from some of the state officers.

Quite recently our state has suffered a great loss in the death of Mrs. Mary McTeer, of Knoxville. She was our state superintendent of franchise, and no state department has ever had a more earnest, faithful, efficient superintendent than she. Every W. C. T. U. woman in the state, who remembers receiving so frequently her gentle, urgent reminders of their duties in her department, will breathe a sigh of regret for the loss of one so faithful.



Since writing the above, the telegraph has flashed over the world the terrible news of the death of our beloved Chieftain, Frances E. Willard. And all over our own and other lands hearts are bowed down with grief over the irreparable loss. No words can tell of her worth or what her loss will be to the world. There can be but one Frances Willard. May God help us to sustain the loss and carry on the work she had so near her heart, as she would approve could she be in the van as in days past and gone.

Announcement.

There has been such a call for a fine large picture of Miss Willard at a moderate price that the Temple trustees have contracted with a noted art firm of Chicago to get up a superb life size picture in life tints. It is now being painted by an eminent artist and will be a perfect reproduction of the painting. On account of the large number we expect to dispose of we are able to produce them at fifty cents. We want White Ribboners to act as agents in every union to sell them, for which we will pay a liberal per cent, either to the Union or to individuals. All who desire to act as agents apply at once to me at The Temple. All profits accruing will go to the Temple fund.

Peace and Arbitration.

Never before was the W. C. T. U. department of peace and arbitration in a more prosperous condition than at present, and it is well indeed that such is the case, for the mind of the public is now intent upon every question that bears upon this subject. The country is being agitated by "wars and rumors of wars," but we trust that our wise officials at the head of the government will be able to avert the calamity of war, and to bring about peaceable relations between our own and all other nations in the not distant future. If this much desired goal is reached it will be a great satisfaction to white ribbon women to know they have exerted an influence toward bringing this about.

The peace department is intent upon aggressive work, and is ever on the outlook for new openings. Its new literature, in the form of helpful leaflets, is still being sent forth in large quantities as "leaves for the healing of the nations." The Acorn, the paper for children which was founded nine years ago, has lately been enlarged, and will be more zealous than ever in interesting the young in the correct principles of peace. One of our earnest state superintendents has recently subscribed for one thousand copies for her state. Reports have not yet ceased coming in telling of the observance of Peace Sunday (the third Sabbath in December). The day was observed by many unions, churches, Sunday-schools and Young Men's Christian Associations in states where the department has been organized, and also in some localities in other states.

The World's and National department has recently sent out several circular letters giving suggestions for work for the coming year to state and National superintendents, and the present prospect is that much good will be accomplished for the cause during 1898. We hope those states that have not yet adopted this department will soon do so, and appoint a good, live, superintendent who is interested to push the work.

OUR ANNUAL BUDGET.

Dear Comrades:—We have just mailed to every local union in the country the best co-workers' budget we have ever sent out. If you have not received a copy, the fault must have been in the address as taken from your W. C. T. U. state minutes. Send to us and we will mail you a duplicate. It tells just how to secure a temperance education for every child in your public school. Now is the time to put its suggestions into operation.

A UNIQUE TEMPERANCE MEETING.

The success of the scientific temperance evening at the National W. C. T. U. Convention in Buffalo, led the unions everywhere to ask for a program, that they might arrange for such a meeting in their own cities or towns. That program is now ready. Send to us for it with five cents to pay the printer for striking off your copy. It is suitable for a Sabbath or any other evening. Any union can get it up, and it insures a large audience.

Our nation of to-morrow is in the public schools of to-day. Our beloved and lamented Miss Willard, greatly moved by the representation which this Buffalo program presented, in a closing address said: "This exhibit of what the children are now learning is a foregleam of the public opinion which is yet to banish alcoholic drinks and kindred narcotics from human habits and traffics."

Cor. Secy's Notes.

My earnest prayer, as expressed in this column when I last spoke to you from it has been answered. Our best beloved one is "out of danger" for ever. The answer did not come as I, in my fond ignorance, hoped, but God in His infinite wisdom has taken her where there shall be no more death, nor sorrow nor crying, where all tears shall be wiped away, all anxieties allayed, where there is work without weariness, rest and peace forevermore. When we think of her, how can we do other than rejoice; when we think of ourselves, we may well lift up our hearts in prayer and ask how we are to go forward without her; but we must not think of ourselves, we must look to God who gave her strength, for the strength He has promised to all those who seek it, and then look out upon the work that is now still more sacred since it has been baptized in her heart's blood. We at National Headquarters are taking up the burden, not in our own strength, but in the strength of the Lord. We know that the work must go forward, that God has not failed us, and our determination is to be more than ever faithful to this trust He has placed in our hands.

The one thing above all others that has brought encouragement to our hearts in these sad days has been the spirit breathed forth in the letters we are receiving at Headquarters. From state officers, National superintendents, organizers, evangelists, and local workers scattered all over the country comes the one keynote of renewed consecration to the work, and a stronger determination than ever to push it as she would have it pushed.

These paragraphs, gleaned from letters received, are typical of hundreds we are receiving: "I hear our women here saying, as everywhere, we must be more diligent, more zealous, more consecrated than ever before. It is the only way to show our love and loyalty to her who has laid down her life for the cause." "Our hearts are bowed down with grief at our Chieftain's going away, but through all the sadness there runs a strain of praise for her final great victory, and from every quarter is heard the determination to take up the temperance battle anew, and through greater consecration of humble efforts, to atone, as far as possible, for the loss the cause has sustained."

Mr. H. P. Van Liew, a brother helper, especially endorsed by Miss Willard, is offering to give to the National society one-tenth of all net receipts from his lectures to the local unions. We earnestly hope this offer may receive a large response from the unions, as it will not only help them in their work but help the National Union in its efforts for further organization.

Hereafter, the Honor Roll will appear either directly appended to my Corresponding Secretary's Notes or in close proximity to them. It has not been published for some time, because other matters have crowded it out, and we have been waiting for an accumulation of names. Hereafter, when one woman has secured a large number of members, instead of repeating her name, the number will be given after her name in parenthesis. We earnestly hope there may be renewed effort to increase this list. What could be a more fitting memorial to Frances Willard than to double our membership during the year of 1898?

We, the General Officers of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, desire to announce that it is our purpose to carry out the plan of our great leader, Frances E. Willard, with reference to the retirement of the Temple Trust Bonds. Miss Cornelia M. Dow, daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, of Portland, Me., who was appointed by our President as custodian of this fund, will continue to receive all money contributed to Miss Willard's Temple fund, and will place the same immediately upon interest, to be drawn out only upon order of the General Officers. There will be no expense whatever attending the care of this fund. As Miss Willard's sister officers we regard the speedy furtherance of her plan as our own sacred privilege.

The Temple trustees will proceed upon the line of action outlined by them in their resolutions recently adopted.

Resolution by the Temple Trustees.

In view of the life and labors of our beloved leader, Miss Frances E. C. T. U. the capital stock of the Temple, the name shall be changed from that of The Temple to that of Willard Temple.

Dorothy stood at her mother's knee one day, gently patting the bady's head. "Be careful, Dorothy," said the mother. "You know poor little brother is sick. He is cutting his teeth." Dorothy patted the bald head reflectively. "Mamma," she said, "is it going to make him sick when he cuts his hair?"

Why She Smiles Sweetly.

Sparkling eyes, quick beating heart, and the rosy blush of pleasure on the cheeks, makes the strong man happy when he meets his lady love. That's the kind of a man whose very touch thrills because it is full of energy, vigorous nerve power and vitality. Tobacco makes strong men impotent, weak and skinny. "PAPA," inquired the editor's only son, "what do you call your office?" "Well," was the reply, "the world calls our office the sanctum sanctorum." "Then I suppose," and the small boy was thoughtful for a moment, "that mamma's office is a spankum spankorum, isn't it?"

Important Announcement.

DEAR FRIENDS:—The many letters of inquiry which reach my desk compel me to explain fully to the white-ribboners who desire to become agents for the volume soon to be written by Anna Gordon that a large majority of the reliable subscription book houses in the United States and Canada will be the agents through which the only authentic book will reach a wide circulation.

The title, "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard" is not sufficient proof that it is the book authorized by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union and published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association unless it bears the stamp of the official publishing house of the W. C. T. U.

Please bear in mind also that publishers claiming to devote proceeds, or a percentage, to the Temple are unreliable, and not worthy of confidence, but are securing money under false pretenses.

In another column will be found an advertisement of a picture which is to be sold for the Temple, and it is hoped a large revenue may come from this source, but the impression which has gone forth that the Memorial volume is for the benefit of the Temple is erroneous, and friends to that enterprise hope funds will not be diverted from other channels with the false idea that they are donating to the Temple by purchasing this beautiful book. We can not too strongly urge you to remember that while the memorial volume, "The Beautiful Life of Miss Willard," will bear the imprint of the W. T. P. A. and the official stamp, it will be handled as a subscription book by nearly all the reputable Subscription Book Houses, and that you can protect the book and yourselves by examining carefully to see if it bears the official imprint.

Yours sincerely,
CAROLINE F. GROW.
Business Manager.

Official Picture of Miss Willard.

The National officers of the W. C. T. U. have arranged with a first-class engraver to produce a large etching of Miss Willard, which will be suitable for framing and will be the only official picture authorized by them. The W. T. P. A. will have it on sale within two months. Price $2.
